Again: I remark that heaven has vastly improved in knowledge. Give a man forty or fifty years to study one science, or all sciences, with all the advantages of laboratories and observatories and philosophic apparatus, he will be a marvel of information. Now, into what intelligence must heaven mount, angelhood and sainthood, not after studying for forty or fifty years, but for thousands of years—studying God and the soul and immortality and the universe! How the intelligence of that world must sweep on and on, with eyesight farther reaching than telescope, with power of calculation mightier than all human mathematics, with powers of analysis surpassing all chemical laboratory, with speed swifter than telegraphy! What must heaven learn, with all these advantages, in a month, in a year, in a century, in a millennium? The difference between the highest university on earth and the smallest class in a primary school cannot be a greater difference than heaven as it now is and heaven as it once was. Do you not suppose that when Doctor James Simpson went up from the hospitals of Edinburgh into heaven he knew more than ever the science of health; and that Joseph Henry, graduating from the Smithsonian Institution into heaven, awoke into higher realms of philosophy; and that Sir William Hamilton, lifted to loftier sphere, understood better the construction of the human intellect; and that John Milton took up higher poetry in the actual presence of things that on earth he had tried to describe? When the first saints entered heaven they must have studied only the A B C of the full literature of wisdom with which they are now acquainted.

Again: heaven is vastly improved in its society. During your memory how many exquisite spirits have gone into it! If you should try to make a list of all the genial, loving, gracious, blessed souls that you have known, it would be a very long list—souls that have gone into glory. Now, do you not suppose they have enriched the society? Have they not improved heaven? You tell of what heaven did for them. Have they done nothing for heaven? Take all the gracious souls that have gone out of your acquaintanceship, and add to them all the gracious and beautiful souls that for five hundred or a thousand years have gone out of all the cities and all the villages, and all the countries of this earth into glory, and how the society of heaven must have been improved! Suppose Paul, the apostle, were introduced into your social circle on earth; but heaven has added all the apostles. Suppose Hannah More and Charlotte Elizabeth were introduced into your social circle on earth; but heaven has added all the blessed and the gracious and the holy women of the past ages. Suppose that Robert M'Cheyne and John Summerfield should be added to your earthly circle; but heaven has gathered up all the faithful and earnest ministry of the past. There is not a town, or a city, or a village that has so improved in society in the last hundred years as heaven has improved.

But you say, "Hasn't heaven always been perfect?" Oh, yes! but not in the sense that it cannot be augmented. It has been rolling on in grandeur. Christ has been there, and he never changes.—the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; glorious then, and glorious now, and glorious forever. But I speak now of attractions outside of this, and I have to tell you that no place on earth has improved in society as heaven has within the last seventy years; for the most of you within forty years, within twenty years, within five years, within one year; in other words, by the accessions from your own household. If heaven were placed in groups,—an apostolic group, a patriarchal group, a prophetic group, group of martyrs, group of angels, and then a group of your own glorified kindred,—which group would you choose? You might look around and make comparison, but it would not take you long to choose. You would say "Give me back those whom I loved on earth; let me enter into their society,—my parents, my children, my brothers, my sisters. We lived together on earth, let us live together in heaven." Oh, is it not a blessed thought that heaven has been improved by its society,—this colonization from earth to heaven?

Again: I remark that heaven has greatly improved in the good-cheer of announced victories. Where heaven rejoiced over one soul, it now rejoices over a hundred or a thousand. In the olden times, when the events of human life were scattered over four or five centuries of longevity, and the world moved slowly, there were not so many stirring events to be reported in heaven; but now, I suppose, all the great events of earth are reported in heaven. If there is any truth plainly taught in this Bible it is that heaven is wrapped up in sympathy with human history, and we look at those inventions of the day,—at telegraphy, at swift communication by steam, at all these modern improvements which seem to give one almost omnipresence,—and we see only the secular relation; but spirits before the throne look out and see the vast and the eternal relation. While nations rise and fall, while the earth is shaking with revolution, do you not suppose there is arousing intelligence going up to the throne of God, and that the question is often asked before the throne. "What is the news from that world,—that world that rebelled, but is coming back to its allegiance?" If ministering spirits, according to the Bible, are sent forth to minister to those that shall be heirs of heaven, when they come down to us to bless us, do they not take the news back? Do the ships of light that come out of the celestial harbor into the earthly harbor, laden with cargoes of blessing, go back unfreighted? Ministering spirits not only, but our loved ones leaving us, take up the tidings. Suppose you were in a far city, and had been there a good while, and you heard that some one had arrived from your native place,—some one who had recently seen your family and friends,—you would rush up to that man, and you would ask all about the old folks at home. And do you not suppose when your child went up to God, your glorified kindred in heaven gathered around and asked about you, to ascertain as to whether you were getting along well in the struggle of life; to find out whether you were in any especial peril, that with swift and mighty wing they might come down to intercept your perils? Oh, yes! Heaven is a greater place for news than it used to be,—news sounded through the streets, news ringing from the towers, news heralded from the palace gate. Glad news! Victorious news!

But the vivacity and sprightliness of heaven will be beyond all conception when the final victories come in, when the church shall be triumphant everywhere. Oh, what a day in heaven it will be when the last throne of earthly oppression has fallen, when the last chain of serfdom is broken, when the last wound of earthly pain is healed, when the last sinner is pardoned, when the last nation is redeemed! What a time there will be in heaven! You and I will be in the procession; you and I will thrum a string in that great orchestra. That will be the greatest day in heaven since the day when the first block of jasper was put down for the foundation, and the first hinged ar swung. If there is a difference bet heaven now and heaven as it was the difference between heaven as it be and heaven as it is now! Not a dor stuck fast, but rolling on and on, and rolling up and rolling up, fo forever.

Now, I say these things abou changes in heaven, about the nev provements in heaven, for three reasons. First, because I find that of you are impatient to be gone. Yo tired of this world, and you want into that good land about which you been thinking, praying, and talkir many years. Now be patient. I see why you would want to go to gallery if some of the best pictures to be taken away this week or next but if some one tells you that the other beautiful pictures to come— Kensetts, Raphaels, and Rubens; masterpieces to be added to the gall you would say, "I can afford to The place is improving all the t Now, I want you to apply the same ciple in this matter of reaching h and leaving this world. Not one gl to be subtracted, but many glories a Not one angel will be gone, not one arch gone, not one of your glo friends gone. By the long prac the music will be better, the proce will be longer, the rainbow brighte coronation grander. Heaven, with nificent addenda! Why will you plain when you are only waitin something better?

Another reason why I speak in r to the changes in heaven, and the ne provements in heaven, is because I it will be a consolation to busy and prising good people. THE PEACE COMMISSION.

Differences of Opinion as to the Cuban Debt and the Fate of the Philippines.

CABLE despatches from Paris assert that the Joint Peace Commission is making slow progress. Differences of opinion, as between the Americans and Spaniards, have already developed, but nothing has occurred to mar the harmony or interfere seriously with the negotiations.

The first meeting of the Joint Commission was held in the Quai d' Orsay (Ministry of Foreign Affairs), but no work of any importance was done, because of the non-arrival of the chief secretary of the Spanish Commission. The next meeting was on Oct. 7. In the interval, the two bodies met separately, at their respective hotels, and discussed certain points which were almost certain to demand the fullest attention from the Joint Commission.

In the intervals of more important business, the American Commissioners drove in the Bois de Boulogne, went sight-seeing in the city, or passed a quiet day indoors with their families at their headquarters in the Hotel Continental, Rue de Rivoli. On Sunday nearly all the American members went to church. On another occasion they were entertained at dinner, at the Hotel Ritz, by Mr. D. O. Mills, the American millionaire.

SENOR GARNICA.

The Spanish Commissioners are stopping at a private house in the Rue Pierre Charron, near the Champs Elysees. Senor Montero Rios, the President of the Spanish body, is reputed to be very wealthy. He wears the insignia of the Order of the Golden Fleece. He has repeatedly declined to receive any salary for services when it was offered by the Spanish Government. Senors Abarzuza, Cerco, and Villarrutia, three of the Commissioners, speak English fluently. Senor Garnica does not, although being a distinguished authority on international law, he is one of the most important Spanish representatives.

One of the most gorgeous apartments at the Quai d'Orsay has been assigned to the use of the Joint Commission. It is a magnificent chamber, decorated in the gorgeous style of the Louis XIV. period, the Salle des Fetes and Gallerie Chambre being connected by large alcoves, draped with heavy red-silk portieres, the furniture also being upholstered in red and gold. A large table occupies the centre of the room, while a buffet with light refreshments stands on one side. From the deep windows one obtains a fine view of beautiful gardens, the walks bordered with fine statues.

Before settling down to the task of concluding a treaty of peace, the Commissioners of both countries were presented by their Ambassadors to the President of the French Republic. Senor Leon y Castillo performed this office for the representatives of Spain, and General Horace Porter, United States Minister in Paris, for the Americans. The occasion, though formal, was cordial. Whatever the issue of the negotiations, the citizens of the United States will always remember that the sister republic showed an evident desire to facilitate the speedy and satisfactory conclusion of the treaty of peace.

One version of the proceedings is that it has already been made clear during the negotiations that the United States recognizes no responsibility on its part to assume the Cuban debt. Furthermore, certain Paris newspapers assert that our Commissioners have refused to accept a concession of sovereignty, which, if accepted, would be held by Spain as involving responsibility for the debt. It is understood, the same Paris authority says, that our representatives have disclaimed any intention on the part of this government to exercise control over Cuba, except for pacification, with the ultimate view of Cuban self-government, as was originally proclaimed to the world in the resolution of intervention. In view of the American attitude, Spain's delegates asked for an extension of time, that the home government at Madrid might be consulted. There has been some likelihood of Spain urging that the main questions at issue, especially that affecting the Cuban debt, should be submitted to arbitration. This, however, is regarded as only a remote possibility. Spain probably wishes to arouse European sympathy on the ground that she is being crushed by our refusal to assume the Cuban debt. That debt is guaranteed by the customs revenues of the island, and Spain's contention is that the government which controls the customs should be responsible to the creditors. As that debt, or the greater part of it, was contracted on account of the war expenditures of the home government, it is not quite clear why it should not be borne by Spain. At the same time, it is not improbable that an agreement may be reached whereby the bonds issued by various Cuban municipalities for local improvements and similar purposes, may not be repudiated, such expenditures having been for the benefit of Cuba, and not for Spain. The Commissioners do not see fit to disclose to the public the actual proceedings, and make reports to their respective governments only. It is certain, however, that the American Commissioners have made no concessions, notwithstanding the eloquence of the Spanish representatives, and especially the powerful pleading of Senor Abarzuza. Verbal discussion, which the Spaniards seem to prefer, is avoided by the Americans, who conduct their side of the negotiations almost exclusively in writing, in order to escape verbal entanglements and misunderstanding. Regarding the Philippines, it is said that our Commissioners have a definite policy, which will be announced in due time, and as it does not contemplate the retention of the entire archipelago (according to the Paris journals), it may prove acceptable to Spain, and thus remove what was feared would be the most serious stumbling-block in the way of the Commission.

SENOR MONTERO RIOS.

THREE STEPS.

There are but three steps to heaven: out of self, into Christ, into glory.

OUT of myself, dear Lord.
Not for my joy to live;
Let me not seek my own,
But good to others give.
Out of self.

Into the blessed Christ,
O, let me gladly come.
To know, to serve him here,
With him on earth at home.
Into Christ.

Then, with the last of earth,
But one more step is given—
Into thy glory, Lord.
The place prepared in heaven.
Into glory.

The Stone Transformed.

A BLOCK of stone had a friend, called the chisel. The stone complained. "You use me very badly, my friend." "No," said the chisel, "I only do as I am bid." "Ah!" sighed the stone, "I do wish you would let me alone." The chisel began, by the aid of the hammer, to cut away at the stone, which again complained. "Why," said the chisel, "don't you know what's to become of you?" "I wish," said the stone, "I was like that beautiful statue over there in the corner: it is beautifully carved, and rests there quiet and peaceful, while I am being constantly ill-used." "True," said the chisel; but you should know that it has passed through the same process that you are now undergoing. You cannot be at rest like that statue until you are properly prepared; and the kindest thing I can do for you is to be unkind, and cut and carve you about as much as possible." When the chisel had done its work, and the block of stone had thus become transformed into a beautiful statue, it was very grateful to its friend, the chisel, for all it had done.

The Complaining Milestone.

Once upon a time, a coach, which very often passed a certain milestone, stopped and said, "Aren't you tired of standing there so long?" The milestone retorted, "Aren't you tired of running about so much?" "But," said the coach, "you see nothing of life, while I run about and see all that's going on." "Well," said the other, "you couldn't move unless you were drawn. All your movements are owing to a power stronger than your own. Besides, I have heard that coaches get robbed sometimes, or overturned. I am quite content to be a milestone, usefully employed in pointing out to travelers their whereabouts, and how far they are from their journey's end."

The Poor Stone-Breaker.

A minister once stopped by the roadside, where a man was breaking stones. "Ah, my friend," said the minister, "you get through your work more quickly than I do with mine; for, you must know, I'm in the same line of business that you are." The man looked up and said, "I see what you mean, sir. You are trying and trying to break stony hearts, and I am breaking these stones one after another. I think the reason you don't succeed is because you don't go to work as I do." "How's that?" asked the minister. "Why," said the man, "you see, sir, I go down on my knees to break these stones." Yes, the poor stone-breaker was right: the only way to break hard hearts is to go down on our knees, and intercede with God for them.

The Peace Cross.

The Peace Cross, on Mount St. Albans, overlooking Washington, was unveiled Oct. 24, in the presence of a large and distinguished company of clergymen, laymen, statesmen and business men, and a notable concourse of people. President McKinley giving the signal, at which the falling folds of the American flag revealed the stately monument of pure white marble. The Cross was raised by the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, to mark the foundation of the Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul, which will soon be erected on Mt. St. Albans, to commemorate the first general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church held in the National Capitol, and the great events of the historic year, 1898. The ceremonies were simple, but impressive. After the anthem by a choir of 150 trained voices, Bishop Dudley read a responsive Scripture lesson, the President joining in the responses; Rev. Dr. Dix, the second lesson; Bishop McLaren, the Apostle's Creed, Collects for the day, for peace, for the President, for the unity of God's people and for missions. Bishop Satterlee made a brief address of welcome, to which the President as briefly responded, raising his hand as he finished as a signal for the unveiling. Bishop Doane, delivered an address, and Bishop Whipple gave the closing prayer. A great educational institution is to be built in connection with the Cathedral.

THE ASSYRIAN INVASION.

S. S. Lesson for Nov. 13. II. Kings 19: 20-37. Golden Text, Psalms 46: 1.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

WE cannot systematize God's dealings with his children. While on the one hand all that is gold must be tried in the fire, and the trial of our faith is much more precious than of gold which perisheth (I. Peter 1: 7), yet on the other hand, there are elements on the part of God's children themselves which may necessitate the trial at a given time. Hezekiah must be tested, and the way in which the time of his testing is introduced reminds us of Job: "After these things (his great Passover), and this faithfulness, Sennacherib, King of Assyria, came and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities and thought to win them for himself" (II. Chron. 32: 1). Faithfulness is not a reason why we should not be tried, it is on the contrary the very reason why God does try us, that he may prove to angels and principalities and powers his manifold wisdom, and the power of his grace. Because of his faithfulness, Hezekiah was worthy to be tried. Had he been less faithful, he would not have served God's purpose, nor would he have been in a position to know his own failures and weaknesses as they came out through the testing, without the danger of coming into utter despair. The king had begun his reign by setting up a standard for his God, and with the utmost courage and devotion he had instituted a reform, which had turned the heart of the nation back to God. How many there are who are true to God as far as they can do anything? Active service responds, not only to the instincts of their spiritual life, but also, and very largely, to the energy of the self life, which loves the satisfaction of doing, of having accomplished something for God.

The call, which now came upon the king, was not to do, but to trust. In this he failed. In the first place, he took upon himself to meet the claims of Sennacherib, instead of recognizing his nothingness and God's all power, and so putting the matter at once and entirely into his hands. Instead of humbling himself before God, he humbled himself before the king of Assyria, saying: "I have offended, that which thou puttest on me I will bear." But it was harder to deal with man than with God; the demands of Assyria were such that all the treasures of the king's house did not suffice, and the king, not having asked God's counsel at all, fell back upon the sad expedient of satisfying the king of Assyria with the gold which had been dedicated to God in the building and repairing of the temple. To what expedients may we not be driven if, in our foolish unbelief, we fail to trust over all which concerns us into the hands of God! Hezekiah acted as though the land and the people were his, and the question one between himself and the king of Assyria. His forefathers, Asa and Jehoshaphat, had looked upon the cause of Judah as God's cause. "Let not man prevail against thee" (II. Chron. 14: 2). "None is able to withstand thee" (II. Chron. 20: 6).

The king of Assyria only made use of the concessions he had obtained to push forward the war with renewed energy. Compromise, giving to the world that which belongs to God, only weakens our cause. There is no real gain in doing anything apart from God. Hezekiah was in great difficulty. He took counsel with his princes and mighty men, to destroy all the water supply and so make the position of the besieging army untenable. Then he strongly fortified Jerusalem, and then, but only after having done all he could, he gathered together his captains in the broad place at the gate of the city, and spake comfortably to them, saying: "Be strong and of a good courage, be not afraid, nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him, for there is a greater with us than with him; with him is an arm of flesh; but with us is the Lord our God to help us to fight our battles." And the people rested themselves on the words of Hezekiah, king of Judah.

Hezekiah did not know until he was tried, that he would ever have been brought to give consecrated gold to a heathen king with the idea that God's cause could be furthered by it. He did not know that the consideration, "But what can I do?" would come up in his mind in such a way that it would be an after consideration, not the primary one, "What can God do, and what will he do for his people?" Trial brought to light that with all Hezekiah's great faithfulness in doing, so long as he could do anything, he really trusted to his own doing more than he trusted God. And now a time must come when the game must be played out, and he must discover the power and the faithfulness of his God as never before.

Sennacherib now sent his general, Rabshakeh, with insolent messages to Hezekiah's ministers, suggesting that he was trusting to Egypt for strength to carry on the war, and then with the most galling scorn and contempt, he continued, "But if ye say unto me, We trust in the Lord our God, is not that he whose altars and high places Hezekiah hath taken away?" Of course this was the wrong end of the story; we know it was the idolatrous altars and high places which Hezekiah had taken away. But there was room for the misconception, if he could dispose of the temple treasures to save the country, whose battles God had promised to fight. Because he had put his God last instead of first, the fear of God had not fallen on the Assyrians. When God and his people are fully one, there is always a consciousness on the part of God's enemies that they have more than man to count with. Rabshakeh was not content to deal with Hezekiah and his ministers; he sought to influence the people, and urged upon them that their God had no more power to deliver them than the gods of the nations which had failed to deliver their lands out of the power of Sennacherib. The contemptuous Assyrians disregarded the etiquette of nations, and insolently ignored the Jewish government, persisting in speaking in the Hebrew tongue to the people (II. Kings 18: 17-35).

But God's hand was upon the people and they obeyed Hezekiah, who had sent forth the command, Answer him not (II. Kings, 18. 36). But things were come to an extreme. Hezekiah's officers came and told him the words of Rabshakeh, and now he did what he should have done at first, he humbled himself fully before God. Putting off his royal robes in token that he was nothing and nobody, he put on sackcloth, and sent Eliakim, Shebna and Joah to the one man who knew God as no other man in Israel did; a man who had learned in the revealed presence of Christ in glory, that he was "a man of unclean lips and dwelt in the midst of a people of unclean lips (Isaiah 6). Hezekiah could trust Isaiah, because Isaiah could trust his God.

PALACE OF SENNACHERIB, AT NINEVEH.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

RELIGIOUS observance, such as that described in the lesson last week, doubtless gave the people an enthusiastic trust in their God, which strengthened the nation. But the fact that the enemies of the little kingdom were overwhelmingly powerful, could not be ignored. It is evident that in the face of the national dangers, the nobles and official class did not possess the faith which Isaiah tried to impart to King Hezekiah. They sneered at the prophet as a fanatic and a dreamer. To look to God for protection was not, in their opinion, practical statesmanship. The king had far better, according to their view, make alliances with other nations and fortify his capital. Thus three parties existed among the king's advisers. One party urged him to be faithful to Assyria, pay the tribute his father had promised, send presents and be very humble before the mighty power of that dreaded nation. A second party urged him to defy Assyria and ally himself with Egypt, which alarmed for its own safety, was looking for some power situated between itself and Assyria, to block the conquering march of Assyria to its own borders. Egypt's policy was to have the inevitable struggle with Assyria take place outside Egyptian territory. Therefore it incited Hezekiah to rebel, and promised to help him. Some of his counsellors begged him to accept the Egyptian offer. The third party would have him make no alliances, but trust in God. This party was probably a small one at court, but had the support of the common people. It was led by Isaiah. Besides these, there arose another party, which turned their eyes for help in a new direction. Babylon was organizing a confederation against Assyria and needed allies. The ambassadors who visited Hezekiah to congratulate him on his recovery (II. Kings 20: 12, 13), were probably charged with an offer of help to him if he would resist Assyria. Thus encouraged, Hezekiah refused to pay the tribute to Assyria and prepared himself to resist the invasion, which was inevitable. But when the great Sennacherib, marching to invade Egypt, stopped on his way to punish him, faith and courage failed, and he stripped himself of his treasures to appease his enemy. Sennacherib accepted them, but he did not keep faith. He sent his chief general, Rabshakeh to demand Hezekiah's surrender; and when it was received in blank silence, he sent an army to enforce it. Then occurred the wonderful deliverance, which is described by the historian as the work of the angel of the Lord. The Assyrians were slain, and with a mere remnant of his army, Sennacherib returned back to Nineveh.

ANCIENT STATUE OF SENNACHERIB.

Dwelt at Nineveh. Nineveh was a magnificent city, the capital of the mighty kingdom of Assyria, disappeared for ages, and its deeds of [illegible] Not until 1842—eighty years ago—was a trace found. The Niebuhr Claudius remarked certain mounds in the desert where Nineveh had probably existed. Like mountains ground, going into [illegible] they found they were composed of brick and earth rubbish. Of the mounds they measured, and found it 1,850 feet, or over a third of a mile, 1,147 feet wide, and 178 feet high. It was impossible to explore it at that time, but in 1847 Layard commenced the excavations which have immortalized his name. He found that the mound covered the remains of a magnificent palace that had apparently been destroyed by fire. It was undoubtedly the palace of Sennacherib. Gradually the earth was cleared away, and the facade of one side of the palace was laid bare. Trenches were then dug in front. Gigantic images of winged bulls, with human heads, were uncovered, on the bodies of which were inscriptions recounting the triumphs of Sennacherib. One of these describes the campaign of the lesson, mentioning Hezekiah by name. It records the tribute Hezekiah paid, which naturally, has nothing to say of the disaster which befell Sennacherib's army. Continuing his excavations of the mound, Layard uncovered seventy-one halls and chambers, one of which was 124 feet long and 90 wide. Its walls were panelled with bas-reliefs and inscriptions. These confirm the Biblical account of Sennacherib's military operations. There were several statues of the king himself. A picture of one of them is here given.

My hook in thy nose. Sennacherib would understand this threat. The Assyrians behaved brutally to their captives and frequently led them in triumph, in procession, like oxen, with rings through their noses. Wicked men often do, of their own accord, the will of God. During the India mutiny of 1857 the savages completed the ruin of their own cause by cutting the telegraph wires in the Punjab. Then they set free a brave corps of troops, who defeated the rebels and saved many lives.

The angel of the Lord went out. This is doubtless a pious and poetic way of describing the destruction. The historian, with the keen insight of the man of faith, traces the destruction of the enemy directly to God, and does not notice details. However the destruction was done, God did it, and the angel he employed may have been pestilence, as some think, or the deadly wind called the simoom, as others contend. A curious story of it is given by Herodotus. Telling the details of Sennacherib's disaster, he says that [illegible] night a great multitude of field mice issued from the marshes, beside which the Assyrian army was encamped, and ate the bow strings of the host, and the leathongs by which the soldiers held their shields. In the morning the army, finding that it could use neither bows nor shields, fled precipitately and the rear guard was mercilessly slaughtered.

BRIGHTER DAYS DAWNING IN CUBA.

The Land Joyfully Prepares for Spanish Evacuation and is Ready to Heartily Welcome American Occupation—A Caution to the Adventurous.

(From a Special Correspondent.)

HAVANA, October 15th.

In the days before the war we used to write of Havana, "In the midst of mad merriment here is a reign of misery." But now we can write, "Amid the desolation and misery here merry-making."

Why all this joyousness? Because, above all, the United States is to assume control here on December 1st, whether the Spaniards have evacuated or not. This means that the Spaniards will then lose control of the custom-house and will cease to collect public revenues. These revenues mean everything to the people of Cuba. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, living in the land of the least infringement of personal rights, can hardly appreciate all that the stopping of the collection of Spanish revenues means to Cuba. For instance, small retail stores formerly taxed $300, and large ones more. This burden on shopkeepers will cease. There is now a severe income tax. Clerks pay one and one-half per cent. of their salaries. Permission is required for every social gathering. Cubans cannot give a party to more than eight friends, without the necessary permit. There is a tax for almost every letter in a sign, or a tax for every servant you keep. Is it a wonder that the Cubans are in great glee? One day I went out to the Vedado, the most fashionable suburb of Havana, to call on Mrs. Admiral Sampson. The admiral was ill in bed, distressed over the fact that the blame for the bad management of the Santiago land campaign was breaking him. In all the houses around but in which the admiral lives, there were illuminations and sounds of gayety. "Why are they so happy about?" asked Mrs. Sampson. And I reminded her that it was the day on which a decision had been reached that the Americans would have control of Cuba on December 1st, evacuation or no evacuation.

That same night I stopped at a Casa de Cambia (house of exchange), to change my two-dollar bill, U. S. currency, into Spanish silver. The banker handed me $3 in silver. "What's this?" I asked. "This morning you gave me $8 in silver for your bill." "Ah," replied the banker, smiling brightly; "we did not then know that the Americans were coming so soon."

It was before this particular evening I made my trip into the interior. I went to Matanzas, and thence to Cienfuegos, a stage of 200 miles. It was a journey I shall never forget; and unless one takes this trip within a month or two from now, one will never see the Cuba which I have just seen. In the province of Santa Clara especially, everything that would burn has been burned. Not a house in the whole section has a roof. Hardly a soul inhabits the region. I found one lone family living on one of the weed-grown sugar plantations. They had tasted no food except potatoes, fruit and coffee, for more than a year. Meat and money were two things they had never expected to see again. But a Cuban soldier was with me. He gave the poor mother a piece of good bacon, and I gave the wasted child a piece of United States money. The whole family, thereupon, fell to the floor in order to kiss our feet—the mother, the child, the father and grown-up son. When the Cuban soldier told the prostrate ones that I was an American they screamed with joy and sprang up, all asking at once if the President of the United States was really coming to live in Cuba, and if he would give everybody food and houses and enough to live on? It must be remembered that these people had not seen a newspaper for more than a year, and only knew what was going on in the world from such stragglers as ourselves. There are thousands of such poor creatures hidden away among the ruined buildings on the 50,000 plantations and farms, laid waste all over the island.

When the evacuation of Cuba is complete there will be only 1,000,000 people left. These will not be enough to develop the island's wonderful resources. The island is as large as New York State. Investors and capitalists must come first, mechanics, traders and laborers may follow. Spaniards will sell their plantations cheap, for they want to leave the island, and Cubans will not hesitate to sell their farms at a sacrifice because they have not enough money left to carry on operations. A good-sized plantation, however, with its 60,000 acres, its 2,500 employees, and its many miles of railroad, requires $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 capital to start. All the buildings must be rebuilt. Machinery must be brought over from the United States and set up. All this will take time as well as money. Meanwhile, therefore, Cuba is no place for the penniless man. There may be thousands of struggling young men and women in the United States who are turning their eyes in this direction and wondering what their chances are for making a living here. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot do better than to warn them that unless they have money enough to tide over the period required to make the first start, they had best relinquish the idea of coming here, just at present. Any man, whatever his education or occupation, who comes to Cuba at once expecting to find immediate employment, if he comes with no money, will simply be acting upon an impulse which is certain to be regretted.

To find the real merriment, the actual preparations and bustle, preceding a period of prosperity we must look to Havana. Here they were to-day unveiling a monument to the firemen who lost their lives when the big bazaar was burned years ago. At the wharf all the boatmen have left their boats in order to crowd around a single brother who is translating the news from a New York paper. Newsboys, who are really grown men, are crying "extras" on the streets, extras bearing the good tidings of the coming of the Americans. At the hospital for the Spanish soldiers the sick have been told to get ready to be shipped to their homes in Spain. Even the working girls, toiling at the tobacco tables so many hours a day, look happier and not so hopeless. The chicken-sellers, mounted high on their horses over their stock of freshly-killed poultry, are demanding higher prices.

Ten thousand Cubans are encamped on the hills around Havana. The area of their encampment is called the Zone of Inviolation—that is, no violence will be tolerated within this space. If a Cuban raids property within this zone he must be turned over to the Spaniards for safe-keeping. If a Cuban is heard to say: "Death to Spaniards," that Cuban is to be shot dead by the nearest Spanish soldier who happens to have a loaded musket.

The commander-in-chief of the Cuban camp is Gen. Rodriguez. He is a stern disciplinarian, as I had occasion to learn. "My soldiers are here," said he, "acting as a sort of suburban police. They are here to protect property." And then he added, off-hand, "I have just ordered one of my men to be shot." Startled, I asked why.

"He raided a farmer's house and stole money," replied the commander.

I remarked that that seemed a severe sentence for stealing—to execute a man for theft.

"I am bound to respect the agreement of inviolation," he replied. "I must show that the Cubans are capable of self-government and of self-control. My men are warned not to steal even a banana. No, the man must die!"

And sure enough, the man was shot the next morning—shot in one of the loneliest spots near the camp, in a magnificent roadway known as the Avenue of Palms. These are the Royal palms, so abundant in Cuba, trees that rise to great heights, like sentinels over God's fields.

Just beyond this Avenue of Palms there is a dreary, but romantic, grove in the midst of which there is a house for the dead—the family vault on the estate of one of the richest men in Cuba. I went into this vault. Here are buried all the members of this once great Cuban family, together with all their servants and even their slaves. The slaves once came near being a power in Cuba, as in San Domingo. Even now, the blacks in Cuba are a source of uneasiness to those who understand their characteristics. There are probably 300,000 blacks throughout the island; they really make up one-third of the population. They were, indeed, the brawn of the rebellion just ended, for their number under arms was one-seventh of the Cuban army. To the interpreter who conducted me through the Cuban camp, one of these negroes said, "We did the fighting and now we want a hand also in the independence."

The great question now is, will these negroes who have lived so long under arms, in idleness, be content to lay down their arms and return to work-a-day life?

Meantime, there are opportunities in the new Cuba for the right Americans. The right Americans are those who have money or brains and who can use either or both to aid, in a practical way, the development of Cuba's resources. There are rich mines to be worked. There are rare woods—like rosewood and mahogany—to be logged. In Havana and all over Cuba, hotels must be built. There are none here now that satisfy Americans. There is not a savings bank in the island. Here is a chance for bankers. There are no public schools worthy the name. Here is a chance for enterprising school-teachers. Typewriters are wanted for all the offices, shops and bureaus that will soon be opened by the Americans. Our officials, our tradesmen and our business men, who are already here getting ready to begin business, are in need of clerks, cashiers and book-keepers.

Yes, all Cuba is smiling. This is the eve of a new era, when people here will live in peace and happiness. At the same time, shall the Protestant church continue to be unrepresented in Cuba? There is room here for good Christians, for Christian ministers, for Gospel workers. Where is the Y. M. C. A.? Where the W. C. T. U.? The Americans here have just organized an American Club. At their house-warming last night, they asked:—"But what about an American church?"

Too Big a Question,

SO many of our great statesmen say that we ought to take full possession of the Philippine Archipelago, and so many of them advise just the opposite, that we have come to think that the question is too big for us. We confess we do not know what is best. It is evident that the President and his Cabinet do not know. Only those are positive for or against expansion who know but little about the advantages or the perils, the possibilities or probabilities. Here is a case where we want God. His hand has been on the helm of nations. He will make plain what is best for our Government, best for Spain, best for her lost colonies, best for the whole world. The question involves China, as well as the nations usually spoken of as concerned in the present international controversies. If ever our rulers, and those who make the laws and interpret the laws, needed Divine supervisal, they most certainly need it now. As the questions now before us are too big for statesmanship and diplomacy, let us invoke the merciful guidance of the only Being in the universe who can see the end from the beginning, and who understands the events of the twentieth and twenty-first century as well as the events of the nineteenth.

Politics Triumphant.

THE annual cauldron of elections is now boiling. Stop at the door of Republican headquarters and hear what scoundrels the Democrats are. Stop at Democratic headquarters and hear what scoundrels the Republicans are. This unreal clatter is disgusting. The only question involved is who shall have the offices. City and State administrations follow each other, and the only difference between them is in the different styles of grabbing money from the city and State treasury. American politics is an abysm deeper and more mysterious as the years go by. Blessed are all those who keep out of the whirling depths, unless they positively feel called of God to the work of purification of public affairs. The most of those who enter the awful arena of political life are slain of its lions.

You ought to live in Washington to see how many talented men have been left high and dry upon the beach, as the wave of popular favor retreated from them. Many of them sacrificed lucrative profession, a prosperous business in their own city and State, for the emoluments of four years, and when the administration changed they were put out, and having been so long absent from their native State, they have lost their home patronage and home opportunities; and so they stay in Washington, struggling to live and keep up respectability. American politics slew them, but has not had enough decency to bury them from the cold gaze of the world.

This Life Not All.

HOW that old lesson takes on new emphasis! We get so used to living we hardly think of our own mortality until some startling event arouses us to think how swiftly the shuttle flies which shall finish the fabric of our earthly estate, and how soon the thread of life will be cut. There is something overwhelming in the passage of generation after generation off the stage to let other generations come on. Who are the merchants of New York to-day? Many of them children and grandchildren of the old merchants. Who are the ministers of religion in these pulpits? Nearly all of them new men, while their predecessors have gone out of service, and most of them gone out of the world. Who are the men in professional life? New doctors instead of old doctors, young lawyers instead of the old lawyers. Were it not for the light which the Gospel kindles over the next world, a wave of melancholy would drown the nations.

If this life were all and then obliteration, if this short journey ended in a gulf of nothingness, we might well sit down in despair, but with a theory that it is only the beginning, and that departure is release and enlargement and coronation, the sadness is lessened, if not entirely taken away.

Brighten Your Face

THIS is a dark world to many people, a world of chills, a world of fogs, a world of wet blankets. Nine-tenths of the men we meet need encouragement. Your work is so urgent that you have no time to stop and speak to the people, but every day you meet scores, perhaps hundreds and thousands, of persons upon whom you might have direct and immediate influence. "How? how?" you cry out. We answer, by the grace of physiognomy. There is nothing more catching than a face with a lantern behind it, shining clear through. We have no admiration for a face with a dry smile, meaning no more than the grin of a false face. But a smile written by the hand of God, as an index finger or table of contents to whole volumes of good feeling within, is a benediction. You say: "My face is hard and lacking in mobility, and my benignant feelings are not observable in the facial proportions." We do not believe you. Freshness and geniality of soul are so subtle and pervading that they will, at some eye or mouth corner leak out. Set behind your face a feeling of gratitude to God and kindliness toward man, and you will every day preach a sermon long as the streets you walk, a sermon with as many heads as the number of people you meet, and differing from other sermons in the fact that the longer it is the better. The reason that there are so many sour faces, so many frowning faces, so many dull faces, is because men consent to be acrid and petulant and stupid. The way to improve your face is to improve your disposition. Attractiveness of physiognomy does not depend on regularity of feature. We know persons whose brows are shaggy, and whose eyes are oblique, and noses are ominously longitudinal, and the mouth straggles along in unusual and unexpected directions; and yet they are men and women of so much soul we love to look upon them and their face is an evangelism.

THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

THE story of the English Bible is written in the blood of its martyrs, and the Book of Common Prayer is the funded religiousness of eighteen hundred years. For though it is generally supposed St. Augustine came to England to preach Christianity, such is far from being the truth. Augustine found in England a large Christian Church. He himself lodged with the Christian bishop Lithardus, who served the church of St. Martin, near the royal city of Canterbury. What is more—this Church of England, had then its own Liturgy, which it had received direct from the Patriarchate of Ephesus.

What Augustine preached, was submission to the Church of Rome and the Romish ceremonies regarding baptism and Easter. And it is to be noted that on this subject, he met in convocation the Archbishop of Cambria, seven English bishops, and many other clergy; and that Dinoth, bishop of Bangor, made the following noble reply to Augustine's pretensions for the Pope of Rome: "I acknowledge my duty to the Church of God, and to every godly Christian, to help every one of them, by word and deed, to be children of God; but other obedience than this, I do not know to be due to him, whom you call 'our Pope.'"

No further attempt was made, until after the Norman Conquest, to assimilate the Ephesian Liturgy, to the Roman or Latin one. Then Osmund, bishop of Salisbury, remodeled the offices of the church; but this was by no means universally adopted. Lincoln, Hereford, Bangor, York, London, kept their old form, though the monasteries generally followed the Roman form. Osmund's work is known as the Book of Sarum. This book was the basis of Wolsey's "Reformed Breviary" in 1531. In ten years this breviary was again "reformed" and as the title page says, "purged of many errors, and the lessons ordered to be read in English." In three years the whole Litany was in English; and some additions from Luther's Ritual and the Ritual of Cologne, were added.

This revision was accepted by Henry the Eighth very reluctantly; yet Cranmer, with singular bravery, on the 30th of November, 1547—just 351 years ago—brought before the King "an ordinance for the laity to receive the body of Our Lord under both kinds—of bread and wine;" and this was so wisely pressed, that Henry sanctioned it in Latin; but forbade any further reforms in the vernacular. However the people had now the Gospel, Epistles, Litany, and Creed in English. In another year the perfectly revised book was laid before the Church; though Cranmer emphatically declares that though "new in arrangement and in tongue, it is substantially the same used in the Church of England for 1,500 years:" that is—it was the Liturgy of the Church at Ephesus, rendered into English.

In 1553 Mary became Queen, and she instantly restored all the Latin forms of the Romish Church; but the very first Act of Elizabeth's reign, was to give back to the people, the Book of Common Prayer. And the people took it back to their hearts with an abandonment of affection and enthusiasm that is incredible in our undemonstrative age. But the spirit of Nonconformity was steadily growing, even under Elizabeth's firm hand; and when James came to the throne, this party declared themselves "to be groaning under a burden of human rites, the imposition of a Church, derived from anti-Christ." James, educated by the Scotch Presbyterians, was well inclined to listen to them, and he called a convocation of Episcopal and Nonconformist clergy, to consider the Book of Common Prayer. This was the beginning of a struggle which lasted forty years, and ended in the suppression by Act of Parliament, of the Book of Common Prayer in all places of worship. A few months later, it was forbidden in private houses; a law, which it is safe to say, was broken with clear conscience, thousands of times every day. So for fifteen years the Book was used only at the risk of fine and imprisonment; but that fifteen years buried it in the hearts of the English nation; it became life of their life, and part and parcel of all their hopes, and joys, and sorrows.

Charles the Second gave it back to the nation, and then the printing presses of the time could not supply the demand, and there is yet extant a pathetic petition to the King, against the Vicar of Feversham, who they say "in refusing them their Liturgy, refuses them their mother's milk." Five weeks after the Restoration, there was another convocation of Episcopal and Nonconformist clergy, anent the Book of Common Prayer. Among the latter was Richard Baxter. He laid before the Conference a prayer book of his own composition. The English bishops were s[illegible]y astounded at his presumption, and it was never used, even by his own party. A subsequent convocation of English Bishops met over the whole Book, sentence by sentence, pondering, consulting, praying over [illegible] sentence. This was the revision of 166[illegible] is the Prayer Book of 1898.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

In the environs of the city by the Seine, there is now rising a group of palaces which are to be the centre of attraction for multitudes from many lands two years hence. They are buildings of the approaching Paris Exhibition of 1900. Commissioner Ferdinand W. Peck, the American representative at the Exposition, has under him a staff of some twenty persons, all experts in different lines, and who are busily engaged in making arrangements that will be advantageous to American exhibitors. The American Committees are in the Avenue Rapp, where they have rented commodious offices, comprising some fourteen rooms, at a rent of 11,000 francs a year. Commissioner Peck has succeeded in securing for American exhibits 203,000 square feet, which is a very considerable increase on the space first allotted. It is also more than that allotted to Germany. He expects, however, to obtain a larger grant of space, as our exhibitors believe, could fill half a million square feet. Our photograph on this page shows the present condition of the Exposition buildings, work on which is being pushed with due rapidity. When all are completed, according to the architects' plans, they will constitute a magnificent group of edifices, superior to those of any previous European Exposition in both design and execution. Although the work of construction has been somewhat hindered by the great Paris strike, the latter having now happily ended, it is not expected that the delay will be seriously felt as to affect the plans of the Commission. M. Alfred Picard, the Commissioner General of the Exposition, is a man of great energy. He has already applied vigorous measures to remedy the lost time. All classes of society that by the settlement of the strike the progress in the Exposition can profit. It would have been regarded as a national calamity if the opening of the Exposition had been postponed. Such a delay would have been inevitable if the building strike had been continued. It is fortunate that powerful capital is, it seems, to carry an enterprise of this magnitude without the cooperation of labor. The two are mutually dependent, and only by fair dealing on both sides can they work together harmoniously. It is as true as it was in the Apostle's time: "None of us liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself (Rom. 14: 7).

Wealth Out of Sawdust.

A astonishing discovery is reported by Journal of Baltimore, Md. It appears that an invitation was sent from Canada to a noted inventor of Baltimore, whose name I was hoped, would relieve the proprietors of certain sawmills of a difficulty. They had been in the habit of throwing the sawdust into the Ottawa River, but the government had interfered and ordered them to discontinue the practice. At the picture, they heard that a citizen of Baltimore had discovered a way of disposing of sawdust to advantage. They engaged him to visit the mills and make experiments. According to the reports received from him, his experiments have succeeded beyond his most sanguine expectations. The products he has extracted from sawdust can, he claims, be used in iron and steel smelting works and in lead manufactories, besides furnishing the city of Ottawa with light and heat at a nominal expense. He estimates that the value of the sawdust for these purposes will be thirty dollars a ton, which is the average value of gold quartz. As the mills produce about five hundred tons annually, they will enjoy a considerable income from the stuff that they have hitherto regarded as refuse. How much the world would gain if the human refuse, which it casts into jails, could be similarly transformed into a source of advantage! It might be done if the Gospel were systematically applied to it. Every age has shown trophies of its power:

Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God; and such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified (1. Cor. 6: 11).

An Innocent Convict.

Efforts are being made to induce Governor Black to pardon a prisoner now serving a sentence of ten year's imprisonment for highway robbery. At his trial the policeman stated that soon after midnight he was on West street, New York, when he heard shouts of "murder." He ran to the place whence the cries proceeded and found a man lying on the ground badly bruised and bleeding, who complained that he had been robbed of sixty dollars. Near him was the prisoner whose battered face showed that he had been fighting. Both men were under the influence of liquor. The man who had been robbed identified the prisoner as one of his assailants. The prisoner had no money to pay a lawyer to defend him, but he stoutly protested his innocence. He said that he had come to this country from Ireland only three weeks before. He had met the other man casually as he was walking the streets, and at his invitation had drunk with him in several saloons. They were walking unsteadily away from one of them when his companion was attacked by three men. In trying to protect him, he received several blows in the face and was stunned when the police came up and arrested him. His story was not believed, and as he had no witnesses, he was convicted and sentenced. His good behavior in prison and his evident sincerity have interested visitors in his case, who have made investigations which have substantiated his story. He has paid a terrible penalty, in his two years' imprisonment, for his one night of dissipation. It is safe to conclude that if he recovers his liberty, he will not yield when strangers invite him to drink with them. He has learned by bitter experience the lesson that the wise king taught:

A companion of fools shall be destroyed (Prov. 13: 20).

Result of Feigning Blindness.

A remarkable story was related in a New York police court a few days ago. The prisoner was a blind man, who had been arrested for begging. There was a record in the court of his having previously been charged as an impostor, but the agent who arrested him this time admitted that the man was really blind. He said that the prisoner was a Russian, who, when he came to this country fifteen years ago, could see perfectly. He had a peculiar trick of turning up his eyes, which gave him the appearance of blindness. He found that more money could be obtained and obtained more easily by this accomplishment than by work. He has been known to receive as much as fifteen dollars in a day as he stood, hat in hand, on a corner in a shopping district. He lived economically and saved enough money to become the owner of several flat-houses, which pay well. He continued to beg, however, and as the police, knowing his circumstances, harassed him, he added a small hand-organ to his stock in trade. When he was arrested the other day it was alleged that he was not blind at all, but an examination proved that he was, and the man explained that after he had feigned blindness for a few years he had found his sight failing, and for over a year he had been totally blind. He might have saved his sight by giving up his wicked imposture, but he had grown to love money and, after so many years, knew no other way of getting it. He has suffered a terrible but just retribution for his hypocrisy. His fate should be a warning to others. There are many who, when appealed to for funds to support the Lord's work, plead poverty and pretend that they have no money to give, who might, if God dealt with them according to their deserts, be like this blind man, deprived of the blessing that they have, but will not use.

There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty (Prov. 11: 24).

To Exclude Light and Air.

A citizen of New York, owning a house in a fashionable section of the city, has applied for permission to erect an ornamental iron fence in his back yard. It is to be of corrugated iron and will cost $750. Whether the building department will permit the erection depends on the importance it will attach to the protest of the owner of the next house. This is a five-story apartment house which, being much deeper than its next-door neighbor, has windows overlooking the back yard in question. There are other houses on the other two sides which overlook the same yard, but it is not proposed to fence off their view. The occupants of the apartment house have, it is alleged, made themselves offensive by shaking rugs and mats out of the window, which practice covers the plants in the yard with dust and lint, and they do this when their neighbor is enjoying on open-air meal in his summer-house. He therefore proposes to erect the iron fence on his own ground about two feet from the apartment house, thus depriving the occupants of light and air. Disputes of this kind, in which one party annoys and the other retaliates, show how far society yet is, in spite of our boasted civilization, from the ideal of Christianity.

Consumption Cured.

A visitor to New York, apparently in robust health, was questioned by a friend whom he met as to the treatment he had undergone. At their previous meeting, some years ago he seemed to be in an advanced stage of consumption and his friend was as surprised to see him as if he had met a ghost. "I was cured," he said, "by the car-platform. I come of a consumptive family. My mother, my two brothers and a sister all died by that disease and it seemed as if my turn had come. I was working in Chicago and had no money to take the course which doctors told me was the only one that could save my life. That was to go to the Barbadoes or to Florida, or California. The only journey I could take was to and from the office. It occurred to me that I might prolong my life by those daily journeys. The car route laid by the lake side and every morning and evening I stood on the platform of the car taking long inhalations of fresh air. At first I could not take in much, but gradually the respiratory cells which had long been unused seemed revived by the oxygen, and I found myself able to take longer breaths. I continued the treatment and now I am under no dread of consumption. The car platform was the health resort that cured me." The significance of the cure consists in the fact that no medicine was administered. The respiratory cells were simply encouraged to perform their functions. Perhaps some who are spiritually sick may take a hint from the cure. Their spiritual nature might develop, if it were encouraged by active service. Neglect of the sanctuary and silence about what Christ has done for their souls are fruitful causes of degeneration.

They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint (Isa. 40: 31).

LUTHERANS IN CONFERENCE.

Delegates of the Luther League of America Assemble in New York in National Convention—Origin and History of the Movement.

AN important convention has just closed its sessions in New York. The Luther League of America, which was organized in 1895, on a national basis, has made such progress that in 1898 about a thousand delegates could be mustered in convention. The League is an outgrowth of an effort made in 1887 to combine the young people's societies connected with the Lutheran churches of New York City. It was well known to the pastors of the twenty-one Lutheran churches in the city that excellent work was being done by these societies, in keeping the young people loyal to the church and in encouraging them in social and benevolent work. But they were working independently of each other, and thus missed the mutual helpfulness and enthusiasm that come from united effort. A central association was organized to meet this drawback, which included all the associations of the city. The idea originated in St. Peter's Church, and was promulgated by the Junger Maenner Verein, which appointed a committee to negotiate with the young people's societies of other Lutheran churches. The committee first visited St. John's Church, and received a cordial welcome. The idea of united organization was favorably considered, and a committee was appointed to act with the brethren from St. Peter's in presenting the project to the other churches. On April 19, 1888, the central organization was formally effected at a meeting of delegates representing six young people's associations connected with churches in New York. The objects of the organization, as formulated in the constitution, were: "First. To centralize the endeavors of the various young people's Lutheran Associations of the City of New York, for the purpose of strengthening and furthering the growth of the Lutheran Church. Second. The intellectual improvement of its members; and, Third. The promotion of a spirit of friendly intercourse among them." In order to "strengthen, aid, advise, and encourage one another" in the work, it was decided to hold semi-annual conventions, to which all young people belonging to Lutheran societies would be welcome, without regard to the synodical divisions among which the Lutheran Church in America is distributed.

The advantage of the union was quickly demonstrated. The young people became acquainted with one another; their reunions were times of rejoicing and friendly intercourse, and a delightful sense of comradeship developed. The young people's societies of Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League and the Baptist Young People's Union had already shown how a national development could be accomplished, and the young Lutherans were quick to seize the idea. In November, 1889, a committee on Extension of Work was appointed to correspond with pastors through New York State with the view of effecting a State organization. The committee was also instructed to reach out to other States, to find out what churches were without a young people's society and in such cases to offer help, in the shape of a model constitution and other data, for the formation of one; and to suggest to societies already in existence the formation of a State central organization. The result of their work was organization in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Kansas, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Indiana, Kentucky, North Carolina, Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota, with an aggregate of about forty thousand members.

It was a short step to combine these State organizations in a national union, and this step was taken in October, 1895, when a meeting was held at Pittsburg, Pa., at which there were representatives of State, district and individual societies in twenty different States. The Luther League of America was then regularly organized. Since that time the membership has increased to sixty thousand. It is now contemplated to make the organization world-wide, and plans were discussed at the recent convention in New York for bringing the subject before the Lutheran churches in Europe. The uniform testimony presented showed that the results of the League had been to increase the active church work being done by individual members, and to develop the missionary spirit, which was manifested in increased interest in foreign missionary work, both in contributions and offers of service. The pastors, too, reported a better attendance of young people at the church services, and an increased willingness to aid the pastor in his pastoral work.

As one of the chief objects of the League is to bring about a closer union of the various synods of the church, the proceedings were all in English. There is a growing feeling that one of the strongest bonds of union would be a common language, and that it should be the language of the country in which they live. Therefore, although the meetings were composed of Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, and Finns, the English language was used throughout. The business meetings were held in the Holy Trinity church, of which we give a picture on this page. At these the officers, of three of whom we give portraits, were elected. As they had previously served in the same offices their reelection was an endorsement by the Convention of their former services. The Rev. J. J. Young, whose portrait we also give, is the present pastor of the church in which the Luther League was organized. Meetings were held by the Convention in other churches of New York and Brooklyn, and the grand closing session was held in Carnegie Music Hall. This was a mass meeting and was a large and most enthusiastic gathering. One of the chief speakers was United States Senator Wellington of Maryland.

Transvaal Mission Work.

What the American Board has Accomplished in Twelve Years' Earnest Labor.

IN a most interesting letter to The Missionary Herald, Mrs. Caroline L. Goodenough, of Johannesburg, gives an encouraging account of the progress of missionary effort in the Transvaal. She writes:

"Our present mission centre is in one of the suburbs. We have a plain wood and iron chapel, with a large, well-seated and lighted room which will accommodate three hundred people, and which is in use six days out of every seven, for we believe the Lord ought to get good use out of this property. The worshipers in this chapel cannot, most of them, be called heathen, as they are largely from the Zulu servants of the town, who have come into contact with Christianity in their Natal homes; a good proportion of them have been reared on our mission stations. They have only come here to make money, and expect to return to Natal in a few months. Four nights in the week an evening school for adult natives is held, so that those who are at work during the day may get, during their spare hours, the rudiments of an education. We care especially that they may learn to read the Bible in their own language.

"Our Germiston station, eight miles away, is near a little town, chiefly important as being the junction of four l of railway. Here is another wood iron chapel, at the back of which, in tiny rooms where they live, we shall Pindela, our native helper, and his who have charge of the chapel and spiritual work. They have taken up mission work from real love to Ch They have no salary, nor any remun tion for this Gospel work except b provided with two furnished rooms to in. A Diamond Concealed.

There is a very beautiful story conn with the famous De Sancy diamond, w is said to be worth a fortune. It comparatively small stone. It was s one occasion by the Baron de Sanc whom it belonged, to the French who was in want of cash, and had posed getting a loan. The diamond to be the security. The Baron gav stone to a trusted servant to take t king. The servant disappeared, an people suspected that he had gon with the diamond; but his master dec that he knew his servant too well t lieve such a thing possible. After time the servant's body was found, a way from the road; he had been mur and robbed. The Baron commanded his clothes should be carefully sear for the missing diamond; but it coul be found. He then ordered that the should be cut open, and the diamond found. The faithful servant had swallowed the gem, which he had been un in any other way to conceal from the bers. We should carry the truth of within ourselves, in our hearts; so there would be found the truth of G our innermost being. The Psalmist "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, I might not sin against thee."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Memories of Farm Life.

The Herdsman and the Meadow—Dairy-Work—Mother's Lessons.

The master let us out of school,
And straight we sought the meadows singing,
And in the evening sweet and cool,
Across the brook, the cows came bringing.
Days of wildwood song and prattle!
How far, how far, away you seem;
Meadow and children, browsing cattle,
And like a mezzo-tinted dream.
Could we were let out of school!
And straight might seek the meadows singing,
And in the evening sweet and cool,
Across the brook, the cows come bringing!

Whoever has not actually had a hand in rounding up sheep and bringing the cows home, has missed one of life's happy experiences in the opinion of some of us who can recall joyful occasions when our town folk found their way over hill and through dale to where cattle browsed or cattle grazed. The writer remembers a model herder whose divided attentions occupied themselves so admirably in cutting grass, chewing cuds, and standing kneedeep in the brook, that the herdsman found ample time to watch the bobbing motion of his fishing-line, and to tell us wonderful stories about the chipmunks, the tree-squirrels, the rabbits, the bees, the ants, and all the wild things of field and wood: he also inherring instinct knew where nests full of partridge eggs were to be found, and he knew not so well educated then as now, by the Y. P. C. A., were we not ways too good to eat Mrs. Bob White's returns home. At the latter's charge, he lent valuable detective work in the Mesdames Guinea Hen and Turkey-Hen, who had such unfortunate recollections for laying eggs as far from the poultry-yard as possible. He knew where the best chinquapin bushes and hickory-nut and chestnut trees could be found, and acted as leader of fruiting excursions into the woods, trusting the bell-cows to keep him posted as to the position of the herd.

When shadows lengthened, it was fine sport to drive the cows homeward and help milk them. Mother let us share in the churning, and we learned a great deal more in our dairy lessons than how to make butter firm and sweet. We learned lessons of gentleness and thrift and patience, which make us remember the dairy work on the old farm as a season of blessed opportunity.

The Old Cradle.

Scarlet-fever came in the door and we all had it; and Oh, how the fever did go! We contended as to who should lie in it, for sickness, you know, makes babies of us all. But after all we surrendered it to Charlie. He was too old to lie in it, but he seemed so very very sick: and with him in the cradle it was rock, rock, rock! But one day just as long ago as you can remember the cradle stopped. When a child is asleep there is no need of rocking. Charlie was asleep. He was sound asleep. Nothing could wake him. He needed taking up. Mother was too weak to do it. The neighbors came in to do that, and put a flower, fresh out of the garden dew, between the two still hands. The fever had gone out of the cheek, and left it white, very white: the rose exchanged for the lily. There was one less to contend for the cradle. It soon started again, and with a voice not quite so firm as before, but more tender, the old song came back: "Bye! bye! bye!" which meant more to you than "Il Trovatore," rendered by opera troupe in the presence of a fashionable audience, all leaning forward and nodding to show how well they understood Italian.

The Milkman of Ponce.

The milkman of Ponce does not carry lacteal fluid around in wagons and put up in cans. By no means! he drives the cows around, stops in front of your door, you or your servant hand him out a pail or a bottle, and he milks into it the quantity of milk you want. Rather hard upon the cows, but the simpler method of transporting the fluid put up in smaller packages, seems never to have dawned upon the simple Porto Rican intellect. The products of gardens, orchards and vineyards are cried out in the street: the candy and the breakfast man go around peddling, and the medley of Spanish words in this auctioneering process is very entertaining. Kitchen implements are extremely primitive, but the open charcoal burning oven commends itself.

The Pin Mystery.

"What becomes of all the pins lost?" is an old puzzle. A curious story is told of an old man, who spent his life going all about with his head down, looking for something—nobody knew what. When he died, it was found that he had accumulated an amazing hoard of pins. An old gentleman in London has interested himself in pins also, but to a different purpose—he has found out what becomes of lost pins. They disintegrate. He put a lot of brass and steel pins, hair-pins, needles, etc., in a quiet corner of his garden, and took notes of what happened. Ordinary hair-pins, in about 154 days, oxidized into a brownish rust, which was scattered by the wind as it was formed. Brass pins turned into verdigris in less than eighteen months. Cedar articles outlasted the metals, and a black lead pencil proved practically indestructible.

Lafayette Day and the Children.

The celebration of October 19, the anniversary of Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown, as Lafayette Day was an occasion of large patriotic interest and historic advantage in our public schools. From the Lakes to the Gulf, Maine to California, great universities joined hands with obscure country schools in doing honor to the memory of the Frenchman who loved America. In teaching history to young Americans, the exercises of the day were more fruitful than three months of dry instruction could be. Picture, song and story recalled the past, and gray-haired visitors to school-rooms detailed to spell-bound audiences personal reminiscences of Lafayette's visit to the United States in 1824, and of how he rode in his carriage, drawn by four white horses, under flowery arches, while small Americans of that day, little lassies all in white and little lads in white trousers and blue jackets sang songs of welcome, strewed flowers in his way, and most prettily helped their elders to show the great Frenchman how warmly America could remember her friends.

Mother, crooning soft and low,
Let not all thy fancies go
Like swift birds, to the blue skies
Of thy darling's happy eyes,
But on some fair ringlet's gold
Let a tender prayer be told.

IN AUTUMN TIME.

I.

SING soft, sing low, our lowland river,
Under thy banks of Autumn bloom:
Softly and sweet as the hour beseemeth,
Sing us the songs of peace and home.

II.

Bring us the airs of hills and forests,
The sweet aroma of birch and pine:
Give us a waft of the north-wind laden
With odor of grasses and breath of kine.

III.

Into thy dutiful life of uses
Pour the music and weave the flowers;
With the song of birds and bloom of meadows
Lighten and gladden thy heart and ours.

IV.

Here, in the calm of thy seaward valley,
Mirth and labor shall hold their truce;
Dance of water and mill of grinding
Both are beauty and both are use.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

SWEET friend, perchance both thou and I,
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living.
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then patience, e'en when keenest edge
May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glamour;
But wise it was for thee and me,
Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living.

MARGARET SANGSTER.

Quaint Marriage Customs.

IN a foreign magazine a learned writer has an article describing quaint and symbolical marriage customs, ancient and modern: Among others he mentions this which existed in Greece. "The bridegroom's house was decked with flowers, and a pestle hung at the door. The bride's procession was preceded by a servant carrying a sieve, while the lady herself bore a vessel containing parched barley, signifying her ability and readiness to attend household duties. The bride always went to her husband's house by night, and in her father's carriage, singers and dancers accompanying her to keep up her spirits. Upon her arrival the axle of the coach was burnt, thus symbolizing the impossibility of returning to a life of spinsterhood.

"In Russia there are also some quaint customs. The ceremony, as performed by a priest, includes the blessing of bread, after which he joins their hands, asking each in turn whether they will vow to be good to each other and to keep house well. A wreath of wormwood is then placed on their heads, symbolizing that even amid the happiness of married life there is a possibility of bitterness, and a concluding benediction is pronounced. A striking custom follows. The priest drinks their health in a gilt wooden bowl, and is imitated by husband and wife, the former of whom subsequently dashes it upon the ground, crushing it under his feet and shouting: 'Let them be trampled upon and confounded who maliciously endeavor to create ill-will and do ill offices between us.' Yet another quaint and somewhat characteristic Russian custom follows. On reaching home the bridegroom orders his wife to take off his boots, at the same time saying there is a whip in one and a purse in the other. Upon the fortune of her first choice the poor wife forecasts the severity or liberality of her husband.

A Little Herds-woman's Odd Perch.

Bertha Leonard, a little thirteen-year-old girl, in Pawnee County, says a Kansas City paper, has been giving the telegraph companies a lot of trouble. At irregular intervals every day the wires would not work, and it seemed impossible to locate the trouble until, at last, the line repairers stumbled upon a simple, but extraordinary explanation in the form of a little girl, coolly perched on a board stretched across the wires. She had driven railroad spikes in the telegraph pole, climbed it, drawn up the board by means of a cord, and then adjusted it to suit her convenience. From this elevated position she was watching her father's cattle. The board, usually damp from lying on the ground, had effectually interrupted the current.

A Lesson of Faith.

If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come.—Job 14: 14.

"LET me hire you as a nurse for my poor children," said a Butterfly to a quiet Caterpillar, who was strolling along a cabbage-leaf in her odd lumbering way. "See these little eggs," continued the Butterfly: "I don't know how long it will be before they come to life, and I feel very sick and poorly, and if I die who will take care of my baby butterflies when I am gone? Will you, kind, mild, green Caterpillar? But you must mind what you give them to eat, Caterpillar!—they cannot of course, live on your rough food. You must give them early dew, and honey from the flowers, and you must let them fly about only a little way at first; for, of course, one can't expect them to use their wings all at once. Dear me! it is a sad pity you cannot fly yourself. But I have no time to look for another nurse now, so you will do your best, I hope. Dear! dear! I cannot think what made me come and lay my eggs on a cabbage leaf! What a place for young butterflies to be born upon! Still you will be kind, will you not, to the poor little ones? Here, take this gold dust from my wings as a reward. Oh, how dizzy I am! Caterpillar! you will remember about the food——"

And with these words the Butterfly drooped her wings and died; and the green Caterpillar, who had not had the opportunity of even saying Yes or No to the request, was left standing alone by the side of the Butterfly's eggs.

"A pretty nurse she has chosen, indeed, poor lady!" exclaimed she, "and a pretty business I have in hand! Why, her senses must have left her, or she never would have asked a poor crawling creature like me to bring up her dainty little ones! Much they'll mind me, truly, when they feel the gay wings on their backs, and can fly away out of my sight whenever they choose! Ah! how silly some people are, in spite of their painted clothes and the gold dust on their wings!"

However, the poor Butterfly was dead, and there lay the eggs on the cabbage leaf; and the green Caterpillar had a kind heart, so she resolved to do her best. But she got no sleep that night, she was so very anxious. She made her back quite ache with walking all night round her young charges, for fear any harm should happen to them; and in the morning says she to herself:

"Two heads are better than one. I will consult some wise animal upon the matter and get advice. How should a poor crawling creature like me know what to do without asking my betters?"

But still there was a difficulty—whom should the Caterpillar consult? There was the shaggy Dog who sometimes came into the garden. But he was so rough!—he would most likely whisk all the eggs off the cabbage leaf with one brush of his tail, if she called him near to talk to her, and then she should never forgive herself. There was the Tom Cat, to be sure, who would sometimes sit at the foot of the apple tree, basking himself and warming his fur in the sunshine; but he was so selfish and indifferent!—there was no hope of his giving himself the trouble to think about butterflies' eggs.

"I wonder which is the wisest of all the animals I know," sighed the Caterpillar, in great distress; and then she thought, and thought, till at last she thought of the Lark; and she fancied that because he went up so high, and nobody knew where he went to, he must be very clever, and know a great deal; for to go up very high (which she could never do), was the Caterpillar's idea of perfect glory.

Now, in the neighboring field there lived a Lark, and the Caterpillar sent a message to him, to beg him to come and talk to her; and when he came she told him all her difficulties, and asked him what she was to do to feed and rear the little creatures so different from herself.

"Perhaps you will be able to inquire and hear something about it next time you go up high," observed the Caterpillar, timidly.

The Lark said, "Perhaps he should;" but he did not satisfy her curiosity any further. Soon afterwards, however, he went singing upwards into the bright, blue sky. By degrees his voice died away in the distance, till the green Caterpillar could not hear a sound. It is nothing to say she could not see him; for poor thing! she never could see far at any time and had a difficulty in looking upwards at all, even when she reared herself up most carefully, which she did now; but it was of no use, so she dropped upon her legs again, and resumed her walk round the Butterfly's eggs, nibbling a bit of the cabbage leaf now and then as she moved along.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY ADDRESSING THE MULTITUDE AT THE OMAHA EXPOSITION.

Seldom has a more enthusiastic or inspiring scene been witnessed in a Western city than that which took place on the occasion of President McKinley's address at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, in Omaha, recently. Our photograph (taken specially for this journal), gives only a faint idea of the great multitude who gathered to hear the speaker. He confronted a far-reaching sea of human faces, which extended from the platform on all sides almost to the extremity of the grounds. In last week's issue, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave an outline of the President's address, which dealt mainly with the war and the new responsibilities it had imposed upon the American people.

"What a time the Lark has been gone!" she cried at last. "I wonder where he is just now! I would give all my legs to know! He must have flown up higher than usual this time, I do think! How I should like to know where it is that he goes to, and what he hears in that curious blue sky! He always sings in going up and coming down, but he never lets any secret out. He is very, very close!"

And the green Caterpillar took another turn round the Butterfly's eggs.

At last the Lark's voice began to be heard again. The Caterpillar almost jumped for joy, and it was not long before she saw her friend descend with hushed note to the cabbage bed.

"News, news, glorious news, friend Caterpillar!" sang the Lark; "but the worst of it is, you won't believe me!"

"I believe everything I am told," observed the Caterpillar hastily.

"Well, then, first of all, I will tell you what these little creatures are to eat"—and the Lark nodded his beak towards the eggs. "What do you think it is to be? Guess!"

"Dew, and the honey out of flowers, I am afraid," sighed the Caterpillar.

"No such thing, old lady! Something simpler than that. Something that you can get at quite easily."

"I can get nothing quite easily but cabbage leaves," murmured the Caterpillar, in distress.

"Excellent! my good friend," cried the Lark, exultingly; "you have found it out. You are to feed them with cabbage leaves."

"Never!" said the Caterpillar, indignantly. "It was their dying mother's last request that I should do no such thing."

"Their dying mother knew nothing about the matter," persisted the Lark; "but why do you ask me, and then disbelieve what I say? You have neither faith nor trust."

"O, I believe everything I am told," said the Caterpillar.

"Nay, but you do not," replied the Lark; you won't believe me even about the food, and yet that is but a beginning of what I have to tell you. Why, Caterpillar, what do you think those little eggs will turn out to be?"

"Butterflies, to be sure," said the Caterpillar.

"Caterpillars!" sang the Lark; "and you will find it out in time;" and the Lark flew away, for he did not want to stay and contest the point with his friend.

"I thought the Lark had been wise and kind," observed the mild, green Caterpillar, once more beginning to walk round the eggs, "but I find that he is foolish and saucy instead. Perhaps he went up too high this time. Ah, it's a pity when people who soar so high are silly and rude nevertheless! Dear! I still wonder whom he sees, and what he does up yonder."

"I would tell you if you would believe me," sang the Lark, descending once more.

"I believe everything I'm told," reiterated the Caterpillar, with as grave a face as if it were a fact.

"Then I'll tell you something else," cried the Lark; for the best of my news remains behind. You will one day be a butterfly yourself."

"Wretched bird!" exclaimed the Caterpillar, "you jest with my inferiority—now you are cruel as well as foolish. Go away! I will ask your advice no more."

"I told you you would not believe me," cried the Lark, nettled in his turn.

"I believe everything I am told," resisted the Caterpillar; "that is"—and e hesitated—"everything that it is rea able to believe. But to tell me that bu flies' eggs are caterpillars, and that ca pillars leave off crawling and get wi and become butterflies!—Lark! you e too wise to believe such nonsense y self, for you know it is impossible."

"I know no such thing," said the L warmly. "Whether I hover over the c fields of earth, or go up into the depth the sky, I see so many wonderful thi I know no reason why there should be more. Oh, Caterpillar! it is becau you crawl, because you never get bey your cabbage-leaf, that you call any th impossible."

"Nonsense!" shouted the Caterpilla know what's possible, and what's not sible, according to my experience and pacity, as well as you do. Look at long, green body, and these endless l and then talk to me about having w and a painted feathery coat. Fool!—"

"And fool you! you would be Caterpillar!" cried the indignant L "Fool, to attempt to reason about w you cannot understand! Do you not l as my song swells with rejoicing as I upwards to the mysterious wonder-w above? Oh, Caterpillar, what comes you from thence, receive, as I do, un trust."

"That is what you call——"

"Faith," interrupted the Lark.

"How am I to learn fait asked the Caterpillar.

"Teach me your les Lark!" she would say; and e Lark sang to her of the ders of the earth below an the heaven above. And e Caterpillar talked all the of her life to her relation. the time when she should butterfly.

The Only Words He Knew

An impressive story is related in nection with one of the lake campa against recalcitrant Indian tribes in Southwest. Out on the middle of desert, miles from white men, an office the U. S. Army was surprised by hea the sound of a human voice. He distin heard sung the words, "O, how I Jesus!" Fearful of treachery, he advan cautiously, but the voice still kept s ing, "O, how I love Jesus!" A crawling for more than an hour, he covered that the singer was an Ind Covering him with his carbine, he ru at him, ordering him to surrender. Apache threw up both hands and m the sign of peace, continuing to sing, how I love Jesus!" The officer took Indian back to camp, where it learned through the interpreter that had been sent out by one of the Apa chiefs to say that the Indians were re to treat for peace. He was the only dian in that party who could spea word of English, and all he could say "O, how I love Jesus!" which words had learned from a missionary.

ptain Parker's Labors on Behalf of the Sick Poor of New Orleans.

NE of the most unique charities in the South, although not very widely known, is the Convalescent me at New Orleans, La. Its founder and superintendent is Captain Robert Parker, a veteran Christian worker with an interesting history. He was born in Devonshire, England, and from the age of thirteen years, for nearly a quarter of a century he "followed the sea," advancing step by step, m cabin boy, to owner and commander a vessel. Before coming to New Orns, he founded an institution in Swans South Wales, called "the British Workman," the first place of the kind ablished there. Having lost a valuable s by shipwreck, he arrived in that ce with ninety pounds in money. With sum he leased a piece of ground, put a building, and opened a plant, where up of coffee and a cold ch could be had for cost. conducted this for three rs, when, owing to failing lth, he turned it over to ers, to be conducted for the efit of the poor. From es he went to South Amer- He was on the west coast Africa among the natives twelve months; and then arked from Cape Verde to ama, and thence to New ans, where he was led to k on the same charitable

e thus relates his own story the benefit of the readers THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

After quitting the sea, I e my life to religious work he city of New Orleans. feature of it was to visit Charity Hospital every day, over ten years, praying with comforting the sick, and ing religious services every bath. The Charity Hos- opens its doors to all ers who are sick, no matfrom what quarter, and it iten overtaxed. As soon ts patients are well, they t give way to the sick who ever crowding the doors treatment. As a consence, many have to leave the ital who have no place to or sleep, have no money, are too weak to work. The t is that many would re- to the hospital, relapsing ugh exposure and starvai would die, and be carried he Potter's Field, unless kindly souls intervened eir behalf.

The first suggestion came e through these circumces: One morning, several years ago, eived a letter from the station-master railroad running from New Orleans airo, Ill., stating that he had found a dead in a freight car, and that a ament was found in his pocket with name in it. I remembered him as a g man twenty-two years of age, who tle while ago had been discharged the Charity Hospital. I felt sorry him. He was weak, had no money no friends here, and he sought to e his mother in Kansas. Knowing ngineer on the train, he started out. H ot in the freight car, and died before eached Cairo. That incident set my m I at work, and the idea of a home for c alescents took possession of me—a e where people could go after they e the hospital, weak, friendless, and , and find a home until their strength sh id return, and where they could find y pathy and welcome.

The Convalescent Home is a product of long watchfulness of suffering, the result of years of experience in relieving the needs of those who leave the Charity Hospital, as before described. At first, with the help of a Christian lady of New Orleans, who wishes her generosity to be unknown, I started a soup kitchen, the expenses of which she paid. After three years I saw the need of a Home. I began by renting a two-story house on Claiborne street, on faith, and had it completed and furnished to accommodate forty people. After a while, several good men came forward and assisted by chartering the present institution, and it is now an incorporated concern, with a board of twelve trustees and the usual officers. We have a building containing forty-six rooms, which could accommodate one hundred persons, had we sufficient means to furnish it fully. For this building we pay fifty dollars per month rent.

"All that is necessary for an entrance into the home is a certificate of discharge from the Charity Hospital. Those who come are clothed, fed and housed for a month without cost. Neither my wife or I receive any compensation, and neither seek or desire any. It is strictly a labor of love.

"In the years of my labors in this work, this Convalescent Home has entertained within its hospitable walls 8,604 convalescents; fully half of whom might have died in the streets from starvation unless they had gone back to the hospital, while many would have died even there through relapse and prostration. The institution furnishes food and lodging for the night to those who are too poor to pay. It has its own ambulance to bring people from the hospital who are too weak to walk, and also to carry the sick to the hospital. It is a work of faith and love, endeared to our hearts, and is conducted on non-sectarian lines. Its religious services are held under Protestant forms, generally by myself, but attendance upon them is voluntary."

IMPENDING CONFLICT.

Elements Gathering for the Final Struggle of the Nations.

BY DR. NATHANIEL WEST.*

STUDENTS of prophecy, who are also readers of the newspaper, must surely see that the final crisis is impending. The whole world is preparing for the last act in the tragedy of warfare. Christendom is already one vast military camp and naval depot. The son of Pethuel is again on his watch-tower blowing the trumpet in Zion, summoning the nations to "come up" to Jerusalem. Joel in his third chapter has dramatised in the most thrilling manner the scene of the advance of the nations, marching to the "Valley of Decision," where the "Eastern Question" will be "decided."

"Proclaim ye this among the nations, Prepare war. Wake up the mighty men. Let all the men of war draw near. Let them come up. Haste ye, and come, all ye nations round about, and assemble yourselves together." This the summons. "Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord!" This the prayer. "Let the nations bestir themselves, and come up to the Valley of Jehoshaphat, for there will I sit to judge all nations round about." This the locality. "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. Come; tread ye; for the wine-press is full, the vats overflow, for their wickedness is great." This the order. "The Lord will be the hope of his people, and a stronghold to the children of Israel." This last the consolation.

Such is the solemn scene, where the Antichrist is judged and Gentile politics and power go down in blackness and blood. The same scene is given in Isaiah 59:19-21, and 66:5-16; in Daniel 7:9-14; in Zeph. 3:8-20; in Zech. 12:2-14, 13:1, in 14:1-11. It is given in Matthew 25:31-46. It is the scene of the sickle-judgment and the wine-press in Revelation 14:12-20; and of "heaven opened" for the Antichrist's destruction, in Revelation 19:11-21. It follows the Armageddon rendezvous in Revelation 16:12-16, and is the end of the warfare, when the Son of Man comes to "take away the Suitanate" of the Horn, and "consume and destroy it to the end" (Daniel 7:26). All the prophets, Christ and his apostles, have looked to this "End" of our age.

And the nations are prepared for the struggle. The augmented war material, and armies swollen beyond all precedent in times of peace, are the omen of disaster to the world. The army of drilled soldiers of Italy to-day is 1,473,000 men of all arms; of Austria, 2,076,000; of Germany, 4,300,000; of France, 4,300,000; of Russia, 4,800,000—a grand total of 16,949,000 men. Besides these there are the armies maintained by Great Britain, Turkey, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Belgium, Spain, Portugal and the millions in Asia and Africa, and the enormous naval strength of the world.

Yet these Powers are powerless to compel the Turk or each other to justice or humanity. The causes of this vast "military Christendom of the nineteenth century" are familiar to all. They come from the advance of science in destructive agencies, mutual distrust of the nations, their rivalries and jealousies, treachery and breach of treaties, their insistance on the balance of power, the tremendous expansion of commerce, the fact that resistless power knows no moral law, and the ambition of Europe to partition Asia and Africa, and control the mines and markets of the world. The prelude will be the apparent harmony of the "Powers" of the world for a period of time—the "silence for the space of half an hour, in heaven," "the four angels holding back the winds," the solemn hush when the air is breathless and the leaves are motionless; then the thunder-burst of judgment! At such a time Israel's claims will come up for settlement such as Europe, Asia and Africa cannot make. Prepare war! Come up to the Valley of Decision! It is the "Eastern Question." It was the burning question when Joel spoke, 900 B.C., the burning question now, and now as then the nations are waiting the order to march!

That gifted historian, J. von Mueller, has well said, "No thoughtful man can read history, or look upon the face of Christendom, and not be impressed with the conviction that the same law of righteousness that brought the ancient empires to their end, must prevail at last against the empires and kingdoms now existing." Nemesis must come. And say what men may, the battle opens in the same old centre, the Ægean Sea, and the same old question, the relation of the Holy Land and Israel, geographically and politically, as well as religiously, asserts itself as before, as the time of warfare approaches its end. Nor is there anything in international politics anywhere that does not lead to this centre, even as the Roman roads all led to the Golden Milestone of the Forum.

In France the crucial question which agitates society and threatens to wreck the Republic is the Jews; and politicians are divided not on question of finance and foreign policy, but according as they are, or are not, Anti-Semitic in their attitude. Germany ostracizes the Jews; but her Emperor goes in state to their own land. Russia casts them out; but it is their ancient home that she covets. How can it be explained that such a people insignificant in numbers and without a country can hold so prominent a place in international affairs? It is inexplicable until we turn to the Bible and find there that they are the chosen people of God.

In the sketch of the future that the prophets give us, the Jews are equally conspicuous. It is when they are established in their own land, and he who once was called in mockery "King of the Jews" rules over them—and not until then—that the world will enter on its golden age, and men will learn war no more.

The Czar's Peace Plan.

It is now stated that the recent remarkable proposition by the Czar of Russia looking to European disarmament, was based upon, if not indeed, inspired, by a book written by Mr. Bliokh, a retired financier of Warsaw. A cable dispatch gives these interesting details concerning Mr. Bliokh and his work:

His book is a veritable encyclopædia of war, and contains a great mass of facts, figures and analyses. He argues that the European armies have already outgrown practicable limits. The problem of the commissariat alone is now impossible. No railroad can offer transportation capable of supplying the necessary amount of food and ammunition to a modern moving army. It would be impossible for one man to efficiently direct the movements of the present army of Russia, Germany or France. Numbers, beyond a certain point, are disastrous from a military as well as an economical point of view. Unless the economical strain felt by the European peoples is speedily eased, an unparalleled economical catastrophe is certain to result. He suggests that an international arbitration court be created which will have jurisdiction over all concrete questions. If any State fails to submit silently to the awards of the court, the other powers will deprive it of the advantages of the postal and telegraphic union, and also deny it trading facilities, and the other powers will give every assistance to the defendant nation in case any country should declare war.

Missionaries for Khartoum.

The Church Missionary Society has already designated the three missionaries who are to begin the work at Khartoum. One is a clergyman, possessing medical qualifications, who has had some experience in Palestine; the second is a doctor, who has been prominent in the society's medical work in Egypt; the third is Mr. Douglas Thornton, who is known on both sides of the Atlantic, in connection with the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union. No time has yet been fixed for the mission to start up the Nile.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Young Bride's Home Decorations—"Sir Galahad"— Visiting Etiquette, Etc.

"I DO not think quite as my friend Mrs. Hathorne does: That our homes should be bare and plain, because we ought to be fixing our attention on heavenly things, and not setting our affections on those which perish with the using But," said the minister's wife, rolling up the gay strip of afghan in which she had been knitting, "one may have too many articles to take care of in one's home. I have been visiting my cousin, Bertha Ironsides, and I found her down with nervous prostration. Her house is like a museum, so much bric-a-brac, so many statuettes and curios, and vases, so much dusting to be done, day in and day out, you never saw the end of your work, and poor Bertha is one of those very particular housekeepers who cannot sit still if everything is not absolutely polished to the top notch! I just advised her to pack up her beautiful things and put them away, and live with less care. Then I called the doctor to my aid, and he said, 'Mrs. Ironsides is slowly dying of a handsome house, of portieres and screens, and china, and fussing.' So he reinforced my opinion."

"What came of it, finally?" inquired Mrs. Hathorne, who was busily preparing autumn leaves to adorn her walls, dipping each pressed leaf into a bath of thin hot wax. Mrs. Hathorne is a bride, young and strong and full of energy, not worn out as some of us older women are. She can take pride in her little cottage where everything is new, and shining from the maker's hand, and I am sure, with her dried flowers and her growing plants, and her red and yellow leaves, her house will look like a bower the coming winter.

"Well, Bertha consented to let me put by a portion of the decorative part of her furnishing. I tucked the tidies into bureau drawers, and folded the scarfs and centre pieces up in tissue paper. I simplified the dusting, at least.

"Then I prevailed on her to go out for two hours every morning into the fresh air, and to take a glass of milk when she came in, and lie down for an hour. I coaxed her to give the rest cure a chance, then I returned, for I had had my vacation, and it was fully time for me to be looking after Mr. Homily. He never takes his meals regularly when I am gone from home, and his sermons suffer in consequence."

"Well," said a sad-eyed, sallow matron, who has seldom an afternoon to spare for one of our talks, "your cousin must have means and servants, or she couldn't take a rest cure. For some of us, Mrs. Homily, there will never be any rest until we lie down in the grave." And the little lady sighed. My eyes grew dim as I looked at her, for she has a husband who drinks, and she has grown bitterly discouraged and utterly tired out. Nevertheless I ventured to whisper to her, as I bade her good-bye, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him." If she can but get that comfort she will rest.

I FEEL that there can be no arbitrary rule about our housekeeping and house decorating. We must follow out our own bent Mothers may not hinder daughters from taking pleasure in brightening the home. For every one of us there is wisdom in remembering daily God's unchanging word, that, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

To have each day the thing I wish,
Lord, that seems best to me;
But not to have the thing I wish,
Lord, that seems best to thee.
Most truly, then, thy will is done
When mine, O Lord, is crossed;
'Tis good to see my plans o'erthrown,
My ways in Thine all lost.

ON a little easel, on the desk where I write, there stands the picture of a rarely beautiful boy. He was so pure of nature, so strong of heart, so sweet in consecration, that his mother called him her "Sir Galahad." A year ago, in the bright autumn weather, it pleased God suddenly to call this fair soul to the world above, and the home where he had been the only child was left strangely desolate. Yesterday I was talking to the mother, on whose worn and sorrowful face there dwells an almost angelic sweetness of resignation, and she said, "Day by day I am drawn heavenward. I find my joy in ministering to Christ's poor. Wherever there is any one lonely or neglected or in want I am sent, for since my boy was taken from my sight, I live only in getting ready to go to him."

The true way to find comfort in bereavement is to work unselfishly for others. Only thus can sad hearts find comfort.

A SUBSCRIBER.—The eldest daughter or the only daughter of a family simply has her visiting cards engraved Miss Brown or Miss Jones; the second daughter is Miss Mary Brown, and so with the others. It is quite proper for a mother to have a card engraved for certain purposes of formality, acknowledging invitations, etc., Mrs. John Brown, and underneath, the Misses Brown. The more usual way is for each lady to have her own personal cards. In sending out invitations for a series of days, it would be right to do it in this way:

Mrs. John Brown,
Miss Brown,
Miss Annie Brown,
Thursdays in November.

Or,

Mrs. Reginald Jones,
The Misses Jones,
At home Thursday, November 19th, from four to seven o'clock.

There is no mystery about the business of visiting cards. Their use is founded upon common sense, and one does not go very far wrong who consults this. A very appropriate way to invite guests to the wedding of a daughter is to use such a form as this:

MR. and MRS. HENRY LUMAS request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter,
FLORENCE EDITH TO
MR. REGINALD BROOKS LYMAN,
Wednesday afternoon, November twelfth, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight,
at half after two o'clock, at the German Reformed Church.

This is a form from which little variation is permitted. Of course, if the wedding be at home the street and numbers of the house should be given, instead of the church. In some cases cards are inserted for a reception after the ceremony at the bride's future home. Engraved cards are in better taste than printed ones, and are comparatively inexpensive in these days. Cards are sent out by the father and mother of the bride.

I HARDLY know how to answer my next correspondent. You tell me, my friend, that your husband is growing so cross and fault-finding that nothing in the house suits him, no matter how much everybody tries to please and propitiate him. The meat is either cooked to a cinder or else it is raw; he never ate such heavy bread in his life; he cannot understand why you are always cleaning house; he scolds the children, and altogether is behaving like a spoiled child himself. Things must be pretty bad when you can bring yourself, dear lady, to writing all about them in this very candid way. Is there by no chance some reason for Mr. Blank's state of mind? Is the man not a dyspeptic? Are your meals really served on time, and is the cooking as good as it might be? I advise you to be very sure that there is no occasion for criticism. I fear your husband is far from well. Teach the children to respect their father; do not allow yourself to engage in a war of words; do not for an instant think of breaking the bonds which bind you and your husband together, because of transient incompatibility of temper. The truth is there is seldom lack of peace in the home unless both parties are somewhat to blame. People are quite too ready in these days to regard marriage as an arrangement which may or may not be permanent. What God hath joined together let no man put lightly asunder. You would best, I think, bear patiently with those things which irritate and trouble you. You have your children to think of, and the day may come when those children would rather have the honored name of their father and mother unstained: would rather look back to a home unmarred and unbroken than to have to explain to strangers that their parents could not get on together. You say that your husband is an upright and temperate man. This being the case, if he can be made to see himself in the wrong, he will no doubt become mellowed and softened in nature, and change his course.

I advise amiability, and to some extent stoicism. Pay no attention to fault-finding for which there is no reason. By and by, your children will understand and take your part. I once knew a husband and wife who really loved one another, but whose home career was clouded by captious fault-finding on the part of the husband. It really seemed as if he looked about from day to day to see what he could say which was most annoying. For instance, one morning when hot biscuits were brought upon the table, although he was ordinarily fond of them, he turned to his wife and said, "My dear, how often have I asked you never to put hot bread on the table again?" The eldest son, sitting beside his mother, laid his hand caressingly on hers and said, "Mother, dear, cook the rolls in the ice-box after this," which rather turned the moment into pleasantry and put an end to fault-finding for that time. Again I say, be very patient.

REVISIONS OF THE BIBLE.

The Many Changes it Has Undergone in the Passing Centuries—The Latest Revision the Most Perfect Bible Ever Printed.

FROM the time when Caedmon, the pious monk of Whitby, in the seventh century, gave to the world the earliest Anglo-Saxon version of portions of the Scriptures, up to the present day the history of the English Bible has been one long series of translations and revisions, always reaching toward greater purity to the original, and higher perfection in the presentation of Divine truth, and the spirit in which it was first recorded. Throughout the Anglo-Saxon and early English periods, the Book of Books passed through numerous changes in whole or in part. Aldhelm and Guthlac gave the people the first translation of the Psalms. The venerable Bede the Lord's Prayer, the Creed and the Gospel of St. John, and Alfred gave all four Gospels. Wycliffe gave us the first complete English Bible, which, after his death, was revised by Purvey in 1388. Tyndale's appeared in 1525, and Myles Coverdale's Bible ten years later. This was followed by what is known as "The Great Bible" of Grafton in 1539, and the next year Cranmer's Bible was issued. Then came the Puritan (Bodley) version, which was the first Bible to be divided into verses. Archbishop Parker's famous version, the revised translation of fifteen of the most learned men of that time, was issued in 1568. These were the chief among many revisions of the Sacred Book, translated from the Latin, Greek and Hebrew, which appeared during successive periods of spiritual activity and deep research.

Another half-century saw the crowning and grandest effort of all to give the Christian world a perfect Bible. In 1607, forty-seven of the most eminent theological scholars in Great Britain assembled, under the authority of King James, for the purpose of conducting a translation and revision of the entire Bible. Their task occupied three years, and, in 1611, the "Authorized Version" was published to the world. Notwithstanding its unquestioned superiority people were slow to accept it. They and their ancestors had revered the Sacred Book in the older translations, which, though containing many imperfections, had become so precious to them that the alteration of a single line seemed at first regarded as little less than sacrilege. Gradually, however, it was made clear, even to the simplest, that the "Authorized Version" was far more accurate than any that had preceded it, and its acceptance by the hosts of Christendom was fully accomplished in due time. Each successive century has shed new light on God's Word and added a richer fullness to its interpretation. The opening up of Egypt, Palestine, Assyria and the ancient land of Babylonia to exploration and investigation by eminent Christian scientists has disclosed so much that is of inestimable value—ancient manuscripts, engraved tablets, hieroglyphs and other precious writings and monuments in the language and character of Bible times, all corroborative of Bible history—that students of the Word have been astonished and delighted. Page after page of the Book has been illuminated by these important discoveries.

The time was ripe for a new revision. It was begun in May, 1870, and occupied ten years, the Revised New Testament being published in 1881, and the Old Testament in 1885. There were two companies of revisers, including the ripest scholarship of two continents. Reverently and with the most devout aspiration for Divine guidance, they performed their arduous task, and when it was ended, the result was a Bible, unchanged in any essential, yet greatly different from its predecessors in many passages, which, translated in the light of our later and fuller knowledge of ancient languages and dialects, have assumed new, and in many instances, widely different meanings. A few of these passages are reproduced below, with the corresponding passages from the "Authorized Version" in parallel columns, showing the contrast between the two:

AUTHORIZED VERSION.	REVISED VERSION.
For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?—Mark 8 : 36, 37.	For what doth it profit a man, to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life? For what should a man give in exchange for his life?—Mark 8 : 36, 37.
A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly: and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.—Proverbs 18 . 24.	He that maketh many friends doeth it to his own destruction; but there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.—Proverbs 18 . 24.
Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation.—Psa. 68 . 19.	Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden, even the God who is our salvation.—Psa. 68 . 19.
I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him.—Psalms 12 . 5.	I will set him in safety at whom they mock.—Psalms 12 . 5.
Rebuke the company of spearmen.—Psalms 68 . 30.	Rebuke the wild beasts of the reeds.—Psalms 68 . 30.
Fools make a mock at sin; but among the righteous there is favour.—Proverbs 14 : 9.	The foolish scorn the guilt offering; but among the upright there is good will.—Proverbs 14 . 9.
The way of transgressors is hard.—Proverbs 13 . 15.	The way of the treacherous is ragged.—Proverbs 13 . 15.

These contrasts between passages that are familiar to every reader of the Bible, are only a few of hundreds that have been changed, in a greater or less degree, in the Revision. It should be clearly borne in mind that these changes are really in the nature of corrections, which make the printed page conform more accurately to the original text, and which present, with far greater fidelity, the meaning of the inspired writers, than has ever been possible hitherto. Thus it can be said of the revised Bible, with entire truthfulness, that it is the most perfect Bible thus far given to the world. It should be in the hands of every Christian, and every student of the Word, who desires to profit by this great product of consecrated scholarship. Soon the "Authorized Version" will have gone the way of its predecessors, and the Revision will take its place in the home, the church, and the Sunday School. As the closest approach that has yet been possible to the letter and spirit of Divine truth, it will be hailed as a blessing by all who have the spiritual welfare of mankind at heart, and who delight in God's Word as originally delivered to the saints.

CHRISTIAN RECREATION.

The Dangers that Beset the Lord's People in Worldly Pleasure. Isa. 35: 1-10.

There is a kind of borderland between the church and the world, that is doubtful country. When a man is seen there, people cannot tell with any certainty whether he belongs to the kingdom on the right, or to that on the left. This borderland touches on business, on politics and on the home, but its most crowded thoroughfare is that of recreation. Every religious teacher has at some time to answer such questions as: Is it a sin to go to the theatre? Is there any harm in dancing, or playing cards, or novel-reading? The answers are various and are not always consistent with one another. The difficulty is increased by the fact that these amusements are of many grades and may be deprived of their most objectionable features. The difference, for example, between a novel by George Macdonald and a French novel full of moral nastiness, has to be taken into account in giving an answer. So there are degrees of risk in the other recreations. Unhappily there is a danger of persons who begin with the innocent, going on to the deleterious, a danger which should not be overlooked. Recreation is necessary, especially for young people. There is no merit in the kind of life which leads to dulness and monotony. God never intended his children to deny themselves innocent pleasure, nor will he reward those who do so. That fact established and clearly admitted, discrimination must be exercised. If a person finds that a certain amusement unfits him for prayer, that it produces in his being thoughts which disturb him afterwards, that it nourishes the elements of evil to which he is specially liable — that amusement is one that he should avoid. It is not necessary that he condemn it, or condemn those who indulge in it; but it is bad for him, and he should have nothing to do with it. Every young Christian should remember that in this matter of recreation he is on debatable ground, and while he is there he should be vigilant, lest insidious evil get an advantage over him. Besides this, he should never forget that when the world sees him seeking his pleasures in its ways, it will draw the inference that he has found religion incapable of satisfying his nature.

A NEW HOME DEPARTMENT QUARTERLY.

Beginning with the first quarter of 1899, we will issue a special Home Department Edition of the Comprehensive Quarterly. The COMPREHENSIVE QUARTERLY is admirably adapted for Home Work, and has been largely used for that purpose, but it was thought that an edition with special introductory matter, and other changes, would more nearly meet the requirements of those interested in Home Department Work.

The Home Department Edition will contain 64 pages, being the same size as the COMPREHENSIVE SCHOLAR, and will contain all the engravings, descriptive matter and other features, besides three pages of special introductory matter. It will be better adapted for Home Work than any other quarterly published.

Many persons in our homes are cut off from the Sunday-school by ill-health, age, household or business cares. Yet they too ought to pursue some systematic study of God's Word. Enlist them as members of the Home Department. Many Sunday-schools have sustained a Home Department for years with most excellent results. It has given the impetus and help which comes through the study of the Bible by the entire family.

Price.—In lots of five or more, to one address, 13c. each per year, or 3¼c. per quarter. Write for sample copy, which will be sent free. Address,

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

STUDYING THE BIBLE BOOK BY BOOK.*

THE best way to master the Bible is to master one book at a time. It makes comparatively little difference what book is selected, for the careful study of one will lead the way to the study of those most closely connected with it, and thus to the study of all. The majority of people must make Bible study of this sort an avocation, to which they may be able to devote at the utmost a few hours a week; their duties as teachers in the Sunday School, or as members of the church, consume the chief part of their spare time. Truly remarkable results, however, can be gained by the devotion of a little time, week by week, to one single line of effort. One who aims to read the Bible through, from cover to cover, once a year, may be no nearer to becoming a Biblical scholar than the boy who rattles off the multiplication table is to becoming a mathematician.

The basis for the exact and fruitful study of any Biblical book must always be a grasp of its course of thought as outlined in the book itself. This defines and reinforces the impression produced in reading, and affords a safe starting point for investigation. The test to be applied at this stage of the work is the ability to think through the book, and compare paragraph with paragraph without referring to the Bible. It is enough at first to be able to do this by sections of thought.

The last principle that need be mentioned is a comprehensive one. When one has gained a hold upon the contents of a book, he should study it from every possible point of view—its relation to other Biblical books, its contribution to various Biblical problems, its literary form and structure, its religious content, the element of revelation, or other interesting questions, determined by experience or special purpose. This will be a never ending pleasure, for as one's knowledge of the Bible increases, new points of view suggest themselves for investigation and comparison. It is understood that the student has selected a book not because he wishes to make an immediate use of it, but because he wishes to master it. He is not to be hurried. If necessary, he is willing to spend a year of special study upon it. The order of work suggested is only one good method, approved by its excellent results, but claiming no pre-eminence.

The first step to take is a thoughtful reading. If possible, the book should be read at a sitting, the general impression of its theme and substance thus made being considered and written down, read through at a sitting once more, the impression corrected, and so on, until a fairly well defined notion of the book as a whole, has been formed. The nature of the impression expected will vary with the book selected. In a history one might determine the point of view of the compiler; in a gospel, the "leading ideas;" in an epistle, the "key-note." In each the student would record no more than his impression. The next step is to correct or extend this impression by considering a logical arrangement of the contents of the book. Many analyses will be available in Bible helps, commentaries, etc.

An analysis is an excellent guide in mastering the contents—no more. It is not wise to commit an analysis to memory until one is convinced that it exactly represents his own ripest thought. It is a convenient intellectual crutch, to be gradually disused or exchanged for something better.

Guided by the analysis adopted, the student should take up the mastery of the contents of the book, section by section. He should aim to get at the thought of each section, and to get at all of it. Reading will not accomplish this, for the reader unconsciously ignores much of his text. The only sure way of accomplishing it is to make a paraphrase in case of a connected train of thought, as in an epistle or a prophetic book, or to make a condensed summary of the facts in case one is studying a historical book or gospel. A paraphrase of this sort is not difficult after a little practice. It merely reproduces the Biblical statements in plain language, but in the spirit and form of the original passage. It compels the student to interpret, as well as read, with exactness. In a similar way, the statements or the narrative of a gospel or historical book should be summarized section by section.

After a book has been mastered in detail in this way, the student should correct his analysis. He is now in a position to make an analysis of his own, one based upon the contents as he interprets them, and emphasizing the leading conception which has impressed him. It is quite possible that the plain analysis, based on the simple facts, may not be the correct one, even for a historical book. First Samuel, for example, is a book which uses historical facts to set forth a religio-political theme. An analysis which fails to recognize the theme is an imperfect analysis. It must always be kept in mind, however, that the best analysis is one's own. An imperfect one of his own make is worth more to a student than any which is furnished to him. He uses the latter only that he may be able to make the former.

By this time the student has obtained an excellent mastery of the book as a product of thought. He should be able to think through it at will, and to estimate it as a whole. But he is only at the threshold of his study of the book. He is ready for its topical treatment. What the topics should be depends, again, upon the book that is being studied. The following are suitable for any book: The literary structure (in which one's own plan may be compared with those found in commentaries); indications as to the author or the time of writing; information regarding the geographical, ethnological, political, social or religious conditions of the day; the imagery of the book, its religious teachings, etc. Any student who begins to study topically will soon make his own list of topics.

When the book has been traversed again and again from many points of view, the student begins to know it in such an intimate way that he becomes a specialist so far as it is concerned. He then is ready to take up another book in the same fashion. The Bible, thus mastered, becomes one's real property, an infinitely precious possession, a source of unlimited suggestion and of wonderful power.

OUR COUNTRY FOR THE WORLD!

OUR Country for the World! we sing,
But in no worldly way;
Our country to the Lord we bring,
And fervently we pray:
God make her true; God make her pure;
God make her wise and good;
And through her may the Christ make sure
Man's world-wild brotherhood!

America! America!
'Gainst wrong thy might be hurled;
For thee we lift our loud acclaim
Our Country for the World!

O broader than her wide domains
Be her designs divine:
And richer than her golden veins
Her charities benign;
Firmer than buttressed mountain-tower
Her steadfast faith in thee;
Her triumphs nobler through thy power
Than gain on land or sea!

Great God! Our Country for the World!
And all the world for thee!
Christ's banner o'er all lands unfurled
In high expectancy!
Fair day of God, speed on, speed on!
Speed truth and peace and love;
'Till all below for him be won
Who reigns o'er realms above!

The Apostle of "Zionism."

Dr. Theo. Herzl, of Vienna, the leader of the Zionist movement in Europe, recently visited London. He addressed a great audience of Jews in one of the largest meeting-halls of the British metropolis, and was greeted with the wildest enthusiasm. It will be remembered that a concise history of the Zionist movement appeared in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sometime ago, since which time it seems to have made very substantial progress in England and on the continent of Europe. In the course of his address, Dr. Herzl said: "My words to the West have fallen on deaf ears, but my words to the East are producing an abundant harvest; yes, the East belongs to us." He ridiculed the argument that the Jews had only a religious mission and were scattered abroad to teach the nations. "They call us dreamers," he continued. "Why dreamers? Have we not abundant talent, capacity, capacity as artisans, and is not Palestine a fruitful soil on which to lavish them? Within the very near future the exodus to Palestine will begin in earnest, and already the bark is practically launched into existence."

His visit has given a marked impetus to the Zionist movement in England and created the utmost excitement among the many thousands of Jews in the East end of London.

WAITING HARVESTS.

The Ever-Recurring Need of Gospel Effort. Matt. 9: 36-38.

How large the spiritual harvest is, and how necessary it is for every servant of Christ to be a reaper, may be realized from the fact that in sixty or seventy years from now every Christian minister and teacher now on earth will be dead. A new generation will be here, and it depends on the work now being done, what will be its character. Suppose the church should end all its aggressive work, closed its Sunday Schools, recalled its missionaries, compelled its ministers to devote themselves to the improvement of persons already converted, and made no effort to win souls for Christ, what kind of a world would this be at the end of the twentieth century? It is appalling to think of the sin and iniquity that would prevail. The effect, therefore, is one of degree. If the church relaxes its efforts, if the children now growing up in this and other lands, are not sought and won, there will be a retrogression. As each generation rises, the work that was done thirty or forty years ago must be repeated on the new field. Nor must this work be left to the ministers. Every Christian ought to be a sower and a reaper. Each has his own plot in his family, in his circle of friends, and in his business connections. It depends on individual effort what the future is to be. This is true of our own country and of heathen lands. We have not the organizations necessary for reaching every land on earth, but they are only the nucleus of what they must be if the command of Christ is to be obeyed and the Gospel preached to every creature. Every man who dies without having heard the offer of salvation through Christ is a reproach to the church, and they are dying at the thousand every day. Truly, the harvest is plenteous, but as in the time of Christ, the reapers are few.

PARDON AND JUDGMENT.

The Two-Fold Aspect of God's Character Reasonable and True. Micah 7: 18, 19; Nahum 1: 3, 8.

There is no inconsistency in the two aspects of God's character presented by these prophets. He is a patient, longsuffering God, but he is also a God who punishes iniquity. It is possible to dwell on the one or the other of these aspects and to state only the absolute truth and yet to misrepresent the divine nature. It would be so in our own social and political relations. Everyone has been in homes where parents are so indulgent and so fond of their children, that they do not reprove sin, and we say the children are spoiled. If we had a governor of a State who pardoned every criminal, we know what kind of a State that would soon become. Yet on the other hand, either in the family or the state, the cold, merciless, unsympathetic nature at the head of affairs would do mischief. There must be a combination of love and severity in order to produce good government. We look for this in the Governor of the universe and we find it. God bears with men when they sin, he is ready to pardon them when they repent; but if they continue in sin, if they will not repent, what must we expect at his hands? There are fathers who go on in sin and are hoping that in the end God will be merciful and will not in their behalf execute his threats, who in their own families are too wise to deal so with their children. They know that it is not true kindness to a boy to let his wrongdoing go unpunished and that for his own sake he must be made sorry for his misconduct. The character of God presented in the Bible is the one that is best fitted for the wise government of the world and it is the full of encouragement to the penitent, for out of dire terror to the unpenitent.

A Prison-Born Canary.

Strong encouragement often comes to the Bowery Mission workers from within prison walls; as when letters are received from wardens and from prisoners themselves, showing that the good seed sown is bearing fruit, even in a convict's cell. Some come from men, who, after conversion, have voluntarily given themselves up to punishment. A letter may come from one, who, after leading a steadfast life for months, under stress of sudden temptation, falls, and finds himself in a cell, where his penitence and efforts to lead a true life affect his comrades, and bring into prison walls the saving leaven of the Bowery Mission influence. The following letter to John H. Wyburn, Superintendent of the Bowery Mission, from an inmate of the Massachusetts State Prison, and accompanied by the gift of a tuneful prison-raised canary, exemplifies the hold which the Bowery Mission and its workers retain upon hearts they have touched:

If I can do anything for you I will do it. I am sending you a little bird. I want you to accept this gift of love and friendship. This little bird is a year old and sings nicely; he is a pet and he will eat out of your hand; he will play with you, and he will stay on your shoulder or head in the room, and then go back to his cage. You will like him and take good care of him. You will have to cover him up on one side in the night, as he has not shed his feathers yet. I want you to have him; you will love him when you see him, I know you will. I am trying to live here an honest life, and I have the good will of all the officers.

FOR YOU..

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common sense way, that is by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of the stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

Manila Needs the Gospel.

A Loud Call for Missionaries for the Philippines. The Field White to the Harvest.

MAJOR JOHN B. KETCHUM, secretary United States Soldiers' Christian Aid Association, who has recently returned from the front, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the great field opened by the war for missionary effort in Cuba and Porto Rico, and particularly at Manila, in the Philippine Islands. He encloses a letter, received on October 15, from Brigade-Chaplain Charles C. Pierce, United States Army, who was relieved from duty at Fort Apache, Arizona, at his own request, and is now at Manila. The letter reads in part as follows:

"I wish you were here. The missionary field in this city is white for the harvest.

"To-morrow I hold the first service for English residents. They need, and must have, a church at once. Heretofore, this has been prohibited. It seems strange that while the Pope is clamoring for 'freedom of worship' in the United States, the Roman priesthood here, with singular infelicity, bewail the erection of a Protestant chapel. But an English gentleman has placed his residence—a palatial one—at my disposal, and I am to baptize his child next Sunday.

"I have been able to give medical assistance to scores of the natives, and, happily, with uniformly good results; and now they ask to be told about this new religion from America, which is so different and so free, contrasted with the organized system of robbery from which they have so long suffered.

"There is an immense field here for a medical missionary, as well as others; and if the Protestant churches of the United States are awake to their opportunity they will hurry missionaries to Manila and begin work. If I could do the work of ten men I should not be idle. If you were here, personally, to superintend, I should account it a great gain."

Major Ketchum says he regrets that age prevents him from accepting the chaplain's invitation; but prays that the Lord of the Harvest will send forth laborers unto his harvest.

Fatal Procrastination.

A Christian worker relates this striking experience, which carries with it a grave lesson to all who are persistently "putting off" the day of grace: "A request was made to us one evening to go at once and see a dying man. We promised to go, and left our meeting in charge of a friend and started off, a friend and his wife accompanying us. On arriving I went upstairs to see the sufferer and find out whether he was strong enough to bear visitors in his room. On reaching the bedside I spoke of Jesus, and at once found the sick one did not like the mention of that name. I found he had attended a place of worship for years, and was generally considered a Christian man, but had never been converted. As I spoke to him of Jesus and his power to save, of his vast love and condescension, he said: 'It's no use! Don't tell me! I know all about it! It's too late! I've sinned away my day of grace! Get out of my room! Don't say any more! Hell has already begun, and when you speak of these things you only make my agony the worse.' After entreaties and prayers I reluctantly left, and joined those who had been waiting on God in prayer downstairs. We waited a little longer, not liking to leave, and yet not knowing what to do. I ventured once more to accompany the sick man's wife to his room, but as soon as he saw me he again cried: 'Get out of my room! I can't bear your presence. Hell has begun, and you only make it worse.' I besought him with tears to seek the Lord, though in the eleventh hour, but he would not heed, and sprang out of bed, exclaiming: 'It's no use; I'm lost! Get out of my room, I say! I can't bear you to talk about Jesus. I'm lost!' Sad at heart, I went downstairs, and we left the house at midnight, scarcely able to speak as we walked along. The man lived only a few hours."

Fruit vs. Alcohol.

A writer in an European temperance journal calls attention to the value of fruit as an antidote to the craving for liquor. He says: "In Germany, a nation greatly in advance of other countries in matters relating to hygiene, alcoholic disease has been successfully coped with by the adoption of pure diet and natural curative agencies. I have said that the use of fresh fruit is an antidote for the drink crave, and this is true. I have met working men who have told me that fruit has often taken away the crave for drink; I met a clergyman recently, who assured me that a diet consisting largely of fruit had taken entirely away an hereditary craving that had troubled him for years. It may be asked, how can fruit and pure diet do all this? The explanation is simple. Fruit may be called Nature's medicine. Every apple, every orange, every plum, and every grape is a bottle of medicine. An orange is three parts water—distilled in Nature's laboratory—but this water is rich in peculiar fruit acids medicinally balanced, which are specially cooling to the thirst of the drunkard, and soothing to the diseased state of his stomach. An apple or an orange eaten when the desire for "a glass" arises would generally take it away, and every victory would make less strong each recurring temptation. The function of fresh fruit and succulent vegetables is—not so much to provide solid nourishment as to supply the needful acids and salines for the purification of the blood. Once get the blood pure, every time its pure nutrient stream bathes the several tissues of the body, it will bring away some impurity, and leave behind an atom of healthy tissue, until in time the drunkard shall stand up purified—in his right mind.

Broncho-Pneumonia and Bronchial Obstruction.

Dr. Hunter's Lecture No. 5.

I have described acute brohchitis when not combined with the pulmonary disease. Bronchitis does not readily extend itself from the mucous membrane to other lung tissues, which curious fact is accounted for by the mucous membrane receiving its blood from the bronchial arteries and veins, while the other parts of the lungs are supplied by the pulmanary artery. But it does sometimes spread to the substance of the lung and then produces a double disease which combines the perils of both Bronchitis and Pneumonia.

Old people are the most liable to this and in them it is called broncho-pneumonia. Patients with this affection have, at first, only simply bronchitis, with a shortness of breath and some expectoration. Then suddenly, without warning, the inflammation attacks the pulmonary tissue accompanied by an enormous increase of secretion and great oppression of breathing. In some it is relieved naturally by a copious expectoration, but in others the fever, cough and expectoration increases alarmingly and within a few days ends the patients' life, although no such catastrophe had been apprehended. The patient dies because of the sudden filling up of the air tubes and cells with a vicid secretion which he has not strength to expectorate.

A very common source of danger in all bronchial cases is obstruction of the bronchial tubes. It may occur in any case and at any age. It sign is sudden, extreme difficulty of breathing, which is only relieved by a violent fit of coughing which expells a tenatious plug of mucus. Unless this is expelled the shortness of breath increases producing death by suffocation. In this way many attacks of bronchitis prove fatal. Andral, a celebrated French writer on lung diseases, relates two such deaths. A coachmah, 50 years old, had obstinate pulmonary catarrh which had often been relieved but not cured. All the usual sounds of bronchial disease were heard by listening to his chest;—the snoring sound of one in deep sleep, the blowing sound of a bellows and the cooing sound of a dove, were exactly simulated. On the last occasion of his applying for help his breathing was still tolerably free and no immediate danger was anticipated. The next morning he was found in great distress for breath. In the middle of the night, he said, a violent fit of coughing had come on and from that moment his breathing was an incessant struggle for life. On examination it was found that no air entered the upper lobe of the right lung, which until now had always been considered his best lung. The struggle for breath went on and he was soon dead. The post-mortem showed the right bronchus completely closed by tough mucus, so no air could enter that lung. In the other case the plug of vicid mucus was in the left bronchus—the symtoms were similar and the case ended fatally.

It must seem strange to people that shutting up so small a part of the lungs could prove fatal when people live on and often recover after a large part of both lungs are impermeable to air. The only explanation is that in one case the privation of air comes on gradually and in the other suddenly.

Obstruction of the tubes in bronchial cases is always to be suspected when great shortness of breath comes on without any apparent cause. We must open up the lungs and help the expectoration. The prompt removal of the obstructing matter is the only thing that can bring relief. The treatment which I have followed to the saving of hundreds of such cases was fully indicated in lecture No. 3, in my treatment of the case at the Grammercy Park Hotel.

This Wonderful Century.

Some of the Differences between "Old Times" and the Present.

A little four-page sheet, hardly more than a leaflet in size; the paper was coarse, the type was big and black, there were no pictures, and the reading-matter was mainly selected from religious periodicals. Such was the first number of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, published in 1827. From it we turned to a recent bound volume of THE COMPANION,—nearly seven hundred broad and beautiful pages,—a household library of the choicest literature.

It is most interesting to trace the steps of THE COMPANION'S growth and compare the past and present. For instance, in an 1832 issue, the editor congratulated himself on his two thousand subscribers; but now nearly three thousand copies of THE COMPANION go every week to subscribers in the one far Western State of Montana! In 1849 the editor said that the expenses of the paper amounted to three thousand dollars in a year; but at the present time, three thousand dollars would barely pay for the white paper that THE COMPANION uses in three days!

People respect THE COMPANION because they know it to be trustworthy. They admire it, too, for its intelligent enterprise, its willingness to make any expenditure that will tend to interest and benefit its readers. And its readers love it and look upon it as "one of the family," an old and faithful friend. There is no family, we may add, that would not be the happier for THE COMPANION'S weekly visits; and there is no member of any family—from the grandfather to "the littlest one"—who will not find in its pages something that seems written especially for him or her. The list of its contributors is truly a roll of honor, a gathering of all the great names, all the men and women who are pre-eminent in literature, art, science, industry and Christian enterprise. Their best thoughts, the stories, sketches and poems that make them famous or show how they became so, appear in THE COMPANION.

A list of the contributors already engaged for the new 1899 volume would be found to contain the most eminent names in statecraft, in scholarship, in fiction and poetry, in science, and in the wide world of action. Many a famous traveller and explorer will add to the knowledge and delight of young readers of THE COMPANION. What could promise more to eager youth, for example, than Sir Clements Markham's article, "Opportunities for Young Explorers?"

Conspicuous among the story-tellers who will contribute to THE COMPANION during 1899 will be Bret Harte, W. D. Howells, Sarah Orne Jewett, William Black, Hayden Carruth, Ray Stannard Baker, Henry M. Stanley, Edward Everett Hale, Herbert E. Hamblen and Jane Barlow. There will be groups of stories—"Tales from the Cables," telling of incidents in the lives of operators at remote stations of the great cable lines; "Humorous Stories," abounding in honest fun with none of the wit that wounds; "Tales of the Toilers," reflecting the deep pathos of modern industrial conditions; "Stories of the Sea," full of the mystery of the deep, the strange adventures, the perils, the fine courage of sailors, and "Stories by Missionaries," in which the interest of a thrilling tale is united to brilliant pictures of little-known races in far-off lands.

Those who subscribe at once will receive free from the time of subscription the remaining issues of 1898, containing articles and stories by Frank R. Stockton, Rudyard Kipling, Mary E. Wilkins, Hon. Thomas B. Reed, William D. Howells and Mme. Lillian Nordica. In addition, new subscribers will receive the Christmas gift of THE COMPANION Calendar for 1899. This Calendar is in the form of a floral heart, a dainty design of violets bordered with gold. This unfolds, revealing exquisite reproductions of three original paintings. In the centre is a figure picture, "An American Girl." At each side is an emblematic panel—figure-pieces, entitled respectively, "Early Daisies" and "Among the Wheat." Reproduced as they are in twelve colors, these pictures preserve the softest tones, as well as the most brilliant shades, of the costly originals.

This Calendar and the remaining issues of 1898 are alone worth the subscription price of the new volume. They are presented with the compliments of the publishers with a view to extending still farther the fame of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

M. E. S., Johnstown, Pa. What is the Sabbath day's journey mentioned in Acts 1:12 and other passages?

Under the strict interpretation of the law of the Sabbath, all travel was forbidden; but as it would have been absurd to prohibit attendance on public worship, the Rabbis permitted a short journey. This was limited to a walk of two thousand yards from the home, and that distance commonly came to be described as a Sabbath day's journey.

Inquirer, Lorimer, Ia. How much money does it take to support a grown woman per year in the necessities of life, that is, to keep her in necessary clothing, fuel, food and a place to live in, she doing her own cooking?

It depends altogether upon circumstances. There are women and men, too, for that matter, who can support themselves on very little. We have known men with large families, who had only a few hundred dollars a year income, and precarious at that, yet who got along somehow; but your question affords no data for a reasonable answer. In large cities the cost of living is much greater than in rural districts, but even there it costs a good deal to live in the simplest way. The tone of your letter would seem to indicate that there is a desire somewhere to ascertain the lowest possible figure at which a woman can be forced to exist. If there is such a purpose, we advise you not to be a party to it. "The liberal soul shall be made fat" (Proverbs 11:25), is an excellent thing to remember in dealing with such questions.

Inquirer, Harlem, N. Y. Which star is supposed by astronomers to be the centre of the stellar system, the capital city of the universe? Can it be the North Star, distant from the earth 28,000 times farther than the earth is from the sun? Its light is 47 years coming to the earth—200,000 miles a second.

Some astronomers offer the opinion that the star, Alcyone, which is said to be a sun and centre of a system, is the centre of the universe. This, however, is purely conjectural. Still other stars have been named as the possible centre.

J. J. S., Indianapolis, Ind. I have read somewhere that there is a tradition that John the Beloved was translated, as Enoch was. Can you give me any information about the matter, or tell me how and from whom I can obtain information?

If there is such a tradition, we do not know it. It may, however, exist, and, if so, is not improbably founded on the Saviour's expression in John 21:23, in which the Beloved Apostle himself was referred to.

Father, Lexington, Ky. Do you think it right for me to permit my children to play innocent games on Sunday? They are good children, and sometimes when they have a little leisure on Sunday afternoons they feel like a game of croquet or something of that sort. Am I right in giving my consent?

We hardly think you can ask such a question seriously. Sunday should be devoted to spiritual duties, rest and recreation, and Christian people should refrain from all worldly avocations and amusements on that day. There are six days in the week in which your children can indulge, to their heart's content, in innocent sport, but they should be taught that Sunday is the Lord's day and that to play games on that day is desecration. If time hangs heavily on their hands, give them a good, helpful book to read—something that will entertain, and, at the same time, turn their thoughts to a spiritual channel. Sacred song is another, and most profitable, way of spending a Sunday leisure hour or two. The very little ones can either be interested with Bible stories, or illustrated cards or books of Scripture lands and events.

H. L. M. K., Waynesville, Ill. A man in our neighborhood refuses to go to church or to allow his children to go to Sunday school because he says he is a Plymouth Brother. What reason do Plymouth Brethren have for such conduct? What was the origin of the sect?

The Brethren originated in the labors of John Darby, in 1825, and at the first and chief band met at Plymouth, England, they are generally known as Plymouth Brethren. John Darby was a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but seceded from it under the conviction that ministers ordained by man were not contemplated by the New Testament. He also believed that organized churches were not in accord with the book. In this he resembled the Society of Friends, but unlike them he sanctioned baptism, and celebrated the Lord's Supper every Sunday. His adherents profess no creed but that of the Bible, holding that creeds are man-made instruments, but they are practically in accord with Evangelical Christians on the cardinal doctrines. They abominate the name of a sect and the idea of a system. Their idea is that of a fellowship and the freedom of any Christian to preach and expound the Word.

S. A. J., Holland, So. Dak. Ordinarily speaking, it would not be usury, which is extortion, or taking advantage of necessity. Usury is where the lender pinches the borrower and exacts the largest possible returns for his loans. In some States, the legal rate of interest is higher than in others, and it is quite possible that, in certain cases, this latitude might operate injuriously to the borrower, who finds himself unable to comply with the legal demands. In such extreme cases, to enforce even the legal limit would be usury.

Ed. C., Waterbury, Conn. Is not a minister the servant rather than the master of his congregation?

The question would seem to betray friction between pastor and people. A minister is truly a servant—such is the literal meaning of the word; but he is also the teacher, leader, counselor, shepherd and spiritual guide of his flock. In his own person, he combines many functions. Unfortunately, there are in some congregations domineering natures, which can see only the single duty for the occupant of the pulpit, and such people generally believe in making their pastor a servant indeed, thereby restricting his usefulness and robbing his ministry of half its value.

Constant Reader, Detroit, Mich. As the work of the Christian Commission is practically over, some of those who contributed through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would like to know 1. The spiritual outcome of the work as a whole. 2. Whether the conversions are not merely ephemeral and liable to lapse. 3. What THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has done or is doing, outside of the aid it rendered to the Christian Commission.

1 Mr Moody's estimate of 5,000 conversions has been corroborated from many sources and is probably under the mark. 2. It is impossible to judge of their permanency until time elapses to afford opportunity for such judgment. The indications, however, are that the work has been deep and will be lasting. 3. It has distributed 20,000 War Testaments among the soldiers and sailors, and has sent to the camps quantities of literature besides. Many of its readers have been actively aiding the Women's National War Relief Association and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Home at Mont-Lawn is now occupied by convalescent soldiers from many States, with Association nurses and physicians in charge.

James P., Kalamazoo, Mich. What is the extent of the population over which Queen Wilhelmina rules?

About 40,000,000, of which only 5,000,000 are in Holland proper, and the rest in the Dutch East Indian Colonies: Java, Madura, Sumatra, Borneo, Celebes, and the Moluccas

Amanda L., Indianapolis, Ind. Kindly explain to me what are the "Bridgewater Treatises?"

Rev. Francis H. Egerton, Earl of Bridgewater in 1825, left the interest of $40,000 to the author of the best treatise on "The Power, Wisdom and Goodness of God, as manifested in Creation." Eight treatises are published, the authors being Chalmers, Kidd, Whewell, Bell, Roger, Buckland, Kirby and Prout.

H. R., Roanoke, Va. What is the difference between a fort and a fortress?

A fort, strictly speaking, is a small enclosed work, erected to command the approaches to a fortified town or harbor. The name is also applied to a fortified trading-post, or any fortified point of outlook. A fortress is a city or town, surrounded by regular works of defence, that require to be invested by an attacking force, and subjected to a regular siege before it can be reduced. The words, however, are often used interchangeably.

FISHING BOATS ON THE BANKS OF THE NILE.

From Cairo, at the Nile's mouth, up as far as the traveler goes along that historic river, scenes similar to that shown in our illustration may be witnessed. The shallow, light-draught vessels—each with its mast stepped well forward, and with long, slanting spars, on which the sails have been loosely furled—lie together alongshore, rocked lazily by the sluggish tide. Women and children wade in the shallows, filling earthen jars with water that is neither pure nor sparkling.

A reader, Joseph Barkheimer, Winterset, Ia., sends the following:

THE APOSTLES' NAMES IN RHYME.

The names of the twelve I'll put into line,
And if I should fail in making them rhyme,
You can try it yourself, if you only have time.
There are Andrew and Peter (which signifies "stone");
Bartholomew stands in the line all alone;
James and John are the sons of good old Zebedee,
And James, called "the Less," a martyr was he.
Then Philip, of Cana, in sweet Galilee,
And Thomas, the doubter, oh, how could he be!
And Simon, not he who is mentioned in Acts,
And publican Matthew, who gathered the tax.
Then Jude makes eleven, my story's nigh told;
And Judas, the traitor, his Master who sold.

Homer M. Messenger, Co. K, 14th Regt. Infantry, Military Station No. 1, Manila, Philippines, writes us, appealing for good literature for our soldiers stationed there. He says: "Your readers can do a good turn for the soldiers in this foreign land by sending any suitable literature they can spare."

Our request for good literature for our troops in Porto Rico has met with a hearty response, as this letter shows:

Church, South, in 1886. W. S. Tomey, the Assistant Superintendent, was a soldier in the U. S. Army. He was discharged in 1889, and in 1891 began the Christian life. He applied for a license to preach, and received orders at the annual conference of the M. E. Church, South, in 1897. John Lewis, another of the band, is an earnest, zealous worker, a thorough Christian, and an exhorter in one of the leading Methodist churches in the city of Houston. W. B. Phillips, another worker, was converted six years ago, and is also a licensed preacher. He holds an "invitation meeting" every night upon the street corner. Miss Camilla Bradburn is organist, and there are a number of ladies who also assist in supplying the music for the gatherings. Professor Groom, Harry Bradburn and others also render efficient aid.

The open-air work, as well as that in the mission hall, is wholly unsectarian. Nothing is preached "save Christ and him crucified." Our photograph on this page shows only a part of the gathering at one of the out-door services. The Houston open-air Gospel movement is growing, and as a purifying, refining and saving influence it merits the cordial support of Christian people everywhere.

He Saved Fifty Lives.

William Adams, of Gorleston-on-Sea, England, has saved fifty lives from drowning. He is son of a pilot of that port. When only eleven years of age he pluckily attempted, with almost miraculous success, the rescue of a girl who had fallen off from the end of some piles into deep water. Since then he has been the means of saving exactly fifty lives—a world's record. He received the bronze medal and certificate of the Royal Humane Society for one of his most daring deeds—the rescue of a lad named Drane, eleven years of age. This year a young man named Miller and seven children, whose lives were in great peril, have to be thankful for the timely and expert assistance of Adams. A recent rescue has added one more laurel to his fame.

A JOYFUL CELEBRATION.

Laying the Corner-Stone of the New Industrial Institute of Mayesville, S. C.

NEWS comes from Sumter, S. C., that work has been commenced on the institution to which many hundreds of colored children and their parents are looking forward as the promise of a new era in their lives. They have heard how friends in the North are responding to their urgent appeals for help in securing an education, and they now see their hopes approaching fruition. The Freeman, of Sumter, S.C., gives a graphic account of the beginning of the work on the new building. It was a rainy day at the outset, but every road leading to Mayesville was thronged with vehicles at an early hour. By ten o'clock the rain ceased, and Mayesville was filled with colored people from the surrounding country. There was a procession of the children in the schools, their parents and the friends of the institution, to the African M. E. Church, where the first part of the proceedings would take place. The building was densely crowded, and when the audience started "America" the walls echoed with the jubilant notes. Rev. Thomas Brown offered prayer, and Rev. E. F. McDonald delivered an address on the significance of the occasion. Congratulatory speeches were made by other friends of the colored race, and then the melodious strains of "Only an Armor-Bearer" rang out. The procession reformed and proceeded to the site of the new building, where, with appropriate ceremonies, the corner-stone was "well and truly laid."

The Freeman says that the new building will be one of the finest in Mayesville and describes the enthusiasm of the colored people at the prospect of seeing their long cherished hopes realized. It is astonishing how much they have given and collected to aid in the work. Their perseverance and self-denial are strong evidence of their interest in the institution and are pledges of the devotion with which they will appropriate its advantages.

As our readers are aware, it is proposed to make the Institute a practical help to boys and girls in the struggle of life. Blacksmithing, carpentering, and other useful trades are to be taught to the boys, and domestic accomplishments to the girls, as well as the usual elements of an English education. Thus there is hope that the colored youth of the neighborhood will enter the field of labor equipped for useful service, and will no longer join the already over-full ranks of unskilled labor. Much has already been accomplished. The ground is bought and paid for. A small building, also paid for, is in occupation: and is crowded with eager, earnest, intelligent children. A substantial balance still remains of the fund to pay initial expenses. About two thousand dollars has yet to be raised to complete the building, but the interest already manifested in the project by generous friends in the North, is an assurance that the whole sum will be subscribed as it is needed. It is gratifying to know that although the enterprise was initiated by the colored people themselves and the nucleus of the fund contributed by them, the white people of the district are cheerfully and generously helping them, both with gifts and counsel. This is an excellent augury of success, and is an evidence that the white people appreciate the noble ambition and untiring energy of their colored fellow-citizens. Dr. Stevenson, the pastor of the white Presbyterian Church, Dr. J. A. Mayes, a prominent physician of Mayesville and Mr. W. D. Mayes, one of the leading merchants of the town, have been among the white citizens, who have been faithful friends of the enterprise from its birth. Miss Emma J. Wilson, the Principal of the School and a corps of teachers, all colored, have worked indefatigably for its success and are now striving to enlist the sympathy of friends in other States to bring the enterprise to triumphant completion. As the proprietor of this journal is a member of the building committee, it will be a pleasure to receive any contributions our readers may send to this office for the work.

Esquimaux Women.

The customs of native Alaskans are very interesting and may be studied to advantage in some of the villages near whaling stations, where a number of different tribes are found living in one settlement. Among all, the life of the women is hard, says Lieut. Bertholf, who has spent much time among the Alaskans. The women do all the work and drudgery. The men hunt when hunger compels. When a man has been out on the ice and killed a seal he does not carry it home, but marks the place, and when he gets back to the village the woman must go out and drag it home over the rough ice, and skin it after she gets it there. When a man and his wife are traveling she does most of the running ahead of the team, and when they get into camp at night she has to make the fire, cook the meal—if they have one—take her husband's boots off and dry them, as well as her own, and then get all ready for the start in the morning. Yet she does all this without complaint. The Esquimaux are very fond of their children, especially if they are boys. Girl children seem to be at a discount, and it is strange it is so, for the women are of more use to the family than the men. The Esquimaux's eyesight and his ingenuity in making a fire are remarkable. The Esquimaux will call your attention to an object so distant that you can not always find it with your glasses; but you seldom discover that they have made a mistake. Natives have been seen to make a fire, melt enough snow to get a half gallon of water, boil it to make the tea with but two sticks of driftwood, each piece being not over two feet long and four inches in diameter, and at the time of a fresh breeze.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE WRESTLERS.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Ephesians 6: 12.

"We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

SQUEAMISHNESS and fastidiousness were never charged against Paul's rhetoric. In the war against evil he took the first weapon he could lay his hand on. For illustration, he employed the theatre, the arena, the foot-race, and there was nothing in the Isthmian game, with its wreath of pine leaves; or Pythian game, with its wreath of laurel and palm; or Nemean game, with its wreath of parsley; or any Roman circus, but he felt he had a right to put it in sermon or epistle, and are you not surprised that in my text he calls upon a wrestling bout for suggestiveness? Plutarch says that wrestling is the most artistic and cunning of athletic games. We must make a wide difference between pugilism, the lowest of spectacles, and wrestling, which is an effort in sport to put down another on floor or ground, and we, all of us, indulged in it in our boyhood days, if we were healthful and plucky. The ancient wrestlers were first bathed in oil, and then sprinkled with sand. The third throw decided the victory, and many a man who went down in the first throw or second throw, in the third throw was on top, and his opponent under. The Romans did not like this game very much, for it was not savage enough, no blows or kicks being allowed in the game. They preferred the foot of hungry panther on the breast of fallen martyr.

In wrestling, the opponents would bow in apparent suavity, advance face to face, put down both feet solidly, take each other by the arms, and push each other backward and forward until the work began in real earnest, and there were contortions and strangulations and violent strokes of the foot of one contestant against the foot of the other, tripping him up, or with struggle that threatened apoplexy or death, the defeated fell, and the shouts of the spectators greeted the victor. I guess Paul had seen some such contest, and it reminded him of the struggle of the soul with temptation, and the struggle of truth with error, and the struggle of heavenly forces against apollyonic powers, and he dictates my text to an amanuensis, for all his letters, save the one to Philemon, seem to have been dictated, and as the amanuensis goes on with his work I hear the groan and laugh and shout of earthly and celestial belligerents: "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

I notice that as these wrestlers advanced to throw each other they bowed one to the other. It was a civility, not only in Grecian and Roman games, but in later day, in all the wrestling bouts at Clerkenwell, England, and in the famous wrestling match during the reign of Henry III., in St. Giles' Field, between men of Westminster and people of London. However rough a twist and hard a pull each wrestler contemplated giving his opponent, they approached each other with politeness and suavity. The genuflexions, the affability, the courtesy in no wise hindered the decisiveness of the contest. Well, Paul, I see what you mean. In this awful struggle between right and wrong, we must not forget to be gentlemen and ladies. Affability never hinders, but always helps. You are powerless as soon as you get mad. Do not call rum-sellers murderers. Do not call infidels fools. Do not call higher critics reprobates. Do not call all card players and theatre-goers children of the devil. Do not say that the dance breaks through into hell. Do not deal in vituperation and billingsgate and contempt and adjectives dynamitic. The other side can beat us at that. Their dictionaries have more objurgation and brimstone.

We are in the strength of God to throw flat on its back every abomination that curses the earth, but let us approach our mighty antagonist with suavity. Hercules, son of Jupiter and Alcmene, will by a precursor of smiles be helped rather than damaged for the performance of his "twelve labors." Let us be as wisely strategic in religious circles as attorneys in court-rooms, who are complimentary to each other in the opening remarks, before they come into legal struggle such as that which left Rufus Choate or David Paul Brown triumphant or defeated. People who get into a rage in reformatory work accomplish nothing but the depletion of their own nervous system. There is such a thing as having a gun so hot at the touch-hole that it explodes, killing the one that sets it off. There are some reformatory meetings to which I always decline to go and take part, because they are apt to become demonstrations of bad temper. I never like to hear a man swear, even though he swear on the right side. The very Paul who in my text employed in illustration the wrestling match, behaved on a memorable occasion as we ought to behave. The translators of the Bible made an unintentional mistake when they represented Paul as insulting the people of Athens by speaking of "the unknown god whom ye ignorantly worship." Instead of charging them with ignorance, the original indicates he complimented them by suggesting that they were very religious; but as they confessed that there were some things they did not understand about God, he proposed to say some things concerning Him, beginning where they had left off. The same Paul who said in one place, "Be courteous," and who had noticed the bow preceding the wrestling match, here exercises suavities before he proceeds practically to throw down the rocky side of the Acropolis the whole Parthenon of idolatries, Minerva and Jupiter smashed up with the rest of them. In this holy war polished rifles will do more execution than blunderbusses. Let our wrestlers bow as they go into the struggle which will leave all perdition under and all heaven on top.

Remember also that these wrestlers went through severe and continuous course of preparation for their work. They were put upon such diet as would best develop their muscle. As Paul says, "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." The wrestlers were put under complete discipline—bathing, gymnastics, struggle in sport with each other to develop strength and give quickness to dodge of head and trip of foot; stooping to lift each other off the ground; suddenly rushing forward; suddenly pulling backward; putting the left foot behind the other's right foot, and getting his opponent off his balance; hard training for days and weeks and months, so that when they met it was giant clutching giant. And, my friends, if we do not want ourselves to be thrown in this wrestle with the sin and error of the world, we had better get ready by Christian discipline, by holy self-denial, by constant practice, by submitting to divine supervisal and direction. Do not begrudge the time and the money for that young man who is in preparation for the ministry, spending two years in grammar school, and four years in college, and three years in theological seminary. I know that nine years are a big slice to take off of a man's active life, but if you realized the height and strength of the archangels of evil in our time with which that young man is going to wrestle, you would not think nine years of preparation were too much. An uneducated ministry was excusable in other days, but not in this time, loaded with schools and colleges. A man who wrote me the other day a letter asking advice, as he felt called to preach the Gospel, began the word "God" with a small "g." That kind of a man is not called to preach the Gospel. Illiterate men, preaching the Gospel, quote for their own encouragement the scriptural passage, "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it." Yes! He will fill it with wind. Preparation for this wrestling is absolutely necessary. Many years ago Doctor Newman and Doctor Sunderland, on the platform of Brigham Young's tabernacle at Salt Lake City, Utah, gained the victory because they had so long been skilful wrestlers for God. Otherwise Brigham Young, who was himself a giant in some things, would have thrown them out of the window. Get ready in Bible classes. Get ready in Christian Endeavor meetings. Get ready by giving testimony in obscure places, before giving testimony in conspicuous places.

Your going around with a Bagster's Bible with flaps at the edges, under your arm, does not qualify you for the work of an evangelist. In this day of profuse gab, remember that it is not merely capacity to talk, but the fact that you have something to say, that is going to fit you for the struggle into which you are to go with a smile on your face and illumination on your brow, but out of which you will not come until all your physical and mental and moral and religious energies have been taxed to the utmost and you have not a nerve left, or a thought unexpended, or a prayer unsaid, or a sympathy unwept. In this struggle between Right and Wrong accept no challenge on platform or in newspaper unless you are prepared. Do not misapply the story of Goliath the Great, and David the Little. David had been practising with a sling on dogs and wolves and bandits, and a thousand times had he swirled a stone around his head before he aimed at the forehead of the giant and tumbled him backward, otherwise the big foot of Goliath would almost have covered up the crushed form of the son of Jesse.

Notice also that the success of a wrestler depended on his having his feet well planted before he grappled his opponent. Much depends upon the way the wrestler stands. Standing on an uncertain piece of ground, or bearing all his weight on right foot or all his weight on left foot, he is not ready. A slight cuff of his antagonist will capsize him. A stroke of the heel of the other wrestler will trip him. And in this struggle for God and righteousness, as well as for our own souls, we want our feet firmly planted in the Gospel,—both feet on the Rock of Ages. It will not do to believe the Bible in spots, or think some of it true and some of it untrue. You just make up your mind that the story of the Garden of Eden is an allegory, and the Epistle of James an interpolation, and that the miracles of Christ can be accounted for on natural grounds, without any belief in the supernatural, and the first time you are interlocked in a wrestle with sin and Satan you will go under and your feet will be higher than your head. It will not do to have one foot on a rock and the other on the sand. The old Book would long ago have gone to pieces if it had been vulnerable. But of the millions of Bibles that have been printed within the last twenty-five years, not one chapter has been omitted, and the omission of one chapter would have been the cause of the rejection of the whole edition. Alas! for those who while trying to prove that Jonah was never swallowed of a whale, themselves get swallowed of the whale of unbelief, which digests but never ejects its victims. The inspiration of the Bible is not more certain than the preservation of the Bible in its present condition. After so many centuries of assault on the Book, would it not be a matter of economy, to say the least,—economy of brain and economy of stationery, and economy of printers' ink,—if the batteries now assailing the Book would change their aim and be trained against some other books, and the world shown that Walter Scott did not write "The Lady of the Lake," nor Homer "The Iliad," nor Virgil "The Georgics," nor Thomas Moore "Lalla Rookh," or that Washington's "Farewell Address" was written by Thomas Paine, and that the War of the American Revolution never occurred. That attempt would be quite as successful as this long-timed attack anti-Biblical, and then it would be new. Oh, keep out of this wrestling bout with the ignorance and the wretchedness of the world unless you feel that both feet are planted in the eternal veracities of the Book of Almighty God!

Notice also that in this science of wrestling, to which Paul refers in my text, it was the third throw that decided the contest. A wrestler might be thrown once and thrown twice, but the third time he might recover himself, and, by an unexpected twist of arm or curve of foot, gain the day. Well, that is broad, illuminating, unmistakable Gospel. Some way I address through ear or eye, by voice or printed page, have been thrown in their wrestle with evil habit.

Aye! you have been thrown twice, but that does not mean, oh! worsted all, that you are thrown forever. I have no authority for saying how many times a man may sin and be forgiven, or how many times he may fall and yet rise again; but I have authority for saying that he may fall four hundred and ninety times, and four hundred and ninety times get up. The Bible declares that God will forgive seventy times seven, and if you will employ the rule of multiplication you will find that seventy times seven is four hundred and ninety. Blessed be God for such a Gospel of high hope and thrilling encouragement and magnificent rescue! A Gospel of lost sheep brought home on Shepherd's shoulder, and the prodigal who got into the low work of putting husks into swines' troughs brought home to jewelry and banqueting and hilarity that made the rafters ring!

Three sketches of the same man, a happy home, of which he and a lady taken from a neighbor's house are the united head. Years of happiness roll on after years of happiness. Stars point down to nativities. And whether pronounced in greeting or not, every morning was a "Good Morning," and every night a "Good Night." Christmas eves and May Queens, and birthday festivities and Thanksgiving gatherings around loaded tables. But that husband and father forms an unfortunate acquaintance who leads him in circles too convivial, too late-houred, too scandalous. Awhile, his money gone and not able to bear his part of the expense, he is gradually shoved out and ignored and put away. Now, what a dilapidated home his! A dissipated life always shows in faded window curtains, and impoverished wardrobe, and dejected surroundings, and in broken palings of the garden fence, and the unhinged gate, and the dislocated door-bell, and the disappearance of wife and children from scenes among which they shone the brightest and laughed the gladdest. If any man ever down, that husband and father down. The fact is, he got into a wrestle with Evil that pushed and pulled and contorted and exhausted him worse than any Olympian game ever treated a Grecian and he was thrown. Thrown out of prosperity into gloom. Thrown out of association into bad. Thrown out of health into invalidism. Thrown out of happiness into misery. But one day while slinking through one of the obscure streets, not wishing to be recognized, a good thought crosses his mind, for he had heard of men flung flat rising again. Arriving at his house, he calls his wife and shuts the door and says: "Mary, I am going to do differently. This is not what I promised you when we were married. You have been very patient with me, and have borne everything, although I would have had no right to complain if you had left me and gone home to your father's house. It seems to me that once or twice, when I was not myself, I struck you, and several times, I know, I called you hard names. Now I want you to forgive me. I am going to do better now. I want you to help me." "Help you," she says; "bless your soul! of course I will help you. I knew you didn't mean it when you treated me roughly. All that is in the past. Never refer to it again. To-day let us begin anew." Sympathizing friends come around and kind business people help the man to some thing to do, so that he can again earn a living. The children soon have clothing so that they can go to school. Those old songs which the wife sang years ago come back to her memory, and she sings them over again at the cradle, or while preparing the noon-day meal. Domestic harmony! He comes home earlier than he used to, and he is glad to spend the evening playing games with the children, or helping them with arithmetic or grammar lessons which are a little too hard. Time passes on, and some outsider suggests to h that he is not getting as much out of li as he ought, and proposes an occa- s al visit to scenes of worldliness and d ipation. He consents to go once, and, a r much solicitation, twice. Then his o habit comes back. He says he has b n belated, and could not get back un- t i midnight. He had to see some West- e merchant that had arrived and talk o usiness with him before he got out of t n. Kindness and geniality again quit th disposition of that husband and f er. The wife's heart breaks in a new p e. That man goes into a second w stle with evil habit and is flung, and al ell cackles at the moral defeat. "I tc you so!" say many good people who h: no faith in the reformation of a fa n man. "I told you so! You made a eat fuss about his restored home, but l ew it would not last. You can't trust th e fellows who have once gone wrong." S with this unfortunate, things get worse a worse, and his family have to give up th house, and the last valuable goes to th pawnbroker's shop. But that un- fo nate man is sauntering along the st :t one Sunday night, and he goes up tc church door, and the congregation s nging Cowper's glorious hymn,—

There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

e goes into the vestibule of the church ar stops there, not feeling well enough d sed to go among the worshipers, and he ears the minister say, "You will find th words of my text in Luke, the 19th ter and 10th verse: 'The Son of M is come to seek and save that which w lost.'" The listener in the vestibule a: "If any man was ever lost, I am and the Son of Man came to save th which is lost, and he has found me, ar he will take me out of this lost con- fi n. Oh, Christ, have mercy on me!" T poor man has courage now to enter th nain audience room, and he sits down or ne first seat by the door, and when at th lose of the service the minister comes do the aisle, the poor man tells his str; and he is encouraged, and invited to me again, and the way is cleared for hi for membership in a Christian church, an he feels the omnipotence of what Pe, the Apostle, said when he spoke of e "kept by the power of God through a unto complete salvation." Yet he s have one more wrestle before he is fr from evil habits, and he goes into it. on his own strength, for that has failed ai twice, but in the strength of the Lord Almighty. The old habit seizes him. he seizes it, and the wrestlers bend ward and forward, and from side to in awful struggle, until the moment o s for his liberation; and, with both r infused with strength from God, he if that habit, swings it in air, and hurls t o the perdition from which it came, n from which it never again will rise. V ory! Victory! through our Lord Jesus Ist! Hear it, all ye wrestlers! It th v him twice, but the third time he h v it; and, by the grace of God, threw t hard he is as safe now as if he had be ten years in heaven. Oh, I am so le that Paul in my text suggests the wr tler and the power of the third throw.

t notice that my text suggests that th wrestlers on the other side in the great tu gle for the world's redemption have al e forces of demonology to help them: W wrestle not against flesh and blood, ag gainst principalities, against powers, ag inst the rulers of the darkness of this wo l, against spiritual wickedness in high pl es."

military men will tell you that there is thing more unwise than to underesti- ma an enemy. In estimating what we a to contend with, the most of the re- for ers do not recognize the biggest op- po s. They talk about the Agnosticism, an he Nihilism, and the Pantheism, and the Brahminism, and the Mohammedan- ism as well as the more agile and organ- ize nd endowed wickednesses of our day. But these are only a part of the hostili- tie rrayed against God and the best in- ter ts of humanity. The invisible hosts ar ar more numerous than the visible. I t you, the Apostle Paul was right when he ggested that we wrestle, not with pig- mi but with giants that will down us, un s the Lord Almighty is our coadju- to Blessed be God that we have now, an further on will have in mightier de- gr that divine help!

The time is coming—I know it will quicken your pulses when I mention it—when the last mighty evil of the world will be grappled by righteousness and thrown. Which of the great evils will survive all the others I know not, whether war, or revenge, or fraud, or lust, or intemperance, or gambling, or Sabbath desecration. It will not be "the survival of the fittest," but the survival of the worst. It will be the evil the most thoroughly entrenched, most completely reinforced, most patronized by wealth and fashion and pomp, most applauded by all the principalities and powers and rulers of darkness. It will stand, with grim visage, looking down upon the graves of all the other slain abominations—graves dug by the hot shovels of despair and surmounted by such epitaphiology as this: "It biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." "The wages of sin is death." "Her house inclineth unto death and her paths unto the dead." "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is death." Yes! I imagine we have arrived at the time when we may say, Yonder stands the last and only great evil of all the world to be wrestled down. It stands, not only looking upon the graves of all the entombed and epitaphed iniquities of the world, but ever and anon gazing upward in defiance of the heavens and shaking its fist at the Almighty, saying: "Nothing can put me down. I have seen all the other enemies of the human race wrestled down and destroyed, but there is no arm or foot, human or angelic or Deific, that can throw me. I have ruined whole generations, and I swear by all the thrones of diabolism that I will ruin this generation. Come on, all ye churches, and all ye reformatory institutions, and all ye legislatures, and all ye thrones! I challenge you! I plant my feet on this red-hot rock of the world's woe. I stretch forth my arms for the mightiest wrestle any world has ever seen. Come on! Come on!"

Then I can well believe that righteousness will accept the challenge, and the two mighty wrestlers will grapple, while all the galleries of earth and heaven look down from one side, and all the fiery chasms of perdition look up from the other side. The prize is worth a struggle, for it is not a chaplet of laurel or palm, but the rescue of a world, and a wreath put on the brow by him who promised, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown." Three worlds—earth, heaven and hell—hold their breath while waiting for the result of this struggle, when, with one mighty swing of an arm muscled with Omnipotence, righteousness hurls the last evil, first on its knees and then on its face, and then rolling off and down, with a crash wilder than that with which Sampson hurled the temple of Dagon when he got hold of its two chief pillars.

Aye! That suggests a cheering thought, that if all the realms of Demonology are on the other side, all the realms of angelology are on our side, among them the Angel of the New Covenant, and they are now talking over the present awful struggle and final glorious triumph; talking amid the alabaster pillars and in the ivory palaces, and along the broadways and grand avenues of the great Capital of the Universe, and amid the spray of fountains with rainbows like the "rainbow round the throne." Yes, all heaven is on our side, and the "high places of wickedness" spoken of in my text are not so high as the high places of heaven, where there are enough reserve forces, if our earthly forces should be overpowered, or in cowardice fall back, to sweep down some morning at daybreak and take all this earth for God before the city clocks could strike "twelve" for noon. And the Cabinet of Heaven, the most august Cabinet in the universe, made up of three,—God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost,—are now in session in the King's Palace, and they are with us, and they are going to see us through, and they invite us, as soon as we have done our share of the work, to go up and see them, and celebrate the final victory, that is more sure to come than to-morrow's sunrise. While I think of it, the Scotch evangelistic hymn comes upon me, and stirs the strong tide of Scotch blood that rolls through my arteries:—

Its a bonnie, bonnie warl' that we're livin' in the noo',
An' sunny is the lan' that noo we often traiv'll throo;
But in vain we look for something here to which oor hearts may cling,
For its beauty is as naething tae the palace o' the King.
We like the gilded summer, wi' its merry, merry tread,
An' we sigh when hoary winter lays its beauties wi' the dead;
For tho' bonnie are the snawflakes, an' the doon on winter's wing,
It's fine to ken it daurna touch the palace o' the King.
Nae nicht shall be in heaven, an' nae desolatin' sea,
An' nae tyrant hoofs shall trample i' the city o' the free;
There's an everlastin' daylicht, an' a never-fadin' spring,
Where the Lamb is a' the glory i' the palace o' the King.
We see oor freen's await us ower yonner at His gate;
Then lat us a' be ready, for ye ken it's gettin' late;
Let oor lamps be brichtly burnin'; let us raise oor voice an' sing,
For sune we'll meet, to pairt nae mair, i' the palace o' the King.

A CHRISTIAN CHOIR OF ONCE ANTAGONISTIC RACES.

Racial Enmity Overcome.

How the Khasi and Brahman, After Centuries of Hatred, Unite in Christ.

BY MR. BENJAMIN AITKEN.

TO the Occidental eye the group in the accompanying picture is simply a group of Hindoos, but to one familiar with the customs and traditions of India, the spectacle of these young men sitting side by side is one of strange significance, not to say of amazement. They are all undergraduates of the Calcutta University, and are members of a choir which sings hymns at the open-air services of the Free Church of Scotland, which are held in Beadon Square, Calcutta. But like as they are in appearance, and brothers as they are in Christ, there stretches back of them long years of race antagonism. The young men whose portraits are numbered 3, 4, and 7 are Khasis; numbers 6, 8, and 10 are sons of Brahmans; while the others, numbered 1, 2, and 5, are sons of Bengalee parents.

It is almost impossible for any one who has not lived in India to realize the full import of this union of Brahmans and Khasis under the banner of Jesus Christ. Brahmans are considered the heaven-born cream of the Hindoo nation, and two or three generations ago they used to be worshiped as gods by the rest of the Hindoos. Khasis are aboriginal savages of the mountains which run east and west through Assam. They are not tolerated among even the lowest castes of the settled Hindoo community. They had no letters, no civilization, and no gods or temples. Their religion was demon worship, which is still observed by all who have not come under the influence of Christianity.

Although armed only with bows and arrows, the Khasis were a very brave tribe, and defied the Mohammedans, who subdued the plains at the foot of their hills. Their depredations continued till the British government displaced the Mohammedan, and then a regularly organized expedition was sent into their hills. But it required four years for them to be subdued and inducted to peaceful ways of life.

Then a band of missionaries from Wales settled among them and opened schools, and it very soon appeared that this remarkable tribe possessed intellectual aptitude equal to any of the literary and civilized races of the plains. The Khasis themselves have a tradition that the first Khasi and the first Bengalee came to India together from some land far to the eastward, each carrying a book. On reaching a deep river they were nearly drowned, and the Khasi lost his book. But the more crafty Bengalee seized his book in his teeth and struggled across. So the Bengalees became a literary people, while the Khasis remained unable to read and write; and to this the Khasis attribute their uncivilized condition by contrast with the enlightened and advanced Bengalees.

However, they have more than made up their ground since the advent of the missionaries, as will be seen when I say that the great-grandsons of men who fought with bows and arrows, and did not know a letter of any alphabet, are now in the Calcutta University.

Having no restrictions, like Hindoos and Mohammedans, on the liberty of women, the girls have kept pace with the boys in learning, and it has been officially declared that female education is relatively more advanced among the Khasis than among any of the most civilized and literary races of India.

The population of the hills is about 170,000, living in 1,546 villages and 35,000 houses. The number of church members, that is, adult Christians, is between 11,000 and 12,000, and there are perhaps 3,000 more who have associated themselves with Christians and adopted many of their ways without embracing Christianity.

The missionaries were not only the beginners of education in the Khasi hills, but to this day nearly the whole of the instruction of the people is in their hands, and many thousands of Khasi boys and girls attend their schools.

These hills were in the centre of last year's great earthquake. About four hundred Khasis were killed, including several Christians. Every house, school, hospital, and medical dispensary belonging to the mission was destroyed. I do not suppose any Christian mission has ever suffered so much in a single catastrophe.

MANASSEH'S SIN AND REPENTANCE.

S.S. Lesson for Nov. 20. II. Chron. 33: 9-16. Golden Text, I. John 1: 9.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

MANASSEH was twelve years old, the age of a Jewish boy's majority, when he began to reign; old enough to know and to appreciate his godly father. Of his reign, which was a long one—fifty-five years—the summary is a terrible one: "He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord after the abominations of the heathen whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel." No account is given as to how this terrible career of sin began, what were the influences of evil brought to bear upon him, or any extenuating circumstances whatsoever. From this we must conclude that very early, while he was yet a boy in his father's house, the young prince must have commenced, with his eyes open, his career of sin. All the more responsible, because he had the teaching and example of his father before him, this young man evidently chose evil. How many young men there are who think it a grand thing to have their own way! They are impatient of all restraint; they consider that the height of glory is to give free rein to their desires, their passions and their ambitions. Every thing and every man must serve their purpose and minister to them. Poor slaves! No yoke is so binding, no slavery so galling, as that of our own self-will. No service is such perfect freedom as the service of the will of God.

The exaction, the tyranny of self-will must increase in measure as they are yielded to; and thus it must have been with the wicked young king of Judah. He began by re-erecting the idolatrous shrines, the high places which his father Hezekiah had thrown down; thus commencing his reign in the most direct opposition to his father. He who begins by disobeying father and mother, cannot obey God, and can neither know the blessedness of the Sabbath externally, nor yet in that Sabbath rest which comes when we cease from our own works as God did from his (Heb. 4: 10). No doubt wicked young companions congratulated him for the spirit he showed in having a mind of his own, and coming out of leading strings, and the young man's vanity was flattered and Satan's yoke more firmly rivetted upon him.

He was on an inclined plane, and he could not stop; he must go farther: he reared up altars for the Baalim, and made groves [or Ashtaroth] and then, without even the outward semblance of the worship of Jehovah, he "worshiped the host of heaven and served them" (II. Chron. 33: 3, R.V.). From this point of wickedness he went yet farther. Hezekiah had caused the temple to be cleansed, restored and reopened for the worship of Jehovah, but the wicked Manasseh went farther in his wickedness than even his grandfather, Ahaz, he built altars in the house of the Lord, whereof the Lord said, "In Jerusalem shall be my name forever. And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the Lord." Sin in the temple of the Lord! The worship due to him offered to created things! God deposed from the very place of his sanctuary and something else taking his place! This is idolatry and idolatry is popular. All religion savors of it which is made up of external things and in which face to face communion with God, which breaks and humbles hearts, is dispensed with.

Having thus sinned with a high hand against God, Manasseh sinned against his own children, and the unnatural father made them pass through the fire, i.e., literally roasting them to death on the red hot arms of a great, hollow, brazen image filled with fire! Having gone thus far he lent himself to direct dealing with evil spirits, practised augury, used enchantments, practised sorcery, and dealt with them that had familiar spirits and with wizards, and "he wrought much evil in the sight of the Lord to provoke him to anger." Spiritualism always has been abomination in the sight of the Lord. The only safe intercourse with the world of spirits is through the Holy Spirit of our God, who leads us to know the value of the precious blood of Christ which alone can protect us from spiritual wickedness in heavenly places or the heavenlies (Eph. 6: 12). Manasseh consummated his wickedness by setting the graven image of the idol which he had made in the house of God. And Manasseh "made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, so that they did evil more than the nations whom the Lord destroyed before the children of Israel" (ver. 9, R.V.). It is an awful slur upon the name of our God when his children do worse than the unsaved.

THE TOWER OF DAVID AND CITY WALL.

Manasseh had gone on from one degree of sin to another, until it would seem that he could go no farther. But had not Hezekiah prayed for him? Perhaps he had seen with deep grief the terrible development of evil in his young son, and had with faith besought the Lord on his behalf! Was it perhaps in answer to his prayers that the Lord spoke to Manasseh and to his people? "But they gave no heed." So great was the sin of Manasseh that it is in part on his account that the Jews are now tossed to and fro among all the kingdoms of the earth, because of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah, king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem (Jer. 15: 4). And yet God had devised a "means that his banished be not expelled from him" (II. Sam. 14: 14). Even such a sinner could be saved! In his love, seeking after that which was lost until he found it, "the Lord brought upon Manasseh and the people of Judah, the king of Assyria which took Manasseh in chains, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon." Nothing but the strongest measures would suffice to bring down this strong will. Oh, the mercy of God when he thus pursues a wicked, rebellious sinner! How many rebellious sons have been thus saved!

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

REFORM to be permanent must have its root in the convictions of the people. All history proves that legislation and force can never change the character of a nation. Judah had to learn this lesson by experience. Hezekiah had destroyed the idols and proscribed heathen rites, but the hearts of the people were unchanged. Isaiah's pleading for a spiritual regeneration had taken no effect. The people obeyed Hezekiah and put away the idols, because it was dangerous to do otherwise, not because they repented of idolatry and had turned to God. Reaction was sure to follow, and it came speedily. After Hezekiah's death, his son Manasseh, a lad of twelve years, came to the throne. There was then no occasion to dread the consequences of idolatry. The old king, who would have punished it without mercy was dead, and the new king was an immature boy with little power or influence. The people turned back to the licentious and barbarous worship of the Baalim, and the old orgies were renewed. The young king was caught in the whirl of the popular movement and took the lead in restoring idolatry. In the expressive language of the historian, he introduced the abominations of the Canaanites, who had occupied the land before Joshua drove them out. He went further than his predecessors and actually desecrated the temple, by erecting altars to false gods within its courts. With his usual directness of record, the Chronicler says that God sent the armies of Assyria against Manasseh, and does not tell us what Manasseh did to provoke Assyria. It is probable that he refused to pay tribute, relying on the protection that Egypt may have promised. However that may be, Assyria swooped down upon him

THE GERMAN HOSPITAL, JERUSALEM.

THE NEW GERMAN ORPHANAGE, BETHLEHEM.

Consul-General Merrill's Letter.

"s own yacht, Hohenzollern, accom- d by two men of war, brings the mror to these shores. He comes from antinople direct and lands at Haifa t foot of Mount Carmel, on Tuesday, th of October. Here the Germans a flourishing colony which numbers uls. After ascending Mount Car- e will spend the night at Haifa and ext morning start by carriage for ea, where he will camp the night of th. The Emperor and Empress will by carriage and some of his suite but most of the latter will be on back, and if the road is not good mperor himself may ride. This will im along the coast. Beautiful Car- ill rise inland to the east, and at ea he will look upon some of the e ruins of structures magnificently y Herod, the Great. Thursday, the is route will be south along the to Jaffa, where that night will be in a hotel. At Jaffa and Sarona, is near it, there are two prosperous n colonies of six hundred souls.

"n Friday, the 28th, he begins his jour- Jerusalem. Carriages, horsemen, ants, soldiers numbering several ed, will form a caravan of splendid ortions as it moves across the Plain aron.

"is camp of one hundred tents will be d at The Gate of the Valley (Bab el Wa at the foot of the mountains of Judea. A short distance from his camping place is the celebrated Emmaus where the Fifth Legion encamped in the year seventy, A. D., and also the Valley of Ajalon, renowned in the exploits of the Hebrew leader, Joshua. On Saturday, the 29th, an early start will be made for the Holy City, which will be reached by midday, and the royal party will take up their quarters in their own tents pitched on German soil just northwest of the city.

"On the route sixteen tents will always be spread for the party at lunch. In the Emperor's own camp there will be seventy sleeping tents, nine great kitchen tents, and others for attendants, raising the number to one hundred or more. There will come from Constantinople on the part of the Sultan, grandees to the number of twenty-seven. These are called 'Pashas,' which means that they are officials, or men of high rank, who will be accompanied by sixty-five attendants or persons of lesser rank. The tents of this portion of the company will be pitched by themselves in a field a little distance from the Emperor's own camp. The morning sun of Saturday, the 29th, will look down upon two hundred great, white tents pitched upon the hills about Jerusalem. It will be a strange and inspiring sight. The royal personages, the army of attendants, the horsemen, the soldiers, the carriages (thirteen hundred horses and mules are required for the party), and the mounted men, the decorations, the banners, will form a striking and remarkable picture in many respects never before equalled in the history of Jerusalem.

"In the Emperor's personal dining tent thirty people will sit at table with him.

The Formal Entry Into Jerusalem.

"At four o'clock of Saturday afternoon the Emperor will make his formal entry into Jerusalem, and at five o'clock he will hold an official reception in the German Consulate for the German resident citizens, for the Governor and Turkish officials, for the Consular body, and the Patriarchs and other heads of the ecclesiastical bodies.

"It is supposed that the Empress will appoint an hour when she will receive the Consular and other ladies since the Emperor's reception is for gentlemen alone.

"One of the rich treats which the foreign part of the population of Jerusalem is looking forward to, is the coming of the Emperor's band. Ears that have been tortured by Turkish music will for a few days be delighted with music that is worthy the name.

"On the morning of Sunday, the 30th, the Emperor will go to Bethlehem, and attend service in the German church there, which was dedicated in 1893. If time permits there may also be a short service at the new German Orphanage just completed in Bethlehem, a spacious and elegant building of which any Protestant nation might be proud. Sunday afternoon he will visit the Mount of Olives and have a special private service in the open air.

"Monday, the last day of October, observed by Germans as Reformation Day, the new German church in Jerusalem, will be dedicated by appropriate services, Pastor Hoppe will give a historical address. The church is a beautiful one, the finest in Jerusalem, built on the site of an old Crusading church situated in the Muristan or Ruins of the Knights of St. John. The foundation stone was laid with great ceremony in the year 1893. Numbers of prominent persons from the various Protestant countries have been invited, and the occasion will no doubt open the eyes of the people of this land who are so overshadowed by the Greek and Latin churches that they do not realize that there is another great religion in the world.

"In the afternoon of Monday the royal party start for Jericho, where that night will be spent in camp. Tuesday, the first of November, the Emperor will visit the Dead Sea, the Jordan, and return to his camp at night. Wednesday the party returns to Jerusalem. Thursday, the third of November, will be devoted to sight-seeing in and around Jerusalem. The neat and attractive German colony, the Orphanage, under the care of Herr Schneller, and other places or establishments which belong to the Germans will be visited.

"On the fourth the Emperor will visit Mar Saba, the oldest monastery in the wildest gorge in Palestine, where long centuries ago was written the beautiful hymn:

> Art thou weary, art thou languid,
> Art thou sore distressed?
> "Come to Me," saith One, "and coming
> Be at rest."

"This trip must be made on horseback as no roads thither exist, and meantime the Empress will spend the day in visiting the German hospital, the 'Talitha Kumi' school under the care of the noble Deaconess Charlotta, who during forty years has done a royal work. The same afternoon after the Emperor returns, the Emperor and Empress will meet at the Wailing Place of the Jews. Saturday, the fifth, the party leave Jerusalem by train for Jaffa. If the weather is favorable they will go thence by his yacht to Haifa, otherwise they make the journey overland. The Emperor will go by carriage from Haifa to Nazareth for lunch, thence on horseback to Mount Tabor and camp for the night, and the next day to Tiberias. He will spend a day and a night by the sacred lake, and the following day return again to Haifa. The party will sail thence to Beriut, visit Damascus and possibly Baalbek, returning to Beirut, whence they sail direct for Egypt.

THE GERMAN COLONY AT HAIFA, VISITED BY EMPEROR WILLIAM.

The Emperor's Suite.

"The entire suite of the Emperor and Empress will number one hundred or more persons, all Germans, who have been specially invited for this event. A great deal of elegant furniture has been imported for the Emperor's comfort, and rich and costly furnishings provided, suitable, it is supposed, for the dignity of the people and the occasion.

"One hundred carriages have been provided, some of them brought from other cities, and the owners of the horses for all the carriages are under bonds that the horses shall not be used after October 10th so that they may have time to rest. Those who know the horses of this country and the cruel treatment they receive from their drivers consider this a merciful arrangement. The horses, could they speak, would thank the Emperor for giving them a holiday. The Emperor, however, did not plan this feature of the business, for this was directed by Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son, whose marvelous resources have been called into requisition to make every possible arrangement for the pleasure and convenience of the great Emperor and the noble Empress.

"SELAH MERRILL."

Ill-Temper Unnecessary.

It is recorded of President Lincoln that he once gave a piece of advice to Secretary Stanton which that official was very fond of "passing on" to others afterward. Mr. Stanton was greatly vexed because an army officer had refused to understand an order, or, at all events, had not obeyed. "I believe I'll sit down," said Stanton, "and give that man a piece of my mind." "Do so," said Mr. Lincoln, "write it now while you have it on your mind. Make it sharp: cut him all up." Stanton did not need another invitation. It was a bonecrusher that he read to the President. "That's right," said Abe, "that's a good one." "Whom can I get to send it by?" mused the Secretary. "Send it!" replied Lincoln, "send it! Why, don't send it at all. Tear it up. You have freed your mind on the subject, and that is all that is necessary. Tear it up. You never want to send such letters; I never do!" The lesson was not lost upon the Secretary

God's Sympathy.

MANY people have found this world a desert-march. They go half consumed of trouble all their days. But we are not turned out on a desert to die. Here is the long, cool, certain, refreshing shadow of the Lord.

A tree, when in full leafage, drops a great deal of refreshment; but in a little while the sun strikes through, and you keep shifting your position, until, after a while, the sun is set at such a point that you have no shade at all. But go in the heart of some great rock, such as you see in Yosemite or the Alps, and there is everlasting shadow. There has been thick shade there for six thousand years, and will be for the next six thousand. So our divine Rock, once covering us, always covers us. The same yesterday, to-day and forever! always good, always kind, always sympathetic! You often hold a sunshade over your head passing along the road or a street; but after a while your arm gets tired, and the very effort to create the shadow makes you weary. But the rock in the mountains, with fingers of everlasting stone, holds its own shadow. So God's sympathy needs no holding up from us. Though we are too weak from sickness or trouble to do anything but lie down, over us he stretches the shadow of his benediction.

It is our misfortune that we mistake God's shadow for the night. If a man come and stand between you and the sun, his shadow falls upon you. So God sometimes comes and stands between us and worldly successes, and his shadow falls upon us, and we wrongly think that it is night. As a father in a garden stoops down to kiss his child, the shadow of his body falls upon it; and so many of the dark misfortunes of our life are not God going away from us, but our heavenly Father stooping down to give us the kiss of his infinite and everlasting love. It is the shadow of a sheltering Rock, and not of a devouring lion.

Sabbath Desecration.

RESPECT for the Sabbath is to the young man a preservative against evil. God has thrust into the toil and fatigue of life a recreative day, when the soul is especially to be fed. It is no new-fangled notion of a wild-brained reformer, but an institution established at the beginning. God has made natural and moral laws so harmonious that the body, as well as the soul, demands this institution. Our bodies are seven-day clocks, that must be wound up as often as that, or they will run down. Failure must come sooner or later to the man who breaks the Sabbath. Inspiration has called it the Lord's Day, and he who devotes it to the world is guilty of robbery. God will not let the sin go unpunished, either in this world or the world which is to come.

This is the statement of a man who had broken this divine enactment: "I was engaged in manufacturing on the Lehigh River. On the Sabbath I used to rest, but never regarded God in it. One beautiful Sabbath, when the noise was all hushed, and the day was all that loveliness could make it, I sat down on my piazza, and went to work inventing a new shuttle. I neither stopped to eat nor drink til the sun went down. By that time I had the invention completed. The next morning I exhibited it, and boasted of my day's work, and was applauded. The shuttle was tried and worked well, but that Sabbath day's work cost me thirty thousand dollars. We branched out and enlarged, and the curse of heaven was upon me from that day onward."

While the Divine frown must rest upon him who tramples upon this statute, God's special favor will be upon that young man who scrupulously observes it. This day, properly observed, will throw a hallowed influence over all the week. The song and sermon and sanctuary will hold back from presumptuous sins. That young man who begins the duties of life with either secret or open disrespect of the holy day, I venture to prophesy, will meet with no permanent successes. God's curse will fall upon his ship, his store, and his office; upon his studio, his body and his soul. "The way of the wicked he turneth upside down."

In one of the old fables it was said that a wonderful child was born in Bagdad, and a magician could hear his footsteps six thousand miles away. But I can hear in the footsteps of that young man on his way to the house of worship this morning, the step not only of a life-time of usefulness, but the on-coming step of eternal ages of happiness yet millions of years away.

Right at Heart.

IF you want to enter into Christian service, first of all, you must have your heart right. There is no use of your trying to save a man from drowning if you yourself cannot swim. We have known men outside the Church who were anxious for the spiritual up-building of Zion, but they have accomplished very little in that direction. Their life and their personal example accomplished more in the wrong direction than their advice and counsel accomplished in the right direction. It was as though two men were walking along a road until they came to a fork in the road, and one man said, "You take the right road, it is far the best; but I am going to take the left road." The other man would not believe he was honest in his counsel. He would say to himself, "Why, if the man thought this road was the best, he would himself take it. Now, he takes the left. I really think he must prefer the left road." In other words, you cannot lead men into the kingdom of God unless you go there yourself.

But suppose that you have your heart made right by the grace of God, and that you have become an out-and-out, through-and-through Christian, then we charge you, get ready for Christian work. The vast majority of people never think of any such preparation. If you want to be effective in different departments of Christian service, gather around you concordances and dictionaries and encyclopædia and poems and histories, and wherever you find a man who has a sharp intellect, sharpen your intellect against his.

PRIESTS AND PREACHERS.

IF I were looking for two words that would most emphatically express the spiritual condition of any nation, I would select as representatives, priests and preachers; for the first is always the symbol of a stationary or retrograde condition; the second, always the forerunner and the stimulator of progress. The priest looks backward, the preacher looks forward to the millennium. The dead gods of Greece and Rome had thousands of priests; but they had no apostles, no missionaries, no preachers. In all their splendid temples there was never an Elijah or a Paul, a Martin Luther or a John Wesley.

Looking through the Old Testament, we find that it was not the priests of the temple, but the preachers taken from the plow, the threshing-floor, and the sheepfold, who delivered the Hebrew oracles, and made Hebrew history, and cast the germ of progress into the soil of humanity. Still we hear that voice "crying in the wilderness, repent!" Still we see the Baptist presenting to the longing hearts of Judea "the Lamb of God," the propitiation and the promise. Not to the governor, not to the tetrarch, not even to the high priest was this honor given. It was the preacher of his day that heralded and introduced the Messiah.

The office of preacher has been still more highly honored. "God had but one Son, and of him he made a preacher." Nay, the whole facts of the Messiahship are summed up in that significant phrase, "To the poor the Gospel is preached." For with the offering up of himself, all necessity for a human priesthood was abolished, and in its place a "great company of preachers" was promised. They were to have all the world for a pastorate; and their assurance and promise was, "I am with you alway." The plain fact is that Christian ministers are never once called "priests." The New Testament knows no priest except Christ, of whom we are expressly told that his priesthood is intransmissible, because he remains forever. When the word is used of Christians at all, it is used only of all Christians alike, as in Romans 12:1; Philippians 2:17; Hebrews 13:15, 16, and I. Peter 2:5.

It is to be noticed also that though in the New Testament at least ten other names are given to Christian ministers, priest, in the sense of a sacrificial priest, is absolutely excluded. They are called apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, bishops, presbyters, ministers, stewards, ambassadors, but never priests. Indeed, Bishop Lightfoot says: "If the sacred office be understood to imply the offering of sacrifices, then the Epistle to the Hebrews leaves no place for a Christian priesthood." No, indeed! The kingdom of Christ is no sacerdotal system; it interposes no sacrificial tribe or class between God and man; and there is a great objection to the use of the word "altar" in our religious services. "Altar" is not once used in connection with the Lord's Supper; and "The Lord's Table" ought to be substituted in every case, where this sacred service is intended. For it is not a sacrifice, but a commemoration of a sacrifice that was perfect and required no supplementary one:

> O, come to our communion feast!
> There present in the heart,
> Not in the hands, the Eternal Priest
> Will his true self impart.

For the first four hundred years after Christ the church was a preaching church, for it was also a missionary church, and just so long the faith committed to the Apostles was kept pure. But so soon as her ministers began to shut themselves up in monasteries, and wear garments that set them apart, and pray and preach in an unknown language, then Christianity lost its popular character, and became priestly, conservative, tyrannical, worldly in the extreme; and for the next eight centuries, though it had multitudes of clever, subtle, ambitious priests, it had but very, very few preachers. Those few saved her. God did not leave himself without a witness, and the two darkest centuries of the church produced Bernard "the Baptist" of his generation; Gabriel Baralete, whose passionate eloquence terrified the rich, lazy priests that heard him; Maillard, Menot, and others who prepared the way for Martin Luther and the Reformation.

Every epoch of spiritual and social progress is an epoch of preaching. The Reformation in Scotland, the planting of the colonies in America, the wonderful impulse given to life and faith in the days of Whitfield and Wesley, and the later awakenings under Spurgeon, Moody, and others, all confirm God's wise intent, to elevate and speed onward the world, by the "foolishness of preaching." Yet we hear every now and then that the pulpit is an effete institution, and that we must look to science and political freedom for the elevation of mankind. But if science had been sufficient, the Pharaohs had remained until this day, and if equality and community were equal to the task, Moore's "Utopia" would be our Bible and the French Revolution our millennium.

No! Men's opinions cannot alter the ways of God. The terms of the preacher's commission insure its perpetuity "unto the end of the world;" and so we know, and are sure, that the pulpit will be a throne, from which the law of God will be proclaimed, when all other thrones are traditions. How great is the responsibility of this office, and how terrible will be the punishment of those who degrade it, either for their own personal honor, pleasure or interest, and thus fall into the hands of the living God, whom they dared to falsify, or dishonor, or betray. One thing is certain, that is—if God-fearing, God-loving men stand in the pulpit, God-fearing, God-loving men will sit in the pews.

BRIEF NOTES.

Major Wilkinson, who was killed in the recent Indian outbreak, was an earnest Christian member of the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., and an active worker in Y. M. C. A.

The Church Missionary Society has provisionally chosen the three missionaries who will begin its work at Khartoum—a clergyman, a doctor, and Mr. Douglas Thornton, of the St. Volunteer Missionary Union.

Dr. A. C. Dixon announces that his church, the Hanson Place Baptist, in Brooklyn, N. Y., is now in the ranks of the Open Church Movement, which means that it will be open for religious work and worship every day in the year.

Evangelist Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, of Springfield, Mass., has engaged Mr. J. A. Birkhead, of New York, who led Mr. Moody's choruses in Carnegie Hall and Cooper Union Gospel services, to take charge of the singing in his evangelistic work this season.

The Central China Religious Tract Society during the past year, issued over 1,000,000 volumes, of which 270,000 were the introduction to the Scriptures prepared by the National Bible Society of Scotland, 269,567 were general religious literature and 1,982 were hymn-books.

During the past six years Dr. Barnardo has received over $40,000 from the boys and girls whom he rescued from the London slums and sent to Canada. These children, now grown up, have permitted this amount out of their savings to help the good philanthropist to send other children to settle in Canada.

The death of Rev. Samuel W. Duncan, D.D., Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, is announced. Dr. Duncan recently started on a tour of foreign mission stations, but his failing health rendered its completion impossible. He was sixty years of age and had been Secretary of the Society since 1892.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has declared itself ready to enter on work in the Philippine Islands, provided the opportunity be given, and funds contributed for that special purpose. The church in Yonkers, N. Y., of which Rev. G. F. Pentecost is the pastor, has contributed the first gift, $1,000, for this purpose.

The Y. M. C. A., of Lancaster, Pa., has learned with grateful feelings that by the will of a recently deceased friend, Miss Bertha Martin, of Neffsville, it will receive $12,000, which she bequeathed to it in memory of her father. The bequest is especially acceptable just now, as the association has a site on which it is desired to erect a building.

The Week of Prayer for Young Men, appointed by the American International Convention and World's Conference of Y. M. C. A., is Nov. 13-19. It is hoped that ministers and churches will observe it, and that the associations will mark the observance by remitting money for the support of the work among soldiers and sailors to the International Committee.

Drew Theological Seminary, at Madison, N. J., of which the Rev. Henry A. Buttz, D.D., is President, is rejoicing in the noble gift of $100,000 from two laymen of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The names of the donors are for the present not made public. It is surmised, however, that the gift has come from two men who are trustees of the Seminary.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is holding meetings in Minneapolis, Minn. About a dozen churches are united in the movement. So far the meetings have been in the First Baptist and the Westminster church. The Minneapolis Tribune says that all the edifices were crowded and about two hundred persons rose in response to the evangelist's invitation to all who desired to live a new life.

Queen Victoria has declared herself absolutely and unalterably opposed to divorce for any cause. In cases of gross misconduct in which it would be cruel to force the innocent party to continue living with the guilty, she would grant judicial separation, but would on no account allow either the guilty or innocent party to contract a new marriage during the lifetime of the other. She holds that death alone can dissolve a marriage.

Major Geo. A. Hilton has been holding a series of meetings in Washington, D. C. His friends, who know how unselfishly he has devoted himself to the Lord's work during the past few years, are raising funds to present him with a testimonial. He has traveled far and wide, often covering over 20,000 miles in a year, to preach the Gospel where there was urgent need and often at his own cost, without any remuneration. Circumstances have rendered the present time appropriate for Christian people of all denominations to show their appreciation of such work. Contributions may be sent to Mr. J. C. Pratt, 622 Louisiana Ave., Washington, D. C.

TORTURED IN TIBET.

THE thrilling story which Mr. A. H. Savage Landor tells in the book just issued, entitled, "In the Forbidden Land," explains how it is that the world knows so little of Tibet. The account Mr. Landor gives of his reception in that country is not of a character to encourage visitors to follow in his steps. The Tetan authorities do not want foreigners in their country, and when some adventurous intruder does penetrate into their territories, against their known wishes, they leave him in no doubt as to their sentiments. In some way they learned that the traveler was coming, and perhaps they may have surmised that he would write a book about them. They resolved to keep him out, and as nature has given them facilities for exclusion by building a wall of mountains around Tibet, it is easier to prevent strangers entering than some nations find it. Mr. Landor was stopped at two of the mountain passes and turned back. A third attempt, by an exceedingly difficult route, was successful. With thirty followers he crossed the mountains and reached the sacred lake of Mansarowar. He made the best use of his opportunities, and his camera has now given to the outside world the first clear idea it has had of that wonderful land. But the people were evidently hostile and would not accept Mr. Landor's overtures of friendship. So menacing was their attitude that his Hindoo followers were alarmed and refused to go farther. One by one they deserted him until only two were left. With these he thoroughly explored the Brahmaputra basin, and was proceeding farther into the interior when they were arrested. They were brutally beaten and their hands were tied behind their backs. In this fashion they were marched to the residence of the Pombo, or Governor of the Province. This man had an ingenuity for inventing tortures of an inquisitor of the middle ages. One of his devices was a spiked saddle. Mr. Landor was placed on the back of a pony on which this implement of torture had been placed. It had a high back from which sharp iron spikes stuck out horizontally. By sitting well forward, he could have escaped the points, but a man riding the horse in his rear, held a rope attached to Mr. Landor's hands, which were still tied behind his back. This man stopped suddenly, would pull the victim backward on the spikes. After a long gallop Mr. Landor was taken to the Pombo, who examined his wounds and pronounced them satisfactory. During his imprisonment he was subjected to a variety of tortures, one of which was a very effective rack like those used in the Inquisition centuries ago. Red hot bars were held within an inch of his eyes and other methods of inflicting pain were employed. He would probably have been killed but for a peculiar fact. The Tibetans found that his hands were of a singular formation, the fingers being webbed higher than usual. They have a superstition that persons having such hands belong to a higher order of men whom it is not safe to kill. To this superstition Mr. Landor doubtless owes his life. His book, which is shortly to be published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers in this country, gives a vivid account of his escape from his savage captors back to civilization. Mr. Landor found by sad experience the truth of the Psalmist's warning:

The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty (Ps. 74:20).

A Journalist's Advice.

Among the reminiscences of Harold Frederic, the correspondent of the New York Times, who died recently, is one by a friend whom he endeavored to comfort in a bereavement. It was a young poet who was dead and his loss was felt all the more because of the bright promise of future greatness which his death brought to naught. Mr. Frederic, hearing how much the poet's friend was prostrated by his loss, wrote: "You say your poet friend is gone with half his work undone, and there is nothing more you yourself can do. My dear fellow, I am no preacher, but I will buffet you to-night with a text all my own. You can make your dead friend live once more by finding out what he would have wished and then doing it. Many of the tears shed on the graves of to-day dry all too soon." If the friends of Christ would apply those words to their own lives, how pleased he would be! Their Master would then live again on earth in them.

Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. (John 15:14).

A Missing Child.

A New York newsdealer is wearily searching the country around his home for his lost son. The boy, who is only six years old, disappeared mysteriously two weeks ago. His father, immediately he was missed, began his search for him. From sunrise to sunset he has pursued his way through the dense woods east and north of Astoria, supported by the belief that the boy is still alive, and probably held as a hostage by tramps. This suspicion is strengthened by the fact that a man, who lives in Winfield, L. I., reports that on the day of the child's disappearance, he saw a boy corresponding in description to the missing lad walking in the woods near Astoria in the company of a poorly dressed man and woman. The boy did not appear to know them well, and evidently was under restraint. Since then several farmers living in the neighborhood say that they have seen the boy in the company of the couple, who, it is believed, occupy some abandoned house in the wood or on its outskirts. What the object of the couple is, cannot be conjectured, as his father cannot pay ransom. The boy is probably as anxious to return to his father as the father is to have him. It is not with him as it is with God's lost children, who will not return to him when they can. Yet over them, too, there is infinite joy when they do return.

I say unto you there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15:10).

Dead at the Throttle.

A remarkable death occurred on a train of the Erie Railroad a few days ago. It was that of the engineer of a train which was running from Binghamton to Susquehanna. He was alone in the cab when he died, and no one knows how it occurred. The fireman, who was busy at the furnace, didn't know of the engineer's death until near Susquehanna. The locomotive was of the "Mother Hubbard" class, with the fireman's cab in the rear. When the speed of the train did not slacken on approaching the station, the fireman became alarmed, and, running over to the engineer's cab, shouted over the boiler to him. Receiving no reply, he climbed out on the running board, went around the head of the engine and reached the engineer's side. There he sat with his hand on the throttle, quite dead. The fireman unloosened the stiff fingers of the engineer from the throttle, reversed the machinery and applied the air brakes, stopping the train before it had passed the Susquehanna station many yards. Death must have come very suddenly to the poor man, otherwise he would have had presence of mind to stop the train. It was providential that the fireman was on the alert and knew what to do, or there might have been an accident in which many lives would have been lost. Little did the people in the train know what a risk they were running with that dead engineer in the cab. Happily for the Christian, he knows that He to whom he has committed the guidance of his life can never die, but will bring him safe to the eternal haven.

ROCK OF INSCRIPTION IN TIBET.

Saved by Humanity.

An engineer on a Mississippi railroad tells an interesting story of a narrow escape from a terrible catastrophe. He was driving through a heavy storm and was half way through a deep cutting when he saw something ahead on the track. He shut off steam and blew his whistle, but the thing did not move. As he came nearer, he saw that it was a sheep with two little lambs. His first impulse was to go ahead, believing that he could do so without damage to his train; but the sight of the innocent family touched him and he could not bring himself to slaughter them. He called his fireman and sent him on to drive the animals off the track. In a few minutes the fireman came back with news. There had been a landslide which had buried the tracks several feet deep. If the engineer had not stopped to save the sheep and her lambs, the train would have run at full speed into the debris, for it would have been impossible from the point where it was visible to have brought the train to a standstill in time to escape. The engineer is not the only person who has found an unexpected blessing in doing an act of kindness. There seems to be a law in the world that provides a reward for the man who has a loving and tender heart and tries to serve others.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy (Matt. 5:7).

A Censor in Trouble.

Shortly after a recent robbery in a bank, when a thief quietly took a large amount of money from the counter, under the eyes of the bank teller and a customer, a merchant was discussing the affair in another bank. A local journal says that the merchant was extremely severe and said that the bank clerk who allowed such a thing to be done ought to be discharged, if not imprisoned. The clerk to whom he was talking ventured to suggest that every one had moments when they were off their guard. The merchant, however, would not hear of it. "In a bank," he said, "there ought never to be such moments. Customers and clerks ought to be wide-awake and then no such robberies could be committed. Severe punishment ought to be meted out for absent-mindedness." After delivering himself in this fashion he strode out of the bank in a state of virtuous indignation; but in less than an hour he came back in a state of agitation. "Did I leave my money behind me?" he asked nervously. "Yes," said the clerk, "we found it on the counter after you had gone." The merchant was immensely relieved; he thought he must have been robbed, he said, on his way from the bank to his office and was glad to find it was safe. Even now, there are people who have need to remember our Lord's injunction:

Judge not that ye be not judged (Matt. 7:1).

A Victim to Duty.

A sad death, widely mourned, is that of Col. George E. Waring which occurred in New York, on Oct. 29. He returned on Oct. 25 from Cuba whither he went under the appointment of the President as special commissioner for the sanitation of Havana and other Cuban cities. He was not feeling well when he landed, but thought his ailment was only malaria. Two days later, however, his physician diagnosed the case as yellow fever. Other physicians who are yellow fever experts were called in consultation, and every means known to science was used for his recovery. On Friday the fatal symptom of black vomit appeared, and on the following day he died. It is a singular fact that he had probably done more than any living man to check the spread of the disease of which he died. In 1878, when Memphis was in the grasp of the yellow fever scourge, he went there and introduced a sewerage system which has transformed the city into one of the healthiest in the continent and has been the model for other Southern cities. Afterwards he undertook the difficult problem of cleaning the streets of New York and was the first of many commissioners, who have successively grappled with it, to give the citizens a clean city. The genius and energy he had displayed at Memphis marked him out as the best man to deal with the awful conditions existing in Cuba. He went there and made a thorough examination of the sanitary problem, exposing himself to infection with a noble disregard of his own safety. He completed his report of the situation and of the measures he would recommend for the purification of the cities and brought it to submit to the President. There is no doubt that it was in the performance of his duty in Cuba that he contracted the disease which he was trying to extirpate. It is very sad that in stripping the dread enemy of its power, he should have fallen a victim. So it is in the conflict with all evil, as God said it would be, when man admitted sin into the world. Victory over the enemy would be assured, but it would be achieved only at the cost of suffering to the victor.

It shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel. (Gen. 3. 15).

THE WORLD'S BLACK BELT.

Missionary Work of the African Methodist Episcopal Church at Home and Abroad—Carrying the Gospel to Africa and the West Indies.

THE latest annual report of the Home and Foreign Missionary Department of the African Methodist Episcopal Church reveals marked progress in the work of this organization, whose existence dates back not much more than a score of years, and whose founders and members are of a race but lately awakened to its marvelous possibilities, one of which is an important share in the evangelization of Africa and the West Indies.

The A. M. E. Church took form as a denomination in Philadelphia in 1816, with a single congregation as the nucleus of a religious body which has developed rapidly to its present proportions of 600,000 members, 56 annual conferences, 9 bishops, 5,000 ministers; 42 schools, collegiate, theological and industrial, and a thriving Missionary Department created soon after the war of 1861–65.

Many of the home missions are in the Southern and Western States and Territories, where the pressing need is easily apparent, and where improvement of the negro population under the efficient ministry of its own representatives is readily recognized. In various localities, where a few years ago it was impossible to maintain a missionary, the condition of the people is so improved that they are able to provide comfortable support for their pastors and build neat houses of worship. Many of the missions in Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas, South Carolina, Florida, Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma Territory have become self-supporting. A conference in Southwestern Georgia was organized during the past year with a membership of 150 ministers and 35,000 members. The report calls attention to the demand for pushing the work in Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Oregon and Washington, where many negroes have migrated and taken up claims, and where the importance of planting new missions is imperative, as is also the need of larger funds for the purpose.

The work of this Church in foreign fields has been exceptionally progressive and peculiarly interesting. Of the incorporation of the word "African" into the denominational name, before the occupation of that continent began, the A. M. E. Church Review says: "The rapid growth of the African M. E. Church on that continent because of that name, which providentially, as we now believe, won the sympathies and confidence of the natives, forces the conclusion that the first word in our tripartite name was inspired from above, to fit the greater operations in store for the Church." At the meeting in New York in 1897, of the Home and Foreign Missionary Society, a young African appeared before it, bearing from seven chiefs a petition to send missionaries to their people. The year before the Ethiopian Church, a religious body already established in Africa and provided with educated native missionaries, under the leadership of Rev. James W. Dwane, and at the invitation of Bishop Turner, president of the Missionary Department of the A. M. E. Church, united with the latter, which has thus found itself strengthened in unusual ways in the Dark Continent. The Church has now many stations in Liberia, Sierra Leone, South Africa, and the Transvaal, and is educating a number of young Africans at the Wilberforce College, Ohio; the Morris Brown College, Atlanta, Ga., the Central Tennessee College, Nashville, Tenn., and the Normal in Alabama; with the purpose of sending them back as educated workers to their own land. In this work for Africa, the labors of the white pioneers of the Philafrican League, who are opening up the hitherto untouched and slave-cursed sections, where the negro, unaided, cannot yet work effectively for his race, is of incalculable value.

In America this Church has mission stations as far north as Nova Scotia. It has others in Bermuda, Hayti, Cuba, Porto Rico and Barbadoes. The West Indian stations are of particular interest to Americans at present. In Cuba and Porto Rico, which have such a large negro population, the A. M. E. Church will find a wide field of usefulness before it. The civil and educational advancement of Cuba and Porto Rico, and the material prosperity of the islands depend largely upon their negro population, and the work of the A. M. E Missionaries may do much to the rehabilitation of the war and famine-stricken Antilles. That the Church is fully alive to its opportunities finds evidence in the fact that the first Protestant church organized in Santiago since the war, is the work of one of its missionaries, sent out August 13, with the Eighth Illinois Regiment.

The late hurricane which swept the Island of Barbadoes, devastating fields and leveling homes and churches, did not spare the A. M. E. Missions there. Reuben A. Sealey, presiding elder and superintendent of the West India Missions, and abroad, complete the well organized force of workers. The secretary of the board, Rev. H. B. Parks, D.D., 61 Bible House, New York City, will take pleasure in answering the questions of friends who may desire a more active and personal interest in this work.

MISSIONARIES OF THE A. M. E. CHURCH BRIDGETOWN, BARBADOES.

wrote from Bridgetown, Barbadoes, a few days after the hurricane:

Our church is leveled with the earth. We had spent over $1,000 on it. My people are in dire distress. Not two of them have a roof over them. They are begging for shelter where they may, and are being fed by the country. It will be six months or more before we can take up a collection or class pence.

The church to which Mr. Sealey refers was a nice stone building near completion, upon which it would have cost about $2,000, and its loss is a heavy affliction to a congregation by no means wealthy. Mr. Sealey, who is a man of superior education, has been six years in Barbadoes, and has built up four missions besides that at Bridgetown. He has a force of excellent helpers, to whom he pays an average salary of fifteen to thirty cents a day. The work was organized in 1892, the board paying him $500 a year. Mr. Sealey refused a call from a church in the United States, paying its pastor $1,100, to go into the mission field.

The president of the Board of Home and Foreign Missions is Bishop H. M. Turner of Atlanta, Ga.; next in authority to the Bishop is Vicar Bishop James M. Dwane, Queenstown, Cape Colony, Africa; a corps of able superintendents, presiding elders and pastors in charge of the various conferences and districts at home

Painting the Wrong House.

A Singular Blunder and How it was Detected.

SOME years ago a workman, who had saved some money, and had an interesting and growing family, decided to buy a home. At about that time there was offered at public auction a plot of ground with a rather dilapidated house in a neighborhood convenient to the man's place of employment. As he was quite a handy man about the house, he concluded that if he could buy the property at a low figure, and with the little capital he might have left and the work he personally could do during odd hours, he could soon make the property worth much more than he had paid for it, besides affording his family and himself a permanent place of residence.

The day of sale finally arrived, and the workman bought the property. He at once applied himself with diligence to its improvement. Every evening and every half-holiday for many weeks were devoted to repairing and painting and fixing up generally. A new fence was put up around the house; the shutters were put in shape; the broken window panes were replaced; the old wall paper was taken down, and new and artistic paper put up; the garden was looked after, and the whole establishment beautified up to the fullest extent of the happy owner's finances and personal ability.

After the family had once or twice visited the premises while in the course of improvement, finding each time occasion for agreeable surprise and mutual congratulation, they finally moved in and settled down, enjoying to their heart's content what their industry and economy had fairly entitled them to enjoy.

A few months after, one afternoon, the front doorbell rang, and the mistress of the house, opening the door, was confronted by a lady who asked permission to step into the house and inspect the premises. As the request came in somewhat of a mandatory tone, she hesitated a moment, when the lady explained by saying: "It is all right: I am the owner of the house." "But you must be mistaken," responded the mistress of the house, "this house is ours. My husband bought it and improved it, and we have lived here for some time." "Surely, there must be some mistake," responded the visitor. "I know this house is mine. It has been in the family for nearly half a century, and nothing could ever induce us to part with it." The workman's wife finally said: "You had better come and see my husband. He bought the house, and he knows all about it, and if you have any claims to the house, they should be presented to him. He will be at home this evening, and if you choose you may then call."

Evening came, and with it the visitor. The owner of the house insisted that the visitor must be mistaken. He had purchased the house, had found it in a rather dilapidated condition, had gradually improved it, investing all his own money and some that he had borrowed, besides much of his time, and could bring any number of witnesses to testify to the correctness of his assertions. Finally the lady said: "Have you the deed and title?" "Oh, yes," replied he, and immediately proceeded to a desk, from which he took the required papers. In the deed was a diagram, setting forth the exact location and dimensions of the property, and on a close investigation it was discovered that the house which the workman had bought was one very similar to this in appearance, but located a quarter of a mile distant, and that consequently he had paid and papered and improved the wrong house; and as he had gone into the enterprise even beyond his own personal means, ruin now stared him in the face.

How many there are in this world to-day who are taking care of their bodies, living on the fat of the land, clothing themselves in fine linen and purple, or, at the Judgment Day, will realize that all their lives they have painted, papered and improved the house which was perishable, and had neglected to look after that which was destined to endure forever!

The Sweetest Story of All.

(See Colored Illustration on First Page)

IN the beautiful picture on the first page of this issue, the artist has chosen a theme that touches the universal heart. Seated at the old dame's knee, the little one listens, with the absorbed interest and beautiful faith of childhood, to the wondrous story of Jesus, the Manger Child, that marvelous, ever-new tale, which fascinates the mind as no other ever can. As the aged reader rehearses the story, giving it slowly out, word by word, with finger, lest a syllable should be missed, the child sits in rapt attention, her sweet face a study, her earnest eyes gazing into the distant past, till they behold the twinkling stars over Bethlehem's plain, and her ears seem to distinguish the strains of the angel-host. And through it all, like a dream, comes the voice of the old grandmother, full of shakes and quavers, at times rising to simple grandeur as the "Sweetest Story of All" drops from her lips. What Christian mother has not such a picture in her own home!

"There is no book whose reading is more profitable than the Bible," says a prominent American lawyer. "I should consider my legal education incomplete without my knowledge of the Bible. The common law is founded upon the Ten Commandments. Before I was old enough to study Blackstone, I had gained the foundation of my legal education, sitting at my mother's knee and listening to her gentle voice telling the wonders of the tables of stone and the thunders of Sinai." Faraday, the famous scientist, wrote: "Some of the pleasantest recollections of my childhood are connected with the voluntary study of an ancient Bible which belonged to my grandmother. There were splendid pictures in it to be sure; but I recollect little or nothing about them. What comes vividly back on my mind are remembrances of my delight over the stories—my keen appreciation of the lessons they taught."

If such is the verdict of worldly men, who prize it for its wisdom and learning, what must be its measure of value to those to whom it is the Word of God—a direct message from the Heavenly Father?

The memory of the old Bible, read in the childhood home, has often been the means of winning the sinner back to God in after years. For the children themselves, the Good Book is full of the highest encouragement to pure and holy lives. It shows them, by the bright examples and remarkable careers of the children of the Bible, what models they are expected to keep in view. For them nothing in the whole range of literature can possess a greater fascination than the stories of Joseph the lad, Moses the baby in the bulrushes, Samuel, the little temple messenger whom God called, the little Jewish maiden who became instrumental in healing her Syrian master, and, last and best of all, the story of the Son of the carpenter, who Himself was "subject unto his parents."

She Could Not Tell it All.

A little boy was born blind. At last an operation was performed, and the light was let in slowly. When one day his mother led him out of doors, and uncovered his eyes, and for the first time he saw the sky and the earth, "O mother," he cried, "why didn't you tell me it was so beautiful?" The mother burst into tears, and said: "I tried to tell you, dear, but you could not understand me." So it is when we try to tell what is in the Bible. Unless the spiritual sight is opened, we can not understand. In the light of this, how blessed, how to be desired, is the work of the Holy Spirit! Ask, and receive.

I made a u out of a dry goods box by nailing one o the logs and used sticks of wood for the With a spread over it, it served for a e table. In the fall of 1891 we made a ack to New York. After a long spell of ess, God gave me back my health and I back to my home, and have been able to for my family for nearly six years. In time things have changed for the better. first great blessing was health and gth to do my duty, which I have appre- d very much. Two children bless our and fill my heart with love. We have an addition built to our cabin, and have it lined with table oilcloth; carpets are upon the floor; I have planed boards y kitchen and the woodwork and floors ainted. In place of dry goods boxes for us and centre tables, we have "real" bed- room suits and centre tables. My daughter sits at the organ and plays while I write to you.

I would like to tell you before I close that I found Jesus in my little cabin while at the washtub. He pardoned all my sins.

Now, my dear city-bred women, while I have given brief ideas of my experience in the far West, remember there are many things left untold. I do not envy your ease, but I would like to have you think of me as one who has humbly borne the Cross and received as my reward, Jesus, my Saviour and Redeemer.

Household Happiness.

The happiness of home-life depends largely upon considerateness in the little things that we are sometimes inclined to ignore, because we think them too small to be of importance. Thoughtlessness, more than wicked intent, mars the peace and comfort of many a home. Family life, says Dr. J. R. Miller, should be a blending of all the tastes, dispositions, talents, gifts and resources of all the members of the household. No member may live in a home circle as if he were dwelling alone in a great house with only himself to consider. He must do many things which he might not do if he were alone, because he is a member of a little community whose happiness and good he is to seek at every point. In household life, we must consider the comfort, peace and happiness of each other, and make an effort to repress any elements or dispositions in ourselves which tend to give pain to others. In demanding our rights, let us remember that other members of the family have rights, too, and that home happiness can be secured only by each in honor preferring the others, each seeking not to be ministered unto, but to minister.

A PIONEER HOMESTEAD IN MONTANA.

First Women Doctors.

The world's first nurse was doubtless a woman. Who so wise as the mother in infantile ailments or in ministering to husband and son when they came home weary from toil or hurt from the fray? From administering herbs and simples and binding wounds and bruises, to scholarly degrees in medicine and surgery was perhaps a natural transition. At any rate, the adoption of medicine and surgery among the business professions of the gentle sex, does not, says The Medical Journal belong entirely to the enterprise of the new woman. Long, long ago, Agnodice, an Athenian maiden, equipping herself in the medical schools of Athens, practiced among her countrywomen with such marked success that, when some said it was unlawful for a woman to be a doctor, the women of Athens raised such an outcry that the prosecution was dismissed and the law bearing the objectionable construction was amended. In 1492, several women obtained the degree of doctor of medicine in European universities. In the eleventh century Salerno had a female physician of wide celebrity. In the fourteenth, Dorothea Bacchi was professor of medicine in the famous University of Bologna, where other women have held similar professorships. French laws of 1311 and 1352 recognized male and female surgeons, and prescribed official examinations for both.

Queer Letter-Carriers.

Everybody likes to get a letter, and postmen are usually welcome callers. Some of the world's letter-carriers are very odd-looking officers—not at all like the uniformed public servants we watch for when longing to hear from a friend. The postman of Natal, for instance, wears a wild-looking head-dress, sometimes a coat and leg-bracelets, carries the mail and a bag of bread on his back, an assegai in one hand and a staff in the other. When not running, his food is a maize porridge which is like paste, and is called "poop:" it is a popular diet in Natal. He is honest and earnest, runs 80 or 100 miles a week, and the Government pays him $5 a month, his rations and all the uniform he will consent to wear. In Japan, runners in remote districts are as lightly clad as the Natal official: a bamboo pole is carried over the shoulder, with a bag at each end.

"Waiting for Charlie."

Every day, just before noon, a woman in a faded black dress, comes to the City Hall, in New York, and walks about the main corridor until she sees Janitor Reese She touches his arm and asks: "If you see Charlie, won't you please send him home. Tell him his breakfast is waiting for him." The janitor promises that he will tell Charlie if he sees him: he always says some kind and cheerful words to her, and she goes away with a hopeful look in her eyes. Charlie, her only son, died several years ago. Her mind was affected by grief, and she believes that he has gone out for a little while and will come home soon. Every morning she prepares his breakfast, and when tired of waiting, goes to City Hall and asks Janitor Reese to send him home. The world is full of waiting hearts. It would be well if all could turn their hearts to the eternal, unfailing One, for "blessed are all they that wait for him;" their waiting is not in vain.

HUSH THEE, MY BABY.

HUSH, hush thee, my baby, hush, hush thee to rest,
Be still! and I'll sing thee the song thou lov'st best,
For I'll sing of the mother whose blessing thou'lt be,
And of hearts that are glad when they think upon thee,
And of prayers which are rising that thou may'st be blest;
Then hush thee, sweet baby, hush, hush thee to rest.

Oh, weep not, my baby, weep, weep not today,
I'll sing till I charm thy young sorrows away;
For my song shall be all of those blessings divine,
Of the home, and the hope that, sweet baby, are thine,
Of Him who is waiting all bright things to give,
And o, Him who has died that my baby may live!

LITTLE FOLKS' GAMES.

IN winter time the entertainment of little folks is much more perplexing a problem than in summer, when outdoor play is the order of the season, and birds, and bees, and butterflies interest the children. Mrs. Hamilton Mott, in her little book, Home Games and Parties, makes some valuable suggestions; among them that of the Brownie Play, where the little folks' pastime is turned to good account in helping mother. The Brownies, as folk-lore stories tell, were a comical little people whose fun consisted in doing good in a very mysterious way. The tired farmer's wife would turn from her beans to the baby's cradle, and when she got back to the beans she would find them all shelled. When she went to the spring for water, or to the garden for vegetables, the floor would be swept, the fire kindled, and a bubbling kettle on the stove would greet her with a merry song on her return.

The Brownie idea is to tell Brownie stories to the children, and suggest that they set themselves to work doing good in this mysterious way. To make the play more real, they may be given some inexpensive bits of Brownie costume—pointed caps of brown felt, with a tassel dropping to one side, and felt moccasins, with long pointed toes, in which they may walk about noiselessly in their benign mischief. With a little training, children catch the spirit of the play as easily as they do that of kindergarten games. The lessons will be learned before the usual time, unasked errands will be run, the baby will be entertained, the disordered room be tidied, mother, father, big brothers and sisters will have occasions of very genuine surprise at the mysterious work of the Brownies, done whenever their backs are turned. The Brownie game is capable of infinite variations, and its influence on little folks and its benefit to the home is so great that it is well worth careful teaching.

The patty-pan party is another good suggestion. Nannie's mamma invites Nannie's friends to spend an afternoon; she takes them into the kitchen, where Nannie presents each with a new little tin patty-pan and plate, and Nannie's mamma says: "We will all go to work and make our own cakes and custards for tea, and see how well we can do it. I want each little girl to have something nice to take home to show her mother what a good housekeeper she can be. No one knows until she tries how much fun it is to cook." This is excellent for a birthday party.

"Suffer the Children."

We suffer the little ones to come unto Jesus, says Margaret Sangster, in her beautiful book on The Art of Home-Making, when we so bring them up that our homes are full of the lovelight from above: when we do not comment on their faults in their presence, nor on their remarkable attainments either. And mothers, whatever else we leave undone, let us not cease to pray much for the children God has given us.

EDUCATING STREET WAIFS.

Manual Training and Nature Study in Philadelphia — A New and Attractive Field for Church Work.

HOW to help the boys of the streets to develop into self-respecting young men and capable members of society, is a problem that is pressing upon the church in every large town and city. The boys' club, Sunday School, boys' entertainments, and various other efforts fail to hold the interest of boys of this class long enough to do them the good they need.

The problem has been so successfully solved by the Boys' Guild of St. James' Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, that Grace Church, New York, is working along the same line; similar efforts have begun at Baltimore, Liverpool, and minor places, and are evidently to come into general use. J. W. Fraser, Jr., the son of a wealthy sugar refiner, when a lad was fascinated with and greatly helped by the elementary art instruction, real manual training, and nature study that he had received in the private classes of J. Liberty Tadd. At his suggestion, the guild engaged Mr. Tadd to give similar instruction in the night school for boys, that was opened in the church basement a dozen years or more ago.

The results were most gratifying. The boys at once got so interested in these new methods of work that there were soon several lads waiting for every vacancy. They began to realize, after a few lessons, some of the marvelous capabilities of their own organism, and this developed self-respect. Then the creation of beautiful designs, and making them on paper, or in clay or wood, unconsciously fostered a love for the beautiful in art, and a recognition of the charm and spirit of nature, which had an equally unconscious but all the better influence in molding the moral character and spiritual sensibilities.

These effects on character were obtained by work that trained the boys to use their hands and eyes, their will and judgment. This education also brought out the special bent or natural capacity of each boy, so that he could proceed to qualify himself to be an expert in that particular line. This training also developed energy, persistence, thrift, the desire for work, and the ability to excel. Because the boys were so completely wrapped up or interested in these new methods, accounts in part for their efficiency. It is not surprising, therefore, to find hundreds of young men, now occupying responsible positions in the Quaker City, who attribute their start in life to the peculiar interest of, and their training in, the night schools. For the one noted has been the parent of several others, each remarkably successful and always crowded, with many more names on the waiting list.

No untried methods can produce such results. Mr. Tadd brings to these night-school classes the full fruits of the natural education which he has worked out with so much genius and pains in the Philadelphia Public School of Industrial Art, in his own studio classes, and in various reformatory institutions. Altogether, thousands of children and hundreds of teachers have received it during the last twenty years. "Art, to him, is a hardy plant, whose seeds find congenial soil in every clime; beauty, to him, is an universal harmony that praises the Creator in all created things; this he would teach his pupils to find in every environment."

The work begins with freehand drawing, exercises on the blackboard with both hands, not one hand only, followed by creative drawing and painting. Clay modeling and wood carving are rotated with the drawing and designing. Then comes drawing and modeling from natural and art forms, and then from memory. All artificial aids are discarded; no rigid system is followed, but each pupil works in what is the best and most natural way for him. All this gives a dexterity to the hand, to both hands, that is indeed remarkable to those who can use but one hand only, and that awkwardly. The eye is taught to recognize not only color, but distance, space, relations, magnitudes, grace, proportion, fitness, etc.

Thus is acquired the power to make the eye unconsciously guide the hands in automatically obeying the mind. In other words, it enables one to draw as a mode of expression, just as we write automatically. So, too, in whatever way we wish to use the hands, this manual dexterity and power to do things gracefully and well is of vast benefit. Not until the hand itself is thus made skilful are tools and constructive work used. The great thing is to uniformly develop the mechanism of one's whole body, rather than to spend time and money on artificial machines or book processes.

These new methods are free to all. They do not even require any special apparatus. The manual training drawing calls for only some cheap tables and blackboards, paper, pencils, brushes, and chalk. A few wooden tools and some common clay are ample for the modeling. In wood carving, a $5 set of chisels will suffice for several pupils. A few outfits of this kind cost very little, or, if used in rotation, will enable hundreds of pupils to get the remarkable benefits herein but barely touched upon. Any bright man or woman can be equipped for teaching by practising the methods described in Mr. Tadd's book, from which our engravings are taken.

Chinese Scholarship.

One of the great days of the year in China is that upon which the annual examination at Pekin begins. This event is thus described by a writer in Travel: "There were probably twelve thousand more people in Yunnan-sen than usual, and the streets were flocked with students and teachers and learned men. The candidates numbered 4,80c, but of these only sixty-four could possibly pass. The remainder would have to wait another three years before they could be examined again. Some Chinamen begin coming up when they are eighteen, and they continue to come up and be plucked triennially until they are ninety, and their sons, and grandsons, and great grandsons are also competitors. The Imperial Examining Commissioner travels overland with stately slowness from Pekin to Yunnan, taking generally five months to accomplish the journey. One hundred li out—about thirty miles—he is met by city officials, and his palanquin is sealed to prevent bribery and corruption. Then he is carried to the examination hall, and during his stay ranks with the Viceroy, though in Pekin he may be only an insignificant mandarin, with a glass button. Not much confidence is placed in the integrity of the candidates, for they are cribbed, cabined, and confined in the narrowest of dismal cells; before they enter they are searched, so that no cribs may be stowed up their capacious sleeves, or pre-composed essays written on their finger-nails; and when once in they are locked in and cannot come out till gunfire at night.

"We met some of these students. They made no secret of their thoughts that we were ridiculous personages, though they kindly conceded that we were probably clever men because we each had a big nose. And they plied us with all sorts of questions. Were there examinations in our country? There were really! That must have been since some of the great Chinese men had been there and taught the way. And had we a sun? Was it the same as the Chinese sun, and were the rivers and trees the same? When we said yes they did not contradict us. They smiled."

he Old Testament Corroborated by the New.*

HE question whether the records of the Old Testament are historical or apochryphal, is not a matter f discussion. They are confirmed be- d rational dispute by contemporane- history outside the Bible. The plagues Egypt, the wondrous exodus of Israel m Egyptian bondage, their passage r the Red Sea, the burial in its waters he armies of Egypt, the giving of the l. the wonders of the desert, and the s ifice on Mt. Carmel, occurred not in a her, but in the presence of thousands a hundreds of thousands of eye wit- ses. They occurred when the art of ing was generally understood, and en books and libraries abounded over Egypt, Syria, Chaldea and Palestine, and e early incorporated into, and become a rt of the unchallenged history of the ld, and are as well attested as the de- ction of Jerusalem, or the de- e and fall of the Roman Empire. o history has been regarded sacred, or guarded with such spless vigilance as the annals of ti Hebrew people. Says Josephus, a w of great learning and influ- e, born seven years after the ci ifixion: "How firmly we have n credit to these books of our on (the Old Testament), is evi- by what we do; for during so y ages as have already elapsed, ne has been so bold as to add thing to them or take away any- ng from them. But it has be- e natural to all Jews immedi- and from their birth, to esteem e books to contain divine doc- s, and to persist in them, and i casion comes, be willing to die them, for it is no new thing fo our captives, many of them in ber, and frequently in time. e seen to endure racks and ch of all kinds upon the the- s, that they may not be obliged ay one word against our laws, e records that contain them. reas there are none in all ng the Greeks who would en- the least harm on that ac- t, no, not in the case if all their ngs, which are among them, to be destroyed."

e knowledge of the Old Tes- nt events were not limited e Hebrew people. It was ered up, committed to writing greater or less extent, and in p constituted the contents of books libraries. The histories, or clear al- ns to them, are found engraven on uments and tombstones and buried s, where they have been sleeping in ce and forgetfulness for thousands ears. These are being exhumed by pade of the archæologist, and are to a ee duplicating the Old Testament, nto a wonderful extent are corrobor- the sacred records. That fourteenth ter of Genesis, long the arsenal of sceptic and critic, now gives the most peachable testimony to the accuracy e Old Testament historian. The Tell rna tablets, and almost every added very, is but a new witness to the city of the Old Testament.

who accepts the divine authority of New Testament logically accepts that of e Old. Similar testimony could be ced to almost any extent. The New ament is the complement of the Old. terlinked are the Old and New Tes- nts, the former is regarded by the stian world as Messianic. It seems ve been the great object of the for- er acquaint the world with Christ and ature of his mission; to prepare the d for his advent and furnish proof of his Messiahship. So the Master himself teaches. "All things," he says, "must be fulfiled which are written in the law and in the prophets concerning me." "Search the Scriptures for these are they which bear witness of me." "If ye had believed Moses ye would believe me, for he wrote of me." "Beginning," says the evangelist, "with Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." Christ represented himself as being the great theme of the Old Testament Scriptures.

There are difficulties in the Old Testament, and there are difficulties out of the Old Testament. In the natural world there are wonders, unanswered questions, inexplicable things. We are environed on every side by mysteries; the best way out of them is not the denial of the divine existence, for it only deepens the mysteries around us. Nor is the denial of the supernatural the best way out of the Old Testament difficulties. It only increases the darkness and complicates the riddle. "I would give all I possess in the world, and all this world beside, were it mine," said an aged atheist, "could I believe there is a God, for the rest it would bring." There is but one resting place in the universe, that is in God; here and nowhere else is rest unto the intellect and unto the soul.

ZOLA'S TABLE, WHICH SOLD FOR 32,000 FRANCS.

This table, which is an ordinary piece of library furniture, has become suddenly famous, as it was chosen to be the means of saving the great French author's home and all his belongings. Zola, about the time of his conviction and imprisonment, was sued by his creditors, at the instigation of political enemies, and judgment for 30,000 francs ($6,000), was obtained against him. His friends offered to satisfy the judgment, but their tender was refused, and an execution was issued against his household effects, the object being to break up his home and scatter his fine library. The sale took place in Zola's garden. The first article to be offered was this table. Zola's friends were present in force, and made their bids so rapidly that the offers ran up at a rate that astounded Zola's enemies, and the table was knocked down for 32,000 francs—more than enough to cover the judgment and costs. Of course, there was no further sale. Our photograph (taken by M. Gribayedoff), shows Zola's lifelong friend, Desmonlius, the famous artist in front, while near the table stands M. Fasquette, the publisher, who paid the price. History shows few more remarkable instances of human friendship and fraternal loyalty than this.

The Art of Making Others Happy*

SOME supersensitive girls almost invite the pain from which they suffer so keenly, says an observant writer, and the getting into this state of mind is one of which I would like all my girls to beware. Just at first you are sensitive to what seems an unkind word; in a little while you doubt even the kind word if the mode of expressing it does not seem as hearty as it should. And in a shorter time than seems possible, you busy yourself looking for the word that was never meant, for the tone that was never thought of, and for the neglect that was never intended. You have simply, my dear girl, gotten yourself into a morbid state, where the tears are quick to come. The heart is heavy, and you are a sorrow not only to yourself, but to every one around you. The antidote? It is a very practical one. Busy yourself in making other people happy. Relieve somebody else of some of the burdens of life. Work, and work so hard and so well that you will not have time to analyze all the talk that is going on, and being a help rather than a hinderance, you will find your heart growing light, the smiles coming oftener than the tears, and you, yourself, will be glad because you are of some use in the world.

The Earliest American Bibles.

AT a recent sale in Philadelphia, a copy of what is believed to be the first Bible in the English language printed in the United States, was disposed of to a private bidder. It was a Bible printed by Robert Aitken, of Philadelphia in 1782. It is claimed, however, that there was earlier American Bibles. The New York Sun recalls the fact that William Bradford endeavored to issue a Bible under the auspices of the Society of Friends in 1688, Cotton Mather's Bible (the "Biblia Americana"), upon the preparation of which he spent fifteen years, was never published, though he tried to find printers in 1710, 1713 and 1728, and exists to-day in manuscript in the library of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and in 1770 John Fleming, a Scotch printer of Boston, circulated the prospectus of a proposed edition of the Bible, but the project failed through want of encouragement. Finally, in 1781, Robert Aitken of Philadelphia printed the New Testament in English, and the year following issued the whole Bible in that language—the first so issued in this country of which copies are known. Thus, one apparently has to come down to the era of American independence without meeting a Bible printed here in English, though editions of the Scriptures had been published for the use of the Indians in 1661, 1663 and 1685, and for the use of the Germans in 1743, 1763 and 1776. In 1752, Kneeland & Green, the Boston printers, issued for Daniel Henchman and other booksellers 800 copies of the Bible in the English language in small quarto. No copy now exists of this edition, which was printed secretly with the London imprint of the copy used (London: Printed by Mark Baskett, Printer to the King's Most Excellent Majesty), in order to prevent a prosecution from those who, in England and Scotland, possessed the exclusive publishing rights. Kneeland & Green printed a little later an edition of the New Testament in duodecimo, with a London imprint, and still later Rogers & Fowle printed about 2,000 copies of the New Testament for the same booksellers who handled the other editions. It is not impossible that the question will some day be settled and Isaiah Thomas proved positively to be wrong or right. The discovery of a copy of the edition of the Bible printed by Kneeland & Green would do much to decide the matter.

Working-Girls' Homes.

Hall Caine, the famous English author, now in this country, has recently been making a personal investigation of the "slums" and homes of the poor in lower New York. He has made a special study of the condition and surroundings of the poorly-paid working-girls, and finds much that is capable of being improved and reformed. In an interview he advocates: "The establishment of more and more homes for working girls—homes that shall be in the true sense homelike; homes that shall not be dominated by the spirit of institutionalism; homes without locks on the front doors and bolts on the back ones; homes that shall be open and free at all times; homes where the meals are not regulated by the clock; where there are no other tests than those which are to be found always under the roof of an affectionate mother and a righteous and indulgent father: where there is freedom to come and to go exactly as the members of the family think well, and where there are no other regulations than those which require that a girl should be of unblemished character and irreproachable behavior. Homes of another kind, for girls of another class—the undeserving class—are no doubt necessary also, but the first need of great cities like New York and London seems to be homes of the kind I indicate."

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Mountain Cabin Home—Truth and Lying—The Dance—Showing One's Feelings.

Just mother! That's all.
Whether she dwell in hut or hall,
Whether she wear a velvet gown
And lay her head on a pillow of down,
Or sleep at night on a pallet hard,
With hands by labor rough and scarred;
Queen or peasant, 'tis quite the same,
Mother is always the sweetest name
To the children who love her in hut or hall,
She's just "dear mother," and that is all.

THE other day I was walking along a beautiful, but lonely, road in the mountains, and at a turn where the path led into a lovely valley there was a little cabin, with chickens, dogs and children about the door. A comely woman with her arms bare and a 'kerchief tied about her dark hair was busy with her washing, and the lines were already full of linen growing sweet in the sunshine. "Are these all yours?" I asked looking at the pretty brood of boys and girls, close together like little steps. "Yes," she said, smiling, "I've never lost one."

Long may that mother be able to say that, for to few of us is it given to keep always with us the children who come bringing so much of heaven with them. As the poet says

> There is no flock, however watched and tended,
> But one dead lamb is there.

Still harder is it for the mothers whose dear ones grow up and wander away, and are lost on the mountains of sin.

Did you ever think that there are women who have the mother-heart, though they have never had chick or child of their own? Such a one is Aunt Betsey, whose loving watch-care is over two orphans, a girl and a boy, whom she mothers with a solicitude which never fails, and who have found a safe asylum in her house. Aunt Betsey is not rich in this world's goods, but she is rich in faith, and when she adopted Carrie's brother, because she found that Carrie was lonely and pined for a companion, her friends remonstrated. They feared that her means would not stand the strain. Her answer was: "I cannot appear before the Master by and by and tell him that I shut my door on one of his little ones because I didn't believe he could afford to carry me through." Hers is the true maternal heart.

YOUR question, Carolus, as to whether there are any circumstances which justify a lie, opens up room for discussion, though personally I have no hesitation in saying that I think a straight course always the best, and that I believe in out and out truth always. One lie, one evasion even, generally brings a half-dozen others in its train, and before the person who has deviated from strict truth knows how it has happened his feet are entangled in a network of falsehood. We are not, however, responsible for the impressions others receive from our statements, if we have made them in good faith. A truthful person may make a false statement believing it to be true. In this case, her mistake is not a lie, nor a lie's first cousin. Teach children to be absolutely truthful, and in order to do this, dear friend, do not treat them with harshness and set a watch on all their innocent talk, but be perfectly frank and candid in every one of your relations with them.

"IS IT right for a Christian to dance? Is it right for a Christian to read novels? Is it right for a Christian to attend the theatre?" All these questions came up in recent letters, and you, dear Friends in Council, are invited to answer them. There is a sermon by Rev. Dr. Bushnell on this theme of amusements, and its title is "Free to Amusements and Too Free to Want Them," while the text the good man chose was that one of St. Paul's letter to the brethren at Corinth. "If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go, whatever is set before you eat, asking no question for conscience sake." The reference is of course to the old custom of using at heathen feasts food which had been offered at idolatrous altars, and part of which had been left there as a sacrificial gift. It really seems to some of us that the Christian's life is too happy, too full, too free, to permit of his caring for these merely worldly recreations which are dear to those who have not entered on the higher avocations of the Christian. Dr. Bushnell says: "It comes to us every hour that men who are deeply immersed in some great work or cause have no care for anything else, least of all for anything that appears to be trivial."

Of one thing I have no doubt, and that is that we should never be "disposed to go" to any place of worldly pleasure concerning the propriety of which we have a doubt. Unless we are sure that we can ask the Master's blessing on any scene of amusement, and expect his dear presence there, we would far better remain away from it.

SANG Robert Burns:

> As fair art thou, my bonnie lass,
> So deep in luve am I,
> And I will luve thee still, my dear,
> Till a' the seas gang dry.
> Till a' the seas gang dry, my dear,
> And the rocks melt in the sun,
> I will luve thee still, my dear,
> While the sands o' life shall run.

I've been thinking a good deal lately about our dreadful lack of demonstration in our dealings with the loved ones. We are cold and hateful, indifferent and fault-finding, we nag and fret and put on injured looks, and are ill to please, and hard to live with. All the while deep in our hearts there is the true love, that is sure to last till all the seas gang dry, but what good does it do the wife who is afraid to ask her husband for a dollar, or the husband who is sore and uncomfortable all day because he has offended his wife, and she is tart and snippy and as remote as Nova Zembla, while he, poor man, has not the ghost of an idea what he has done to provoke her displeasure. Ah, my friends, what we need more and more in our everyday life is everyday Christianity. To be patient with the living is a duty we should not shirk.

> Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone
> Beyond earth's weary labor,
> When small shall be our need of grace
> From comrade and from neighbor,
> When low our weary heads are laid,
> And love is past replying,
> What tender ruth shall we have gained,
> Alas! by simply dying!

Don't let us wait to be good and kind and tender and forbearing with our kith and kin till the moss grows on their graves. Better one rose in the dear one's hand to-day than stacks and sheaves laid on the dear one's coffin.

Remarkable Conversions.

Instances of God's Saving Grace Operating on the Sinful Hearts of Men.

"Saved to the Uttermost."

AMONG the conversions of which I have knowledge, the most remarkable, in many respects, is that of a young Austrian gentleman—member of a rich and noble family. I have his testimony before me as I write, and it finishes a powerful lesson to all who are seeking happiness outside of the fountain where alone true happiness flows—Jesus Christ. This young man had all the advantages that wealth, influence and high position could give. He drank deep of the cup of sinful pleasure and combined indulgence bred remorse and disgust. A gambler, a frequenter of low resorts, a devotee of worldly gayety in its most alluring form, he knew that he was on the broad path that led to destruction, but was unable to stop. His allowance was spent as fast as it was received. He contracted dishonorable debts on every hand. At last his excesses drove him from his father to disown him. He left Austria and traveled in Egypt, adding to his vices wherever he went. Every sinful indulgence that money could procure, he tasted. He became the prey of the most frightful passions, which, like demons, controlled his life and threatened to destroy him. He reached New York city with $600, a mental and physical wreck, a victim of opium and morphine. One night he entered the hall of the Bowery Mission. As he heard there sank into his poor, sinful soul and thrilled him through and through. There was hope and mercy and forgiveness, even for the "worst of sinners." Even that was he! All that night he cried out for pardon and for the power to overcome temptation, and his cry was not in vain. Light came, like a gentle soothing influence that shattered heart and gave it pardon and peace. His life, since that night, has been a glorious exemplification of Divine power to save to the uttermost." Saved and kept, he gratefully praises the goodness of God and gladly relates his own experience as an encouragement to other wanderers in sin to lay their burdens at the foot of the Cross.

Eleven Years of Dissipation.

ONE winter night, thirteen years ago, a man, nearly frozen, stepped into an open doorway in Bleecker street, New York. He was scantily clothed, weary and footsore, faint from long fasting, penniless and driven out for want of sleep. He was a filthy, heavy-hearted, helpless drunkard. Home and loved ones, friends and social standing, money and occupation had all been sacrificed to this insatiable appetite. He had been tenderly reared in a Christian home, with the best of surroundings. Entering college at seventeen years of age, his prospects were the brightest. With plenty of friends and money, and lucrative position under the government, destined to prosper. Under the shadow of a great grief, he sought forgetfulness in drink, and laid the foundation for a dissipated life. For seven years previous to my meeting him, he had been a hopeless drunkard, sinking lower and lower. Hearing the sound of music and going to get where it was warm, he entered the Florence Mission. Here he was led to Christ. The appetite for drink was taken away and has never wanted it since. For twelve years he has been a Christian worker, leading many souls to Christ. He is now at the head of a mission work in a large city. All these years I have been in touch with him and he has been a godly man, free from every taint of the past, and a living witness to the fact that Christ can save a hopeless drunkard of many years standing.

An Infidel Banker's Change of Heart.

DURING a series of meetings, which I was conducting in a small Kentucky town, I learned that one of the most influential citizens was an avowed infidel. He, and his direction an atheistic club had been formed, whose pernicious influence was very apparent. His wife was a consecrated Christian. During our special services she devoted a certain hour, each day, to fervent prayer for the conversion of her unbelieving husband. One morning I visited his bank, and after a time he invited him to attend the services that evening. Taking me into a private room, he pointed to several shelves of books written by leading infidels, remarking: "These are my bible. I cannot believe the fables you preach." I left, saddened by the thought that I had failed to impress him. The Christain wife, however, did not cease her earnest prayers; nor did her self-denying labor in the least. As she was leaving the house one evening for church, he hastily arose from his chair, and abruptly exclaimed: "I'll go too." The text that night was: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." While the preacher was discussing the "great salvation," the fatal neglect and the impossibility of escape, Mr. F. (the infidel), sprang to his feet, and coming to the pulpit, extended his hand to the speaker. For a second or two there was a thrilling silence in the church; then with deep emotion, the infidel told of his heart-struggles for years; described his fruitless search for peace, and his restless and miserable life. Tears of joy filled his eyes, as with trembling lips he now declared his faith in Christ, as his personal redeemer. "To-night," he said boldly, "I claim this great salvation as mine, through Jesus Christ, my Saviour." During these sixteen years Mr. F. has been a zealous, consistent Christian; and in the capacity of deacon in his church, and superintendent of the Sunday School, his life has gone forth as a light to men, through the power of the One whom he once denied.

A Despairing Actor.

ONE Sunday evening in the early winter of '96, an actor, playing with his company in a town of Iowa, while searching for a "poker game," was arrested by the singing of the well-known song, "Throw Out the Life-line." Attracted by the sweet strains he was led to enter the door of a nearby church, where Gospel meetings were in progress. The warmth and joyousness were in vivid contrast to the cold and cheerlessness without; and soon memories of early days flitted across his mind, softening his heart. He felt as though held to his seat, while the preacher emphasized the prophet's words, "Prepare to meet thy God." His long dormant conscience was stirred to its depths. It seemed to the lonely actor as though he were beyond the bounds of hope. His head dropped forward on his breast and melting tears began to flow. As soon as the service closed, he hurried from the building, but could not shake off the deep impressions on his heart. The card table, the glitter of the familiar bar-room, had lost their attractions. For three weeks the Holy Spirit strove with him. It was a time of trouble. Everything went wrong; money was recklessly squandered. His professional career, the applause of the audiences became distasteful. Even whiskey became nauseous. At length utterly forlorn, he wandered into another revival meeting and was led to publicly confess his need and acceptance of Christ. The change was instantaneous. He stood the derision of associates bravely, and soon resigned his position in the company, facing poverty and want. But God was leading. In a short time the way opened for a year's study in a Theological Seminary, and soon he was led to consecrate his voice and musical training to the service of his Master. He says he is now one of the happiest of men as he sings the Gospel of the Lord he loves in meetings.

HONORING ITS FOUNDER.

The Bowery Mission Unveils a Tablet to the Memory of A. G. Ruliffson, and also Celebrates its Nineteenth Anniversary.

SUNDAY afternoon, October 30, will long be remembered by Christian workers in the lower part of New York City, as the occasion of a double memorial service at the Bowery Mission. Just nineteen years before, on that very day, the grand old Mission was founded by Rev. AlbertGleason Ruliffson, and the latest gathering was for the double purpose of celebrating the anniversary of the Mission, and unveiling a memorial tablet erected by loving friends in honor of its founder.

LATE REV. A. G. RULIFFSON.

It was a peculiarly representative assemblage which filled the beautiful Mission hall at No. 55 Bowery. Looking from the platform, one could see the faces of the typical street wanderers, the haggard looks and worn frames of those who were doing daily battle with temptation and adversity. The audience was mostly men, although here and there a feminine face could be discerned in some modest corner of the hall. Sprinkled through the crowd were many old friends of the Mission who had made it their spiritual home for over a decade, and who loved it because there they had first been led to the Cross, and to pardon and peace. On the platform, seated beside Superintendent Wyburn, were a number of Mission workers, pastors of city churches and others interested in the labors of the Mission among the poor and lowly of the populous East-side.

After a short address by the Superintendent, explaining the object of the gathering, the Ruliffson memorial tablet, which had been set in the wall of the Mission hall was unveiled. The inscription on the tablet reads as follows:

IN LOVING MEMORY OF
REV. ALBERT G RULIFFSON;

Founder of this Mission, Nov. 1879;
President of its Board of Trustees and active in its work until Sept. 1895.
ENTERED INTO REST, MAY 2nd, 1897.

"If any man serve me,
him will my father honor."
John 12 : 26.

Rev. Dr. Wylie, of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, of New York, delivered the memorial address, and paid a high tribute to the founder, whose efforts had resulted in raising a Gospel beacon light on the East-side, that had been the means of saving thousands from moral shipwreck. Addresses were also delivered by S. H. Hadley, Superintendent of the Water Street Mission, Mrs Sarah J. Bird, the "Mother of the Bowery Boys," and a Christian worker on the East-side for the last fifteen years, and by several others. Fanny Crosby, the aged hymn-writer had composed the following hymn for the occasion, which was sung to the tune of "Webb":

OUR MISSION'S BIRTHDAY SONG.

In bonds of sacred union
And Christian love we meet,
To praise our great Creator
And worship at his feet.
We lift our hearts together,
A glad and grateful throng,
And sing with holy rapture
Our Mission's birthday song.

Our Mission, how we prize it!
The Ark of peace and rest
To thousands worn and weary,
By Satan's yoke oppressed;
And some to-day are with us
To swell our grateful throng,
And sing with holy rapture
Our Mission's birthday song

God keep us ever faithful
To this our treasured Home,
And give us strength and vigor
For many years to come;
And when we go rejoicing
To hail the ransomed throng,
May thousands still re-echo
Our Mission's birthday song.

Mr. Ruliffson, the founder of the Mission—which was the pioneer of its kind in the United States, and whose converts are now found in every land under the sun—was born at South Gilboa, N. Y., in 1833. He was converted during a revival at Stamford, N. Y., in 1854. He studied for the ministry and was graduated from Union Theological Seminary, New York, in 1862, and ordained the same year by the New York Presbytery. During the Civil War he served in the Christian Commission, and as army chaplain. For several years he was pastor of the Brick Church Chapel Mission, New York. Failing health sent him to Minnesota, where he did excellent service as District Secretary of Home Missions for the Minnesota Synod, being appointed by the Presbyterian Board in New York. On returning to New York he became the founder and superintendent of the Bethany Institute for Women's Christian Work—a field in which he labored successfully for more than twenty years. It was during this period that he founded and became the first President of the Bowery Mission, with which he continued to be closely associated for fifteen years. Mr. Ruliffson passed to the reward of his labors on May 2, 1897, but his memory is still warmly cherished by many of his old associates in the Mission, and by the hundreds of poor and helpless men whom he has befriended.

A number of friends of the late founder, from New Jersey, were present at the unveiling of the memorial tablet, and Mrs. J. Ward Childs, wife of the late Mr. Childs, once Superintendent of the Mission, was also an interested and sympathetic spectator of the proceedings.

A Peace Lesson from Our War.

Novosti, one of the leading Russian journals, discussing the probabilities of the failure or success of the Czar's disarmament proposition, makes a pertinent observation. It believes that the war between the United States and Spain proved the wisdom and expediency, even from a narrow utilitarian standpoint, of the Czar's project of gradual decrease of standing armies. It says:

The enormous population of the United States develops peacefully and applies its material and moral powers exclusively to its own good, advancing in every direction as no other nation is advancing. With the exception of an insignificant tribute to Mars, every dollar earned by labor is used productively. Yet, in spite of this, in a critical moment America finds herself at the level of any military power. As if by magic, she calls into being armies and navies and guns, and no one doubts her triumph. There is something instructive in these successes. The European powers will inevitably have to inquire into the results of the war and—who knows?—perhaps one effect of their investigation will be the long-desired international disarmament. The United States spends on education more than certain powers do on their armies, and national education, after all, is the chief guaranty of success.

A simple and proper method of cleaning costly and easily injured articles is to make a suds of hot water and Ivory Soap, and allow it to cool until lukewarm. This solution, while very effective, is perfectly harmless.

Ivory Soap contains no alkali. It will not destroy the surface or texture of any material, however delicate.

Ivory Soap differs from other soaps. It is more carefully made, and the materials used in its manufacture are the purest and best.

An Injunction That Springs From Duty to God and Man. Psalm 147:1-20.

The Psalmist declares that praise is comely. It is a becoming thing, a duty that one cannot neglect without disgrace. To be silent in the presence of beauty of character and great goodness, would be to show a lack of appreciation which would indicate mental or moral defect. The boy who has no word to say of his loving mother, or his wise and kind father, whom he owes his home and the care and tenderness which have been lavished upon him, incurs the contempt of all who know him. Gratitude ought to compel him to speak. His words of praise could not benefit his parents, but how their absence marks him! It shows that his character is coarse and callous. How much more is praise of God a duty! The infinite perfection of his character demands it. Apart from his love, and the personal benefits he has conferred, the wisdom he has displayed in his works and the glory of his attributes, as they are revealed in the Word, call for praise. But when we consider what he has done for us, his patience, his long-suffering, his compassion, his tender love with which he has followed us, and above all the gift of His Son, that we might have eternal life—all this appeals to us with such force, that it seems no exaggeration when the sacred writer declares that if man is silent, the very stones will cry out. Nor do we do our duty to our fellow man if we are silent. Those who know God and have tasted of His infinite love, do not speak His praises, those who know him not, are wronged. It is due to God that we tell them of all He is to us, that they may seek Him and serve Him too. All our experience and all our duty join together in enforcing the Psalmist's injunction: "Praise ye the Lord."

THANKSGIVING.

Reasons for Gratitude to God, Personal and Social. Psalm 103.

The Psalmist cites many reasons for thanksgiving, which apply to all, but more particularly to the Christian. Righteousness, mercy, love, are attributes that shine forth so that all may see them; none can know them as they who have that in them they have a personal interest and owe the highest happiness of their lives to those attributes. Even the writer of the Psalm, whose ecstatic utterance well up from a grateful heart, had no conception of what God was to do in the future for the human race. All that the Old Testament saints knew of him sinks into insignificance beside the love that shines forth in Jesus Christ. His love was cumulative and its topstone was set when the incarnation was achieved. True, one who has been made a son of God through Christ, has reason to utter his thanks with a full heart. The exclamation we sometimes hear in worship by no means exhausts our capacities, nor fulfils our duty. It is frequently mechanical and meaningless. By the life as well as the lip, gratitude may be shown. When one for whom much has been done puts the gifts he has received to a good use he shows his appreciation and his life speaks praise and gratitude in practical form: but even so, the praise of the tongue is also is essential, that it may be known from whom such gifts come. God is entitled to our thankfulness, both of lip and life.

SIN A FOLLY.

The Folly and Bitterness of Sin. Jer. 2:12, 13, 19.

It is a saying of a famous preacher that sin is always loss. It is not only an offense against God, a breaking of his commandments, but it is a wrong to the sinner's own soul. It is a detriment, a pollution, that is injurious. It may be forgiven, and we rejoice that it is forgiven, but the soul suffers. It cannot be the same after the sin that it was before. The delicacy, the purity of it is marred and forgiveness, though accompanied by cleansing, does not bring back lost innocence. There are Christians who suffer and will suffer to the end of their lives for some sin committed in their youth. God has forgiven them, in his tender mercy, through Christ, but the hurt remains and the soul is maimed. Our own experience confirms the teaching of the Bible in this matter. Sometimes the results come in concrete shape, for no man lives to himself and he does not sin to himself. There are hearts almost broken by the thought that others are worse on account of a bad example that has been set. We are assured that sorrow will not enter heaven, but if it could, it would surely come from the fact that some other soul is in darkness who was started on the downward path by some evil deed that God has forgiven to the doer. When he is saved, while those whom he led into sin are lost, we can imagine remorse that not even the joys of heaven can relieve. Then sin works a bitterness that knows no sweetening. But if no evil effects are distinctly to be traced to the sinner's influence, he suffers under the law of the universe which entails sorrow to his own soul. Inseparably joined together are sin and its consequences.

The Thirst Divine.

The hunger and thirst after righteousness! There is no hunger and thirst in the world like it! When it once takes possession of a man all other appetites and passions shrivel into insignificance. "As the hart panteth after the waterbrooks so panteth my soul after thee, O God!" Who that has felt that thirst finds any strong drink strong enough to take the place of the living waters? Drunkenness is done away with, the reign of bestial passions ended, when that compelling hunger and thirst enters into the soul.

Strange Trees of New Zealand.

New Zealand has a mighty pine, the kauri, which is said to be 800 years in reaching maturity. It grows to an enormous height before sending out a single branch. Another tree, which is described by Mary H. Krout, in her interesting articles on New Zealand, is of most curious structure. The rata is parasitic; springing up at the foot of rimu pine, it winds about it like a huge vine, gradually crushing the life out of it with tightening coils; when it reaches the top of the tree, it sends out branches, and stands a hollow shell, its coils knit closely together by a dense network of fibres. "What measure you mete shall be measured to you again" seems to hold good in plant-life as in man's. A second rata springing up beside it, will destroy it as it destroyed the pine.

SAVED FROM FIRE.

Converts to Protestantism in Mexico Threatened with Burning, but Rescued by the Police.

BY DR. LEVI B. SALMANS.*

ACTS of persecution for conscience's sake are, we are often informed, no longer practised by the Roman Catholic Church, or its members, unless it is in some small country place away from civilization. Recently, however, a case occurred here in a city of fifty thousand inhabitants.

The first town on the south of those in which we have our dispensaries is Irapuato. The next on the north is Leon. In both places we have begun work, but have had to abandon it, on account of fanatical opposition. In Guanajuato and other towns, where we could minister to the sick, such opposition has been overcome; but in Leon and Irapuato it was too strong to be subdued by preaching alone. We have proved here that without the works of healing, which show the love and compassion of our Lord, success must not be expected.

Some of our converts have removed to Irapuato, and among them the family of Pedro Gonzales, a respectable man, following the trade of a butcher. This man bought a Bible in Guanajuato about five years ago. He read it, and by the blessing of God was converted. The same Bible passed from hand to hand in his family, was the means of the conversion of seven of its members, and five of them have openly professed their faith and joined the church.

Soon after Pedro settled in his new home, he handed some tracts to his neighbors and friends and one of these fell into the hands of the head priest of the city. The priest became greatly enraged at what he considered the boldness of these Protestants to dare circulate tracts in his city, and he, on his part, published and scattered abroad at once, two circulars in which he attacked Protestantism in furious terms. He most earnestly warned all Catholics in Irapuato to "take the same precautions to protect their families from the heresy as they would take against thieves and assassins." He compared the Protestants resident there to the presence of a pestilence which he asserted would spontaneously and subtly spread itself among their families if overlooked. These papers were scattered principally on Sunday, and the following morning a large number of the papers were placed in the hands of all other sellers of meat in the place, and they handed them out to their buyers and explained to them by word of mouth that the Protestants referred to, were Pedro Gonzales and his family, then living in the centre of the city, and also to the family of his mother, who was living in the suburbs. That night a great mob stoned the suburban house for more than two hours, doing great damage and causing the inoffensive inmates much terror. On the following morning the mob returned, broke into the house, took out all the clothing and furniture and made a bonfire of them in the middle of the street. While it was burning the leaders of the outrage, finding the mother and sister of Pedro in the garden, threatened them with the immense knives they had in their hands, but changing their minds they announced that they would burn them alive, and suiting the action to the word roughly dragged them out to the fire in the middle of the street.

That an awful and barbarous murder was about to be committed was clear to all observers. The two women were helpless in the hands of their brutal assailants, who seemed beside themselves with fury. Silently they prayed to the Lord for deliverance. It seemed to them probably the last prayer they would ever offer, for there was no mercy in the faces of the fanatics who were taking them to the flames. But at the last moment a number of policemen appeared and set the two women free. God had heard the prayers offered to him in that time of peril and had interposed for the deliverance of his children. I am glad to say that President Diaz has been informed of the outrage and is now taking active measures to punish the assailants of the women. Already they have received $100 from the government toward their losses by the fire and have been promised that they will be fully indemnified. Two priests and a great many others are in jail while the trial proceeds.

Such circulars as those that excited the outrage have been issued against us often by priests in this state, always endangering the Protestants and making it ofttimes impossible for them longer to live in their native towns, but this is the first time the government has ever undertaken to punish a priest for issuing them, partly, I suppose, because this is the first case of the use of fire by the persecutors in these later years, and also because there is progress here in the matter of the toleration of Protestants.

Still this case serves well to show the absolute necessity that is upon us to use Christian philanthropy in the form of healing in order to rid the minds of these poor, deceived people of their prejudices and bring them to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. This outrage did not occur in a country village, but in a prominent, rich and intelligent city, situated at an important junction of the Mexican Central railway. Many people who have made excursions to this country will remember it well as the "strawberry station," where this delicious fruit abounds every day in the year.

We are progressing slowly with our hospital, and hope by the aid of our friends here and at home to be able to have it ready for opening early in 1899.

GOD EVERYWHERE PRESENT.

Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence? etc. Psalm 139: 7.

WHERE from thy presence shall I go?
To Tropic heat or Arctic snow
Or to more distant land?
From His presence I should flee
Island in remotest sea,
He'd hold me by His hand.

Could I ascend to heaven's vast height
Hid the spheres of dazzling light—
Immeasurably fair;
I make my bed in deepest sea
There darkest waves encompassed me,
His presence would be there.

Could I, in cavern of the deep,
Hope to escape in dreamless sleep,
The searchlight of his eye
Him "the darkness and the light both alike," intensely bright
As is the sun on high.

Throughout the universe around—
Heights above or depths profound—
In earth, or sea, or air,
The vast realm of space; no spot,
No place is found where he is not—
For God is everywhere!

Washington, D. C. EDWARD YOUNG.

REFORM BY COLONY.

AN interesting experiment is being tried by Lady Henry Somerset in England. It is an effort to deal with habitual drunkards on an independent system. In explaining her plan, Lady Somerset says:

"The reasons for the failure of the old system are easy to seek. Habitual inebriety becomes a disease; the moral power is absolutely weakened; the will is not normal; the individual has become the victim of these conditions, and is practically no longer a responsible being. What we need for such cases is a hospital, and this we have endeavored to establish in the farm colony. To effect a physical cure two things are necessary—time, and wholesome conditions, including obviously the absence of alcohol. To effect a spiritual cure, we must have an atmosphere pervaded by sympathy and love.

"The colony is at the village of Duxhurst, near London. It is composed of a number of pretty cottages, so that the inmates may not feel that they are in an institution. The meals, however, are cooked in a central kitchen, and there is a central laundry. The inmates are expected to engage in some occupation, and prefer-ably an outdoor one, such as gardening, poultry-tending, bee-keeping, lawn-mowing, etc. But for those unaccustomed to outdoor work, there are sewing machines, looms for weaving, machine-knitting, etc. In the building in common is the hospital, and another, called the Bird's Nest, is for children of the slums, who are there in relays of two weeks at a time, and are cared for by the inmates of the cottages under the supervision of a matron.

"Ladies and gentlemen interested in rescue work go to the village in periodical relays, and give concerts and other entertainments, and stay for a week or more giving attention to the patients. Besides these there are regular attendants at the head of each department. So successful has the colony been that there are now on the register three thousand applications from drunkards who are anxious to stay in the colony in the hope of reformation.

"During their stay in the colony, the victims of intemperance learn how happy they may be without indulgence in liquor. They are helped over the critical period of the early days of abstention, by wholesome occupation and amusement, which keep their minds from dwelling on the temptation. When they go to their homes they go with invigorated bodies and minds.

Marvelous New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now found that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava-Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Dr. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in a few weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and Bladder disease of ten year's standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 409 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or any affliction due to improper action of the Kidney or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power.

Helping a Hero's Widow.

GEORGE H. ELLIS, Chief Yeoman of the Brookiyn, the only man killed in the great naval action off Santiago on July 3, which resulted in the destruction of Cervera's entire fleet and the capture of the Admiral, officers and men, was insured in The Prudential—had been for ten years. When fifteen years of age a small policy was issued to his parents on the boy's life, and later a second policy. The aggregate of the two policies—over $350—was promptly paid to the young widow, Mrs. Sarah M. Ellis, who resides at 819 Dean street, Brooklyn. She is left with an infant seven months old. The crew of the Brooklyn have raised a fund of about $1,000 for Mrs. Ellis, so that with the pension she will receive from the Government, she and her little one are secured against pecuniary distress. Yeoman Ellis was twenty-five years of age. The office of Yeoman is an important one. The Yeoman has charge of all the ship's stores, such as rigging, armament, ammunition, paint, oil, canvas, everything, literally, from a needle to an anchor—that is, everything outside of the food, clothing, cash and medical stores. He keeps account of everything on board the ship in the way of ship supplies, and issues nothing to any one on board, not even a broom or a marline spike, without an order from the executive officer. He heads the list of first-class petty officers and ranks with a Sergeant Major in the army.

The following communication explains itself:

John F. Dryden, Esq.,
Pres't of Prudential Insurance Co.
Dear Sir:—

I desire to express my thanks to you for the prompt payment of the insurance on my late husband, George H. Ellis' policies, who was killed in the naval battle at Santiago, July 3, 1898.

I recommend very highly The Prudential Insurance Company, as I received $11.26 more than my policies called for.

Very respectfully,
Sarah M. Ellis.

But the angels will ask, What good deeds has he sent before him? —From a Sermon by Mohammed.

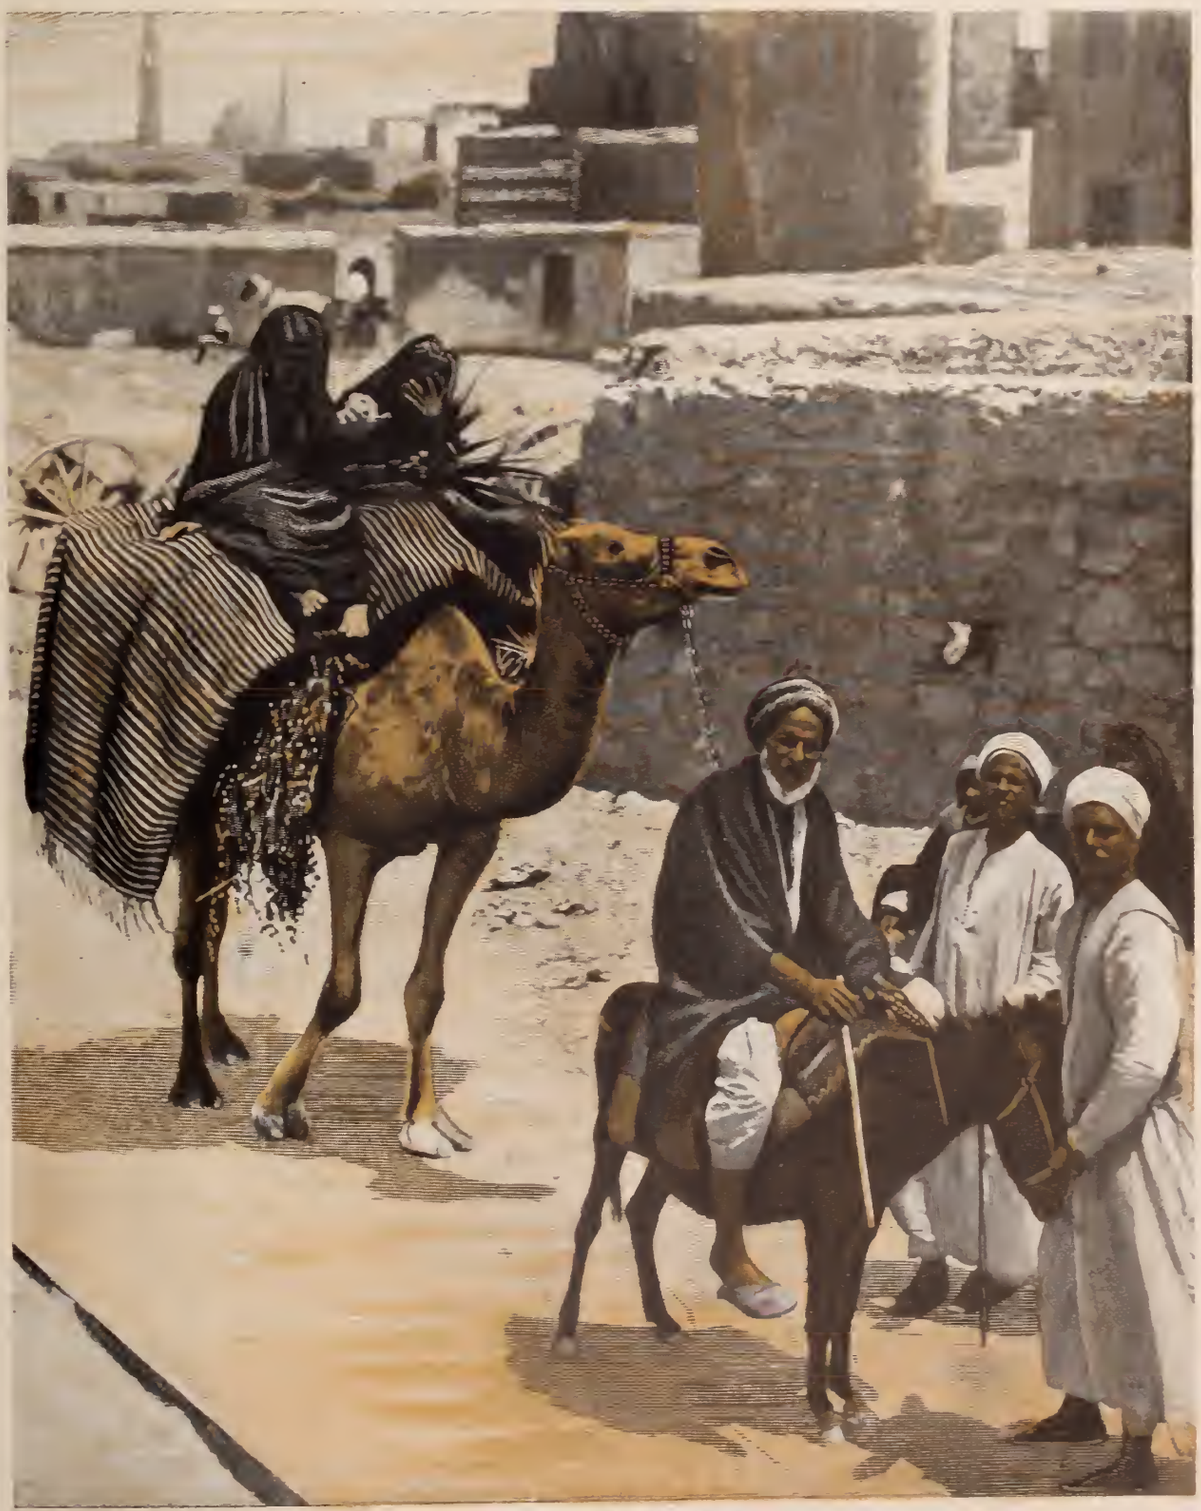
Traveling in the Orient

The Old Way and the New—Railways Invading the Ancient Caravan Routes—The Patient Camel.

WITHIN the memory of the present generation, it might have been said truthfully that "nothing changes in the Orient." Customs and costumes in vogue uncounted centuries still hold their ancient sway unperturbed; the ancient ceremonials, handed down from patriarchal times, are duly and reverently observed: domestic animals were an almost sacred inheritance, and man held the position of an inferior, rather than a companion to man, whose care was held by so limited that any attempt at educating her or enlarging her sphere would have been wholly futile.

Recent years have witnessed the beginning of changes, which must sooner or later result in the complete transformation of the stagnant Orient. Palestine is now provided by railway from Joppa to Jerusalem: railways are projected from Beyrout to Damascus and southward to Gaza, in Egypt. From Alexandria and Cairo across the Nile Delta of the Pharaohs and Ptolemies, almost to the very centre of the continent, can be heard the shriek of the locomotive. The shadow of the Pyramids has been invaded. Even Asia, too, is pushing her railroads westward and far into Southwest Asia, and the ancient Japanese and Chinese empires have opened their land and railways to the modern methods of transportation. Soon camel and caravan must give way to the flying steed of iron and the swift railway train.



AN ARAB FAMILY TRAVELING IN UPPER EGYPT.

Even now, the camel, as a means of transportation seems, in some parts of the East, like a picturesque relic of the past. It is still very generally used in Syria, Egypt and parts of Palestine, where modern conveyances have not yet been introduced. Its slow, labored gait and clumsy aspect have few temptations for the European or American traveler, and the experience of a camel-back ride across the desert is not one likely to be soon repeated.

The Arab, however, be he merchant, Bedawin or sheikh, regards the camel as an indispensable companion in his wanderings. Our illustration on this page shows how fixed are the primitive habits of an ancient people. An Arab or Egyptian family, after a long and probably wearisome journey, have arrived at a village, where shelter and refreshment are to be had. The father and husband—evidently a man of some importance—rides ahead, attended by his servant, while the camel carries the rest of the household. In such a way, but with added dignity and stateliness, Rebekah might have traveled, guided by Abraham's trusted servant, to meet Isaac, her future husband. That the camel was a familiar beast of burden among the ancients, the Bible sufficiently proves. It was in general use in Arabia, Assyria, Upper Egypt and Persia, and in Syria and Palestine there were large herds of domesticated camels, used chiefly for commercial purposes in the caravan trade. Poetically called by the Arabs, "the ship of the desert," it well deserves the title for a more faithful servitor, nor a more sagacious. With a rare strength of vision, keen of scent and sure-footed, it displays a remarkable faculty in finding its way amid the seemingly trackless wastes of sand in the Eastern deserts.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mrs. G. S., McMillans, Tenn. 1. Was Paul converted on the way to, or at Damascus? 2. How old was he when converted, and at what age did he die? 3. What is our national flower?

1. He was converted at a point near Damascus—not in the city itself. His own statement of the event can be found in Acts 9:3; 22:6, and 26:12. 2. He was born one year after Christ, and at his conversion was from 33 to 35 years old, dying at 65. 3. There is no national flower, properly speaking, although many have conferred such a distinction upon the golden rod.

Lutheran, Germantown, Pa. Who was the architect of the new Church of the Redeemer, lately consecrated by Emperor William in Jerusalem?

It is understood that the plan of the edifice was designed by the Emperor himself, although the details were no doubt worked out by a professional architectural draughtsman. The Emperor submitted his plans to experts, who suggested a few slight alterations, after which they were adopted practically entire.

Arnold, Hot Springs, Ark. Should a Christian never retaliate? Should he permit himself to be imposed upon?

A Christian should never retaliate; nor should he suffer himself to be imposed upon, when possible to avoid it. Between retaliation and the suffering of imposition, he should, however, accept the latter, if retaliation implies his committing any act of vindictiveness unbecoming a Christian. Our Lord's words upon the subject are plain. Read the fifth and eighteenth chapters of Matthew. St. Paul says repeatedly, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Retaliation is contrary to the spirit and letter of this. But while we are told to love our neighbor as ourself, we are not told to love him better; and self-protection, in a wise and proper spirit, is a duty.

A number of answers have been received from readers in solution of this Scripture puzzle, which appeared in THE MAIL-BAG of Oct. 26: "What is the name of the apothecary's son mentioned in the Bible?" The correct answer is found in Neh. 3:8, the name being Hananiah.

Answers have been received from Mrs. Mary Culberson, Dowds, Ia.; Mrs. S. T. Cooper, Saranac, Mich.; Mrs. Matthew Miller, New York City; R. B., Cedarwood, Ind.; M. E. Stolls, Monroe, Ia.; William C. Michener, Parkersburg, Pa., and many others.

M. L. L., Worcester, Mass. Who were Mrs. Elizabeth Ross's ancestors?

She was the daughter of Rebecca and Samuel Griscom, a Quaker family of Philadelphia. Mr. Griscom was one of the builders of Independence Hall.

Doubtful, Richmond, Va. 1. Certain denominations do not condemn theatre-going, card-playing and dancing, in moderation. Should we, according to a recent answer in your journal, condemn them as hypocrites? 2. Is not a pure moral play such as those of Shakespeare an innocent recreation for a Christian?

1. Christ's own law forbids such a condemnation. He said, "Judge not that ye be not judged." Every man must decide these matters for himself. Our opinion was given conscientiously and must be taken for what it is worth. We believe that those amusements are detrimental to spiritual life and growth. We think, too, that even those who indulge in them feel them to be so. If a father is sending his son into the city to live, away from the care of a pious home, do you think he would feel quite as secure of his turning out a good man, if he indulged in those amusements, as he would if he knew that he did not? 2. There are many plays that are innocent and no harm might come from seeing them performed. But the association of the theatre, where one would have to go to see them, is harmful, and if the habit of theatregoing is formed, the care and discrimination exercised at first are apt to be the exception. If you notice the posters used by the theatres, you will see that the majority of them appear to think that their patrons need to have evil suggestions.

V. F. W., Goshen, Ia. 1. What is the Lord's Prayer? 2. Did Solomon write the proverbs in it?

1. The theory of the Higher Critics is that several writers contributed to each book of the Bible, or that there was one original work and it was edited by some person and re-edited by a later scholar and in some cases by a third; or that some writer compiled the books from a number of different sources. The Polychrome Bible is an analysis based on this theory. The parts supposed to have been written by one writer are all printed in one color and those by another writer in another color. The analysis is based on supposed differences in literary style or on the use of certain words. For example, there are passages in which the word God is Elohim and in other passages the word used is Jehovah. The critics think they are by different authors. On the other hand, their opponents contend that each book is by one author. 2. The Polychrome Bible is published in separate books and is not yet complete. Judges, Leviticus, Psalms, and Isaiah have appeared. They are published by Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

D. M. S., Burlington, Vt. What is the meaning of the terms often used of high and low church?

They are generally used in reference to the Protestant Episcopal Church. When it was organized, it was hoped that all the English people would belong to it, and, therefore, its creed and articles were made comprehensive. Thus people may be in the church whose belief differs but little from the Roman Catholic, and others whose creed differs but little from the Methodist Episcopal. The former, who are called high church, like an ornate service, call the communion table an altar, and have lighted candles on it in the daytime, practice auricular confession, and believe that the clergyman's words at the communion service actually turn the bread into the body of Christ. People of the low church like a plain service and preach the necessity of a new birth through faith in Christ, and the incapacity of ceremonies and forms to save the soul. Between these two sections, as wide asunder as the poles, there are various degrees, and there are Protestant Episcopal churches which do not go to either extreme.

Student, Aurora, Neb. 1. There is an old proverb which says, "There are two things one should never be angry with." What are these two? 2. Who is the author of the proverb?

1. One old saying which reads like this: "Two things a man should never be angry at; what he can help and what he can not." The same idea, we believe, is expressed in various ways in different languages. 2. We do not know. It antedates our memory.

Student, Dayton, O. What are the proofs or evidences of identity in the case of the home of the Virgin, in Jerusalem, which the Sultan recently presented to Emperor William, and the latter afterward transferred to the Pope?

It is difficult to establish the validity of such a claim at this late day, in the absence of any documentary or other substantial evidence. There are many places in Palestine associated by tradition with the home life of the parents of Jesus. In Nazareth the ruins of what is declared by the guides to have been the house occupied by Joseph and Mary are still pointed out to visitors. At the same time, there is at Loreto, in Italy, a building called the Santa Casa, or "Holy House," which monkish legends declare to be the identical dwelling of Joseph and Mary in Nazareth, miraculously preserved, and transported by angelic hands to its present location. There is something quite as mysterious about the newly-found home of Mary in Jerusalem. A two-story building now stands upon the spot, where, according to the latest claim, once stood the dwelling in which the Virgin dwelt with her Son, during the last three years of his life on earth. It is worthy of remark that the claim is of very recent date, and the existence of the "Home" has till now been unknown to even the most careful investigators.

L. A. K., Jackson, Wis. Would you kindly inform me how, and why, Thanksgiving is celebrated over our broad land? Kindly answer this in an early issue.

The history of the American Thanksgiving is as follows: The Pilgrim Fathers, immediately after their first harvest, decided to have some celebration of a character similar to the English harvest home festival, which was held at full moon in September. Governor William Bradford and his little company had sowed some peas, corn, and barley, and reaped a very meagre crop. Death had been busy among their number; yet notwithstanding their afflictions, they found cause for thanksgiving. The governor sent four men out to the woods to hunt wild turkeys, and the game they caught was cooked in Dame Brewster's house. The colonists invited Massasoit, sagamore of the Wampanoags, and ninety of his braves, to share in the celebration. This was the first American Thanksgiving. The dinner was eaten on Saturday, the last day of several devoted to festivities. On the next year they had another Thanksgiving, and then the custom was taken up in New York and one or two other sections in an intermittent way. In 1863 President Lincoln appointed Nov. 26 as a day of national thanksgiving, which was the first occasion of its being kept by our people as a nation. It is now very generally observed, north, south, east, and west.

Ellen R., Montpelier, Vt. Which is the wealthiest State in the Union?

The answer must depend upon the point of view—whether agriculturally, in minerals or in commerce. New York State owns one-eighth of the entire wealth of the country, with Pennsylvania and Illinois next in order. In proportion to population, however, Nevada, Arizona, Minnesota, Wyoming and Washington are the richest in the order given.

A FRUIT DISPLAY IN THE STREETS OF HAVANA.

The fertility of Cuba's soil is proverbial. Almost every kind of tropical fruit is produced in abundance, and the great variety that is heaped in tempting piles upon the fruit-stalls attracts the eye and tempts the palate of the visitor. Some of the fruit-stands are very picturesque. Cocoanuts, pineapples, oranges, lemons, limes, yams, bananas and nuts of various sorts are a few of the common products sold in the markets.

SEEKERS AFTER A HOLIER LIFE.

A Movement Originating at Keswick, England, Twenty-Three Years Ago, which is Spreading Over The Whole World—Its Principles and Leaders.

ONE of the most remarkable religious movements of modern times, which is now gradually affecting spiritual life in this country, is that which is known as the Keswick Movement." It acquired its name from the fact that the meetings with which it originated were held in the town of that name, situated in the beautiful lake country of northern England, where the poet Wordsworth lived and died. The doctrine taught at Keswick have permeated the religious life of England and are being practised in pulpits of all denominations in the cities and country districts. During the past two or three years through the labors of Mr. D. L. Moody, they have been preached in this country by the two pastors who went to Northfield at his invitation. They are not new doctrines. Indeed, in their essence they are as old as Christianity itself. But Christian people have lost sight of them, or rather, they have treated them as theories having no practical bearing on their present life. The blessings to which they refer, were relegated to the distant future, when, having done with the body, they entered into the presence of God. The new teaching insists that they may be enjoyed in this life and that Christ intended his followers to have them all through their which made so many lives a painful and shameful oscillation between good and evil. Both men were seeking just that blessing, and the speaker's confident assurance made a deep impression upon them. They thought about it and prayed about it and they came to believe it true. They earnestly sought the blessing, and their experience convinced them that this was the remedy which caused Paul to exclaim, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord." In the following year, they invited a number of friends to meet them at Keswick, where Canon Battersby's church was. There they related their experience and so many of their friends followed their example, with such delightful results to their own souls, that it was determined to hold a similar meeting every year. Since that time, now twenty-three years ago, every summer, hundreds of Christian people have spent ten days or more at Keswick, in conferences that have sent them back to their homes rejoicing. Canon Battersby who used to welcome them, died in 1883, but Mr. Robert Wilson still issues the invitations for the annual conference and presides at its sessions.

A TENT MEETING AT KESWICK.

Among the speakers who are most prominent in these annual gatherings is Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, M. A., who is pastor of a Presbyterian church in the western part of London. Our readers will remember him as one of the two speakers who preached daily at the Northfield convention this summer. The other, Rev. G. C. Morgan, is pastor of a Congregational church in North London. Mrs. M. Baxter, whose articles on the Sunday School lessons appear in this journal, is another welcome and regular speaker, as are also Rev. W. Haslam, Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, Rev. J. J. Luce, of the Protestant Episcopal Church: Dr. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Elder Cumming, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Pastor Monod, of France, Dr. Andrew Murray, of South Africa, Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, Australia, and many other eminent ministers of various nationalities. Daily meetings, beginning with a seven o'clock prayer meeting, are held in a large tent, but of late years it has been necessary to hold overflow meetings in a drill hall and in a lecture hall, owing to the large number who come. The following significant suggestions to visitors show the spirit that animates the leaders of the conference:

(1) Come waiting on the Lord, desiring and expecting blessing to your own soul individually. (2) Be ready to learn whatever God may teach you by his Word, however opposed to human prejudices and traditions. (3) Heartily renounce all known evil, and even doubtful things "not of faith." (4) Lay aside for the time all reading except the Bible.

"There could be no better place than Keswick," says one who has attended many of its conferences, "for the search for the quiet peace and calm, unwavering faith that should dominate the Christian's life; the soaring mountain heights; the cool, unfathomed depths of the Derwentwater; the richness of the verdure; the stillness of all nature, are instinct with the spirit that soothes the nerves and brings repose into the troubled soul." It seems to echo the voice of the Master:

Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile.
Weary, I know it, of the press and throng;
Wipe from your brow the sweat and dust and toil,
And in my quiet strength again be strong.
Then fresh from converse with your Lord, return,
And work till daylight softens into even:
The brief hours are not lost in which ye learn
More of your Master and his rest in heaven.

THE TOWN OF KESWICK IN CUMBERLAND, ENGLAND.

(Where Conferences have been held since 1875.)

Keswick teaching has, of course, been misunderstood. The following summary of its principles, presented by Rev. Evan Hopkins, explains the beliefs of the leaders: "Scripture describes a Christian life considerably in advance of that which is ordinarily attained—a life of rest, of victory, of unbroken communion, of power. Our aim is to know how to live that life.

"We teach, not sinless perfection—the eradication of the evil nature, the removal of the tendency to sin, but that this evil may be continuously counteracted, so that though present it will not have dominion over us.

"There will not be freedom from sins of ignorance; none can ever say, 'We have no sin.' But there may be an obedience to the light which keeps 'the conscience void of offence toward God and man.' We may walk so as to have the testimony which Enoch had, that we 'please God.'

"There will not be freedom from conflict, but it is needful to distinguish between conflict with sin and rebellion against God. The former we shall have to the end: the latter ought not to be.

"It is not a life of indolence, of quietism: but service becomes different in its character. It is no longer performed in the energy of the flesh, but is the result of divine power working within.

"It is not a state in which there is no advance, but it recognizes the difference between the conditions upon which growth depends and the growth itself."

To objectors who contend that the condition thus described, is the result of a growth in grace, not of an instantaneous, or at least sudden, act of Christ, the Keswick teachers reply with a homely illustration. One of them said that his wife had a severe fall, in which, as it was supposed, her ankle was sprained. It seemed to be developing permanent lameness, and the pain instead of diminishing, as the surgeon predicted, gradually increased. Finally her husband decided to take her to an eminent surgeon, who performed an operation in which one of the small bones of the ankle, which had been displaced, was put back in its proper position. From that time the limb began to recover. Certain directions had to be observed: great care had to be taken: but the woman could walk for miles and the pain was gone. Putting the bone in place began the process of cure. This is what the Keswick teachers understand by perfection. Christ gives the necessary change which puts the spirit in its proper condition. He sets the will right with himself, with a view to growth and further development, by processes of his own, with which his child must co-operate by care and attention. This, they hold, is the secret of holiness and power.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

OUR BIRTHRIGHT.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: John 18: 37, ... To this end was I born.

AFTER Pilate had suicided, tradition says that his body was thrown into the Tiber, and such storms ensued on and about that river that his body was taken out and thrown into the Rhone, and similar disturbances swept that river and its banks. Then the body was taken out and moved to Lausanne, and put in a deeper pool, which immediately became the centre of similar atmospheric and aqueous disturbances. Though these are fanciful and false traditions, they show the execration with which the world looked upon Pilate. It was before this man when he was in full life and power that Christ was arraigned as in a Court of Oyer and Terminer. Pilate said to his prisoner: "Art thou a king, then?" and Jesus answered: "To this end was I born." Sure enough, although all earth and hell arose to keep him down, he is to-day empalaced, enthroned and coroneted king of earth and king of heaven. That is what he came for, and that is what he accomplished.

By the time a child reaches ten years of age the parents begin to discover that child's destiny, but by the time he or she reaches fifteen years of age, the question is on the child's lips: "What shall I do? What am I going to be? What was I made for?" It is a sensible and righteous question, and the youth ought to keep asking it until it is so fully answered that the young man, or young woman, can say with as much truth as its author, though on a less expansive scale: "To this end was I born."

There is too much divine skill shown in the physical, mental and moral constitution of the ordinary human being to suppose that he was constructed without any divine purpose. If you take me out on some vast plain and show me a pillared temple surmounted by a dome like St. Peter's, and having a floor of precious stones and arches that must have taxed the brain of the greatest draughtsman to design, and walls scrolled and niched and paneled, and wainscoted and painted, and I should ask you what this building was put up for, and you answered: "For nothing at all," how could I believe you? And it is impossible for me to believe that any ordinary human being who has in his muscular, nervous and cerebral organization more wonders than Christopher Wren lifted in St. Paul's, or Phidias ever chiseled on the Acropolis, and built in such a way that it shall last long after St. Paul's Cathedral is as much a ruin as the Parthenon—that such a being was constructed for no purpose, and to execute no mission, and without any divine intention toward some end. The object of this sermon is to help you to find out what you are made for, and help you find your sphere, and assist you into that condition where you can say with certainty and emphasis and enthusiasm and triumph: "To this end was I born."

First, I discharge you from all responsibility for most of your environments. You are not responsible for your parentage or grand parentage. You are not responsible for any of the cranks that may have lived in your ancestral line, and who a hundred years before you were born may have lived a style of life that more or less affects you to-day. You are not responsible for the fact that your temperament is sanguine, or melancholic, or bilious, or lymphatic, or nervous. Neither are you responsible for the place of your nativity, whether among the granite hills of New England, or the cotton plantations of Louisiana, or on the banks of the Clyde, or the Dneiper, or the Shannon, or the Seine. Neither are you responsible for the religion taught in your father's house, or the irreligion. Do not bother yourself about what you cannot help, or about circumstances that you did not decree. Take things as they are, and decide the question so that you shall be able safely to say: "To this end was I born." How will you decide it? By direct application to the only Being in the universe who is competent to tell you—the Lord Almighty. Do you know the reason why he is the only one who can tell? Because he can see everything between your cradle and your grave, though the grave be eighty years off. And besides that, he is the only Being who can see what has been happening in the last 500 years in your ancestral line, and for thousands of years clear back to Adam, and there is not one person in all that ancestral line of 6,000 years but has somehow affected your character, and even old Adam himself will sometimes turn up in your disposition. The only Being who can take all things that pertain to you into consideration is God, and he is the one you can ask. Life is so short we have no time to experiment with occupations and professions. The reason we have so many dead failures is that parents decide for children what they shall do, or children themselves, wrought on by some whim or fancy, decide for themselves, without any imploration of divine guidance. So we have now in pulpits men making sermons who ought to be in blacksmith shops making plowshares; and we have in the law those who instead of ruining the cases of their clients ought to be pounding shoe lasts; and doctors who are the worst hindrances to their patients' convalescence; and artists trying to paint landscapes who ought to be whitewashing board fences; while there are others making bricks who ought to be remodeling constitutions, or shoving planes who ought to be transforming literatures. Ask God about what worldly business you shall undertake, until you are so positive you can in earnestness smite your hand on your plow-handle, or your carpenter's bench, or your Blackstone's Commentaries, or your medical dictionary, or your Dr. Dick's Didactic Theology, saying: "For this end was I born." There are children who early develop natural affinities for certain styles of work. When the father of the astronomer Forbes was going to London, he asked his children what present he should bring each one of them. The boy who was to be an astronomer cried out, "Bring me a telescope!"

And there are children whom you find all by themselves drawing on their slates, or on paper, ships, or houses, or birds, and you know they are to be draughtsmen or architects of some kind. And you find others ciphering out difficult problems with rare interest and success, and you know they are to be mathematicians. And others making wheels and strange contrivances, and you know they are going to be machinists. And others are found experimenting with hoe and plough and sickle, and you know they will be farmers. And others are always swapping jack-knives or balls or bats, and making something by the bargain, and they are going to be merchants. When Abbe de Rance had so advanced in studying Greek that he could translate Anacreon at twelve years of age, there was no doubt left that he was intended for a scholar. But in almost every lad there comes a time when he does not know what he was made for, and his parents do not know, and it is a crisis that God only can decide. Then there are those born for some especial work, and their fitness does not develop until quite late. When Philip Doddridge, whose sermons and books have harvested uncounted souls for glory, began to study for the ministry, Dr. Calamy, one of the wisest and best men, advised him to turn his thoughts to some other work. Isaac Barrow, the eminent clergyman and Christian scientist—his books standard now, though he has been dead over two hundred years—was the disheartenment of his father, who used to say that if it pleased God to take any of his children away he hoped it might be his son Isaac. So some of those who have been characterized for their stupidity in boyhood or girlhood, have turned out the mightiest benefactors or benefactresses of the human race. These things being so, am I not right in saying that in many cases God only knows what is the most appropriate thing for you to do, and he is the one to ask? And let all parents and all schools, and all universities, and all colleges recognize this, and a large number of those who spent their best years in stumbling about among businesses and occupations, now trying this and now trying that, and failing in all, would be able to go ahead with a definite, decided and tremendous purpose, saying, "To this end was I born."

But my subject now mounts into the momentous. Let me say that you are made for usefulness and heaven. I judge this from the way you are built. You go into a shop where there is only one wheel turning, and that by a workman's foot on a treadle, and you say to yourself, "here is something good being done, yet on a small scale;" but if you go into a factory covering many acres, and you find thousands of bands pulling on thousands of wheels, and shuttles flying, and the whole scene bewildering with activities, driven by water, or steam, or electric power, you conclude that the factory was put up to do great work, and on a vast scale. Now, I look at you, and if I should find that you had only one faculty of body, only one muscle, only one nerve, if you could see but not hear, or could hear and not see, if you had the use of only one foot or one hand, and, as to your higher nature, if you had only one mental faculty, and you had memory but no judgment, or judgment but no will, and if you had a soul with only one capacity, I would say not much is expected of you. But stand up, oh! man, and let me look you squarely in the face. Eyes capable of seeing everything. Ears capable of hearing everything. Hands capable of grasping everything. Minds with more wheels than any factory ever turned, more power than any Corliss engine ever moved. A soul that will outlive all the universe except heaven, and would outlive all heaven if the life of the other immortals were a moment short of the eternal. Now, what has the world a right to expect of you? What has God a right to demand of you? God is the greatest of economists in the universe, and he makes nothing uselessly, and for what purpose did he build your body, mind and soul as they are built? There are only two beings in the universe who can answer that question. The angels do not know. The schools do not know. Your kindred cannot certainly know. God knows, and you ought to know. A factory running at an expense of $500,000 a year, and turning out goods worth seventy cents a year would not be such an incongruity as you, O! man, with such semi-infinite equipment doing nothing, or next to nothing, in the way of usefulness. "What shall I do?" you ask. My brethren, my sisters, do not ask me. Ask God. There's some path of Christian usefulness open. It may be a rough path, or it may be a smooth path, a long path or a short path. It may be on a mount of conspicuity, or in a valley unobserved, but it is a path on which you can start with such faith and such satisfaction and such certainty that you can cry out in the face of earth and hell and heaven: "To this end was I born."

Do not wait for extraordinary qualifications. Philip, the conqueror, gained his greatest victories seated on a mule, and if you wait for some comparisoned Bucephalus to ride into the conflict you will never get into the world-wide fight at all. Samson slew the Lord's enemies with the jaw-bone of the stupidest beast created. Shamgar slew 600 of the Lord's enemies with an ox-goad. Under God, spittle cured the blind man's eyes in the New Testament story. Take all the faculty you have and say: "O Lord! Here is what I have, show me the field and back me up by omnipotent power. Anywhere, anyhow, any time for God." Two men riding on horseback came to a trough to water the horses. While the horses were drinking, one of the men said to the other a few words about the value of the soul, then they rode away, and in opposite directions. But the words uttered were the salvation of the one to whom they were uttered, and he became the Rev. Mr. Champion, one of the most distinguished missionaries in heat lands; for years wondering who did for the Christian kindness, and not finding until in a bundle of books sent him Africa he found the biography of Br erd Taylor and a picture of him, the missionary recognized the face in book as the man who, at the wate trough for horses, had said the thing saved his soul. What opportunities have had in the past! What opportuni you have now! What opportunities will have in the days to come! Put your hat, O, woman, this aftern and go and comfort that young mo who lost her babe last summer. Pu your hat, O, man, and go over and that merchant who was compelled terday to make an assignment, and him of the everlasting riches remain for all those who serve the Lord. you sing? Go and sing for that man cannot get well, and you will help into heaven. Let it be your brain, tongue, your eyes, your ears, your he your lungs, your hand, your feet, body, your mind, your soul, your life, time, your eternity for God, feeling in soul: "To this end was I born."

It may be helpful if I recite my own perience in this regard. I started for law without asking any divine direct I consulted my own tastes. I liked l yers and court rooms and judges juries, and reveled in hearing the Frel huysens and the Bradleys of the N Jersey bar, and as assistant of the cou clerk, at sixteen years of age, I searc titles, naturalized foreigners, recor deeds, received the confession of ju ments, swore witnesses and juries grand juries. But after a while I fe call to the Gospel ministry and entere and I felt some satisfaction in the wo But one summer, when I was resting Sharon Springs, and while seated in e park of that village I said to myself, I have an especial work to do in world I ought to find it out now," with that determination I prayed as I never before prayed, and got the di direction, and wrote it down in my m orandum book, and I saw my life w then as plainly as I see it now. Oh not be satisfied with general directi Get specific directions. Do not shoo random. Take aim and fire. Con trate. Napoleon's success in battle c from his theory of breaking through enemy's ranks at one point, not tryin meet the whole line of the enemy's f by a similar force. One reason why lost Waterloo was because he did work his usual theory, and spread force out over a wide range. O Chris man, O Christian woman, break thro somewhere. Not a general eng ment for God, but a particular eng ment, and made in answer to pra If there are sixteen hundred mil people in the world, then there are sixt hundred million different missions to fill, different styles of work to do, dif ent orbits in which to revolve, and if do not get the divine direction there at least fifteen hundred and ninety-n million possibilities that you will mak mistake. On your knees before God the matter settled so that you can fir say: "To this end was I born."

And now I come to the climacteric sideration. As near as I can tell, were built for a happy eternity, all disasters which have happened to y nature to be overcome by the blood of Lamb if you will heartily accept Christly arrangement. But I must say I do not ar here heaven is, if we can only get th whether a gardenized America, or an emparadised Europe, or a world central to the whole universe. "To this end was I born." If each one of us could say that, we would go with faces shining and hopes exhilarant amid earth's worst misfortunes and trials. Only a little while, and then the rapture. Only a little while, and then the reunion. Only a little while, and then the transfiguration.

In the seventeenth century, all Europe was threatened with a wave of Asiatic barbarism and Vienna was especially besieged. The king and his court had fled and nothing could save the city from being overwhelmed, unless the King of Poland, John Sobieski, to whom they had sent for help, should with his army come down for the relief, and from every roof and tower the inhabitants of Vienna watched and waited and hoped, until on the morning of September 11, the rising sun threw an unusual and unparalleled brilliancy. It was the reflection of the sun on the swords and shields and helmets of John Sobieski and his army coming down over the hills to the rescue, and that day not only Vienna, but Europe, was saved. And see you not, oh ye souls, besieged with sin and sorrow, that light breaks in, the swords, and the shields, and the helmets of divine rescue bathed in the rising sun of heavenly deliverance? Let everything else go rather than let heaven go.

What a strange thing it must be to feel one's self born to an earthly crown, but you have been born for a throne on which you may reign after the last monarch of all the earth shall have gone to dust. I invite you to start now for your own coronation, to come in and take the title deeds to your everlasting inheritance. Through an impassioned prayer, take heaven and all of its raptures.

WILLIAM PENN'S RESTING-PLACE.

The Ashes of the Great State Founder Lie in a Quiet English Village.

IN a little valley near the village of Chalfont St. Giles, not far from London, is an old Quaker meeting-house with a grass-grown church-yard adjoining. It is interestingly described by a writer in Black and White, who recently visited the spot. He says: "This village is the place in which Milton took refuge when the plague was raging in London. Living or dead, no member of the Society of Friends could wish to find himself in a spot more in harmony with the simple tenets of his creed. It is just such a building as was common in the New World at the time when the religious refugees of Britain crossed the seas in search of that liberty of conscience denied them in the old home. On such rude wooden benches as still remain under that red-tiled roof, no rule of life would be more seemly than that preached by George Fox, and than the simple God's-acre which fronts the meeting-house there could be no fitter resting-place in which to await in quiet confidence that Day which will prove how far that creed was in harmony with absolute truth.

THE OLD QUAKER MEETING-HOUSE AT JORDANS.
(In the grave-yard, nearby, William Penn is buried.)

"For several miles around the district is rich in memories of the early Quakers. Near by was the peaceful home of the Penningtons, in which Thomas Ellwood was living as tutor, and from whence William Penn was to take his first and most beloved wife. The reason for this focussing of so many Friends within a small area was probably the same as that which drove the Covenanters of Scotland to seek refuge on the lonely moors; to-day, Jordans is sufficiently inaccessible, and two centuries ago it must have been an ideal haven for suspected religionists. More than two hundred years have elapsed since Jordans passed into the possession of the Society of Friends. It owes its name probably to a forgotten owner of the property, for it was not from a Jordan, but from one William Russell, that, in 1671, Thomas Ellwood and several others acquired the land on behalf of the Society. The idea of a meeting-house seems to have been an afterthought; it was as the burial-place simply that Jordans was originally purchased. But the meeting-house was not long in following, for seventeen years later there is authentic record of its existence. Probably some generations have passed since regular meetings were held in this rude temple, but twice every year—on the fourth Sunday in May and the first Thursday in June—set gatherings are held to keep alive the continuity of Quaker teaching within these walls.

SENOR FELIPE AGONCILLO.

"But it is because of its graves and not on account of its meeting-place that Jordans attracts so many pilgrims year by year. For a century and a half there was nothing to distinguish one mouldering heap from another. Here is the account which Dixon, one of Penn's most competent biographers, wrote of his visit to the place in 1851:

Nothing could be less imposing than the graveyard at Jordans; the meeting-house is like an old barn in appearance, and the field in which the illustrious dead repose is not even decently smoothed. There are no gravel walks, no monuments, no mournful yews, no cheering flowers; there is not even a stone to mark a spot or to record a name. When I visited it with my friend Granville Penn, Esq., great-grandson of the State-Founder, on the 11th of January this year, we had some difficulty in determining the heap under which the great man's ashes lie. Mistakes have occurred before now, and for many years pilgrims were shown the wrong grave!

"With the laudable desire of helping pilgrims to distinguish the right shrine, Mr. Dixon prepared a simple ground plan of the graveyard, and the positions of the small headstones which mark the graves to day correspond with that plan to a large extent."

It has been claimed by some writers that Penn's remains were taken to Philadelphia, and that there is now no substantial evidence that they ever rested beneath the stone which is now pointed out as his in the old Chalfont St. Giles graveyard. This, however, those who are best informed, positively deny. In England, at least, it is generally regarded as conclusive that the ashes of the great Quaker and State-Founder are undisturbed in their narrow resting-place, as Mr. Dixon has faithfully described it.

It was recently suggested that Penn's remains be transplanted to a memorial in the heart of London—to the Old Bailey, which was the scene of his vindication of the right of a jury to render a verdict contrary to the dictation of a judge; but thus far nothing has been done to disturb the quietude of his last resting-place.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

The Peace Commissioners' Work.

Not Yet Certain That It May Not Prove Resultless — Spain's Representatives Cling to the Philippines.

AS was foreshadowed in recent letters from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Paris correspondent, the task before the Joint Peace Commission has proved by no means an easy one. More than once the Spanish commissioners have threatened to break off negotiations, finding our representatives resolute and unyielding in their attitude on certain points vital to the interests of Spain. After a long discussion of the Cuban debt, which Spain's representatives vainly endeavored to persuade the United States to assume, the subject was temporarily laid aside, and the Philippine question taken up. Spain's opposition to the American claim for the cession of the entire group of islands was prompt and emphatic. It is not known officially that any ultimatum demanding their cession was actually submitted by Judge Day and his associates, but, in any event, an intimation of such a demand appears to have been made and rejected. It was further reported, also unofficially, that Spain had demanded $240,000,000 in return for the cession of the archipelago, that amount being asked as an equivalent of the Cuban and Philippine debts, which Spain would then have to assume. It is not believed that Spain will abandon the conference, notwithstanding the ominous threats to that effect, and the closest observers are still hopeful of a friendly solution of all the questions at issue.

Mr. Ruyl, a correspondent in Paris, sends some interesting facts concerning Senor Felipe Agoncillo, whose portrait we publish on this page. Senor Agoncillo is a unique personality, and his presence in Paris has aroused much curiosity. The correspondent writes: "He is the delegate for Aguinaldo, the self-styled 'president of the Philippine Islands,' as he said to me, when I saw him in his room at the Continental Hotel, not 'dictator,' as some journals had published. His presence here is not readily understood, as he has no credentials, and he does not contemplate seeing any of the commission. He does not speak English, although he understands it quite well. He relies on his secretary, Senor Sixto Lopez, to act as his interpreter.

"When I saw him he was busily engaged writing a letter to Manila, yet he immediately stopped his work to chat. His duty, he said, was to keep Aguinaldo informed as to the results of the commission's work. He is a small, swarthy man, with prominent cheek bones, and eyes a little aslant. He might be mistaken for a Japanese."

The Hot Axle.

Men make the mistake of working according to their opportunities, and not according to their capacity of endurance. "Can I run this train from Springfield to Boston at the rate of fifty miles an hour?" says an engineer. "Yes!" "Then I will run it, reckless of consequences.' "Can I be a merchant, and a president of a bank, and a director in a life insurance company, and a school commissioner, and help edit a paper, and supervise the politics of our ward, and run for congress? I can!" the man says to himself. The store drives him. He takes all the scoldings and frets and exasperations of each position. Some day, at the height of the business season, he does not come to the store; from the most important meeting of the bank directors he is absent. In the excitement of the political canvass he fails to be at the place appointed. What is the matter? His health has broken down. The train halts long before it gets to the station. A hot axle!

A TEMPERANCE LESSON.

S. S. Lesson for Nov. 27. Proverbs 4 : 10-19, Golden Text Prov. 1 : 10.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

"MY son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." Never argue with temptations to sin. Everything which presents itself to us is either right or wrong. Our standard may not be a correct one, but we are responsible for the light we have, and not for the consciences of other men. "To him that esteemeth a thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean (Rom. 14: 14); and a man who, under the pressure of another, does that which he esteems to be wrong, carries with him a defiled conscience (I. Cor. 8 : 7). Oh, the misery of a heart which condemns and a conscience which is defiled! Such a conscience either becomes paralyzed, and ceases to act, or it becomes morbid, and is a source of continual misery, producing dissatisfaction with oneself or laying the blame on others—as Adam and Eve did, on one another and on the serpent — instead of frankly acknowledging personal culpability, confessing sin and seeking pardon.

"If sinners entice thee." Where do sinners entice? They do not venture themselves into "the path of the just;" they are not to be found within "the strait gate" and on "the narrow way;" they keep on "the broad way that leadeth to destruction." "Enter not into the path of the wicked." Before sinners can entice any man, he must place himself within their reach. Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful" (Ps. 1. : 1). "But," many will say, "how can we avoid it? My brother, living in the same house with me, sharing the same room, eating at the same table, is continually pouring into my ears just what inflames my passions and kindles the desire to sin, and I cannot get away from it." God says, "Consent thou not" If you, young man, stand on the side of God, his presence with you will be such that your brother will not continue to tempt you if he finds in you no response.

Another will say, "My fellow-clerk in the same office is continually telling me how easily money is made in betting and gambling transactions. I am very short of money; why should I not try my luck? If I do not, others will, etc., etc." Oh young man, can you say you do this thing for the God who created you for his glory, or for the Saviour who bore your sins that he might be just to forgive you your sins and to cleanse you from all unrighteousness? You are not bound to listen; by turning a deaf ear you may lose your friend, but you will not lose your soul. "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it and pass away. For they sleep not unless they have done mischief; and their sleep is taken away unless they cause some to fall" (Prov. 4 : 14-16). "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not"

One who is born again of the Spirit of God, by his very new life, hates sin; there is something in him which repulses the first advance of the enticement to sin; he has entered upon another world than that of the sinner who seeks to draw him away, and he will seek to draw to Christ the very sinner who seeks his downfall. Such is the instinct of the new man. It is as unnatural for "a new creature" to desire to sin against God as it is for a sinner to desire to glorify God and the life of Christ in a believer must run very low if he makes the excuse that the enticements of sinners are too strong for him to resist. And yet it is only he that abideth in Him that sinneth not (I. John 3 : 6). Just as a king who forgets himself may be unkingly, and by his actions belie his high position, so can one of God's kings and priests walk unworthily of his divine royalty by succumbing to the enticements of sinners.

Ahab was a king, but in his despicable action with Naboth, under the Satanic influence of Jezebel, he belied his princely character. How much more terrible is the fall of one who has been enlightened, has tasted of the heavenly gift, been made partaker of the Holy Ghost, tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the world to come (Heb. 6 : 4-5), if he falls away into the degradation of the drunkard, the backbiter, the unclean, the dishonest, or the liar! Such find that "the way of the wicked is darkness; they know not at what they stumble." They discover that the very bread of those who have enticed them is wickedness, and their very drink is violence. How can it be otherwise? The prince of darkness dwells within them, and he was a murderer from the beginning (John 8 : 44).

"The Path of the Just is as the Shining Light." "The Way of the Wicked is as Darkness."

The wise king of Israel says: "Hear my son, and receive my sayings, and the years of thy life shall be many" (ver. 10). Listening to God not only saves us from listening to sinners, but it also prolongs our own life. The worry, the harrass, the anxiety, the pressure, which an uneasy conscience produces, may go far to shorten life, while the knowledge of the will of God and oneness with His will bring into life a calm and steady peace, which circumstances have no power to interrupt." "I have taught thee in the way of wisdom, I have led thee in paths of righteousness." According to a literal translation, verse 12 runs: "As thou goest, step by step, thy way shall be opened up before thee, and when thou runnest thou shalt not be left to stumble." What a contrast between the sure leading, step by step, of our most loving and merciful heavenly Father—every step made ready and possible for our tread, every step an advance upon the previous one, every step a walking with God—and the path of the wicked, which is darkness, and they know not at what they stumble!

So guided, so guarded, we can understand that "the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." A man or a woman walking with God becomes luminous; such give forth light. All unconsciously to themselves what they do and how they do it becomes a light to others. Paul knew this well when he could say: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ" (I. Cor. 11 : 1). What light has come into the world through the simple, straight life of obedience and faith lived in this world by the recently departed Mr. George Muller!

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

SUCH a book as this of Proverbs ought to have the attention of even the most irreligious people. It has little to say of God, or of a future life, or of religion, and nothing to say of Christ. It takes a view of this life only, and without taking anything else into account, it shows that on even this low plane it is better to be a good man than a bad one. The author of the Proverbs was a close observer, and his opinion is that even if death were the end of all things, the virtuous, temperate, industrious, honest man has a better time than the lazy, pleasure-seeking, dissolute, dishonest man. To the young man starting in life he says that it pays to lead a clean, upright life. He does not warn the wrong-doer of a judgment day and of the wrath of God, but assures him that in this life the time will come when he will be sorry for every step he has taken out of the path of rectitude. If the young man wants to have a long life, to be prosperous, to be happy, to enjoy public respect, and have an honored old age, the surest way is to be good. He might have appealed to higher motives, and taken a wider view, but he is content with showing that if there were no other world than this, the young man at the parting of the ways will consult his own interests by choosing the right and the good.

THE KAISER'S PILGRIMAGE ENDED.

After Dedicating the New Church, Praying for the World's Peace and Visiting the Sacred Places he Begins his Return Journey.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S journey to Palestine is practically over, and his face is now turned toward home. The imperial visit was shortened, it is said, by the exciting news from Europe and the forebodings of war, in which England, France, and, possibly, Germany's ally, Russia, might be involved. Further, it was believed that the Emperor's doings in the Holy Land and his friendly hobnobbing with the Sultan had not been favorably regarded at St. Petersburg, and intimation to that effect had not been lacking. Whatever the real cause, it is certain the original program of the royal tours was abbreviated considerably to save time. A projected trip to Jericho was abandoned, and several of the other features of the tour were omitted.

THE IMPERIAL PILGRIM.

While in Palestine, however, the Kaiser has been extraordinarily active in sightseeing, and has made the best use of his time. One of the most interesting events during the tour was a visit to Mount Zion, where, in the presence of the imperial party, the German flag was hoisted over a piece of ground which popular tradition assigns as the abode of the Virgin Mary, and which the Sultan had presented to his royal guest. This particular spot is one of many which are shown to travelers as having been the scenes of Bible events, but which investigation proves to be utterly unsupported in such claims. There is no record, sacred or secular, to substantiate the claim in the present instance. Shortly after the flag-raising, the Emperor formally presented the plot of ground to the German Catholics, and telegraphed the Pope to that effect. The gift was promptly accepted. Our correspondent in Jerusalem, Hon. Selah Merrill, writes describing the energetic efforts of the authorities to prepare the city and its surroundings for the reception and entertainment of the distinguished guests. Writing considerably in advance of the arrival of the visitors, he says:

"The foreign residents have been greatly interested in the efforts that are being made to have the city in a presentable condition for the coming of the Emperor William and his suite. Work of this kind is new to the Turks, and they seem almost bewildered as to what ought to be done. The epidemic of improvement has actually taken possession of the authorities, and although they go about the task in the most awkward manner, they show that they are doing all they can. In some instances, they ruin things, as was to be supposed, while in others they succeed in bringing about a desirable change. Walls are patched up, houses are whitewashed and painted, streets are repaired, new bits of road opened, and in many respects the officials have already waked up, and are trying to make the condition of things better than it generally is.

"In the way from Haifa to Cesarea, there is a noted ruin, called Athlit, situated on the shore and surrounded by a rampart of natural rock, dating from a very ancient period, which has been admired by travelers for its strength and singular construction. It had a gateway cut through the solid rock, wide enough for two horses abreast, and on each side were the holes for the bolts and bars, which made the gate secure. The Turks have blasted away one side of this gateway, and also the rock in either direction for some distance, so that the Emperor's carriage might enter the place without inconvenience. This interesting monument of antiquity is now ruined.

"The roads about Jerusalem have been coated with broken stones and covered with earth, which has already changed to powder, filling the air with white dust, like clouds of snow. Stores, houses and clothing are nearly ruined by this dust, to say nothing of the damage done to eyes, ears and nostrils, and as there is no water to counteract this dust the condition of things is almost unbearable. The road-beds are better, however, and could water be applied and heavy rollers used, the roads would be greatly improved.

"An entirely new road has been constructed from Jerusalem, commencing near the Damascus gate and going round to the north and northeast to the top of Olivet. This is said to have been built expressly for the Emperor and Empress, so that they could drive to that sacred spot. It will, of course, be a great convenience to the people of Jerusalem and to the travelers who visit the city, provided the road does not wash away in the heavy rains, for it was built apparently in the most superficial manner.

"Old landmarks about Jerusalem are disappearing. The ruins of the buildings of the Knights of St. John, known as 'The Muristan,' occupying a large area in the middle of the city, will soon be a thing of the past. The part of the Muristan towards Christian street, or the west, was claimed by the Greeks. The part to the east of the street was given to the Germans. Since it was decided that the German Emperor was to visit Jerusalem, the Greeks have been in a state of excitement, lest the Emperor might ask for more ground and the Sultan might grant almost any request, and they have been at work with a large number of men to enclose their ground by a high wall. The debris above the street level is thirty feet high and from ten to twenty feet below it. The Greeks dig, however, only about ten feet before laying the foundation of their wall, making vertically forty feet of debris. Fifty donkeys have been at work night and day removing this mass of earth, and, of course, everything in that section of the city is in great confusion.

"The half of the Muristan that belongs to the Germans is covered with ruins. It contains immense cisterns fifty feet deep. The ruined apartments of the Knights that were, many years ago, fitted up as a church for the Germans of Jerusalem, are close to the new church on its south side. On the east side the native shops touch it, and on the north, across the street twenty feet wide, rises a Greek building three stories high, and on the west across the street above mentioned rises the wall which the Greeks have just built to prevent the Emperor from demanding their land. The result is that the German church is closely shut in. The tower, dome, and roof of the church are seen from the house-tops of the city. The church stands on the site of an old Crusading church, the form of which has been preserved. The Germans have been five years in building the new church, and it is the finest in the city.

"Another ancient landmark has been the great moat around the Castle of David. This left a gap between the Castle and the Jaffa gate about fifty wide. The Jaffa gate has for a long time been too small for the amount of travel and traffic that must pass through it. The advent of the Emperor was the time for a change. Between the Castle and the Bethlehem road a wall was built across the moat, also one on the north side between the Castle and David street. The section of the moat thus inclosed has been filled and now there is a broad street between the Castle and the Jaffa gate, where formerly, as I have said, was a deep trench. This improvement was greatly needed. We have now a proper entrance to Jerusalem and we have preserved to art and archæology, to say nothing of comfort to foot people, The Gate of the Friend, Babel Khalil, known to all travelers as The Jaffa Gate.

"To fill this great pit, 150,000 cubic feet of earth was required, and it was all brought on the backs of donkeys from the Muristan.

"On the edge of the moat between David street and the Castle there had been built within a recent period forty or fifty small, untidy and unsightly shops. No protest against their being erected availed, for the Turks needed the rent they would bring; and now that the German Emperor is coming and this street is thought to be too narrow, which was true enough, these shops are being demolished.

"The few changes that are being made for the better lead people here to remark that it would be a blessing to this land could an Emperor make it convenient to come here every year."

THE NEW GERMAN EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN JERUSALEM.
(As it will appear when finished, according to the architect's drawings.)

It is reported that one significant result of the Emperor's Eastern tour has been an agreement, tantamount to an alliance, between Germany and Turkey, whereby in return for material concessions to his subjects in the Orient, the Kaiser guarantees the integrity of the Sultan's eastern dominions.

That an absolute alliance has been arranged is not believed to be at all likely, however, although it is not improbable that substantial trade privileges have been secured by Germany in return for its display of friendship toward Ottoman interests.

A CHRISTIAN COUNTESS.

Adeline Von Schimmelman and her Evangelistic Work in Many Lands—A Life Given to Christ.

READERS of this journal are already familiar to some extent with the remarkable career of Countess Adeline Schimmelman, of Germany, a lady of fortune and noble birth, who is devoting her life to spreading the Gospel in the unevangelized sections of her own land. Recently she came to the United States on a visit, and at the present time she is in the West. The Countess tells the story of her career most interestingly.

A CROWDED JERUSALEM STREET.

"I am a spinster, and my three sons, Paul Friedrich, Wilhelm and Otto, are adopted. I took them when they were babies in need of a mother's care. They are now a great blessing to me. Paul Friedrich attends to all the financial and practical affairs of our journeyings, opens and closes my meetings for me, and in countless ways assists me in my work. Each year we have aimed to touch once at the large ports of Europe and do missionary work. London, Berlin, Hamburg and Genoa are some of the places in which I have worked months at a time. Last year I visited fifty-eight cities, including some in Denmark and Scandinavia.

"My plan of work is to enter the harbor of some city, apprise the sailors and wharfmen of our presence and let their curiosity be awakened. I go ashore and speak to them in a hall near by if possible. I not only present the Gospel, but endeavor to establish coffee houses and induce men to give up strong drink.

"The poverty and intemperance in Old World cities are vastly greater than in America, where the women are so actively employed in good work—in mothering boys and girls who need help. In Germany the Western Christian Temperance Union and the Christian Endeavor Society have obtained but a small footing. It is yet very hard for women to do public philanthropic work without ridicule and contempt.

"I have gone from city to city, hoping my object lesson would inspire other women to take a positive stand. I have never taken up collections at my meetings, defraying my expenses from my own fortune. I have had contributions from the lately deceased Queen of Denmark—a noble woman and a friend to me—also from the Princess of Wales.

"One of my most pleasant tasks is the searching of parents of wayward boys, who, when converted, want father and mother to know of it.

"I am going to spend the winter in Chicago. After Chicago I will go up along Lake Superior to personally investigate that region as a settlement place for Danes and Scandinavians, that I may take back to anxious people in the Old World exact knowledge of the conditions that are now prevailing there."

A Favorite Word.

BENEDICT XIII. decreed that when the German Catholics met each other they should always give the following salutation, the one first speaking saying, "Praised be Jesus Christ!" the other responding, "For ever, amen!"—a salutation fit for all people whenever they come together.

The word "mercy" is used in the Bible two hundred and fourteen times; it seems to be the favorite word of all the Scriptures. Sometimes it glances feebly upon us like dew in the starlight; then with bolder hand it seems to build an arched bridge from one storm-cloud of trouble to another; and then again it trickles like a fountain upon the thirst of the traveler.

The finest roads I ever saw are in Switzerland. They are built by the government, and at very short intervals you come across water pouring out of the rocks. The government provides cups for men and troughs for the animals to drink out of. And our King has so arranged it that on the highway we are traveling toward heaven, ever and anon there shall dash upon us the clear, sweet water that flows from the eternal Rock.

Daily Discipline.

THERE are times when everything seems to go wrong. From seven o'clock A. M., till ten P. M., affairs are in a twist. You rise in the morning and the room is cold, and a button is off, and the breakfast is tough, and the stove smokes, and the pipes burst, and you start down the street nettled from head to foot. All day long things are adverse. Insinuations, petty losses, meanness on the part of customers. The ink-bottle upsets and spoils the carpet. Some one gives a wrong turn to the damper and the gas escapes. An agent comes in determined to insure your life when it is already insured for more than it is worth, and you are afraid some one will knock you on the head to get the price of your policy, but he sticks to you showing you pictures of old Time and the hour-glass, and death's scythe and a skeleton, making it quite certain that you will die before your time, unless you take out papers in his company. Besides this you have a cold in your head, and a grain of dirt in your eye, and you are a walking uneasiness. The day is out of joint and no surgeon can set it.

The probability is that if you would look at the weather-vane, you would find that the wind is northeast, and you might remember that you have lost much sleep lately. It might happen to be that you are out of joint instead of the day. Be careful and not write many letters while you are in that irritated mood. You will pen some things that you will be sorry for afterward.

Let us remember that these spiked nettles of life are part of our discipline. Life would get nauseating if it were all honey. That table would be poorly that had on it nothing but treacle. We need a little vinegar, mustard, pepper, and horse-radish that brings the tears even when we do not feel pathetic. If this world were all smoothness, we would never be ready for emigration to a higher and better. Blustering March and weeping April prepare us for shining May. This world is a poor hitching-post. Instead of tying fast on the cold mountains, we had better whip up and hasten on toward the warm inn, where our good friends are looking out of the window watching to see us come up.

Light of Nature.

MEN strike their knife through the Bible because they say that the light of nature is sufficient. Indeed! Have the fire-worshipers of India, cutting themselves with lancets until the blood spurts at every pore, found the light of nature sufficient? Has the Bornesian cannibal, gnawing the roasted flesh from human bones, found the light of nature sufficient? Has the Chinese woman, with her foot cramped and deformed into a cow's hoof, found the light of nature sufficient? Could the ancients see heaven from the heights of Ida or Olympus? No! I call upon the pagodas of superstition, the Brahminic tortures, the infanticide of the Ganges; the bloody wheels of the Juggernaut to prove that of the light nature is not sufficient.

Happy Homes.

SO much has recently been said about marriage as a failure, it is interesting to see that people do not believe a word of it. Recently, in high life and common life, the altars have been surrounded by congratulatory groups. It is evident that all the talented things that have been said antagonistic to marriage have made no impression against this divine institution. Never so many orange-wreaths have been twisted—never so many wedding-marches played—never so many high hopes raised—never so many hearty congratulations offered. No one thinks marriage a failure unless he be a scoundrel, or he be chained for a life-time to a vixen, a termagant or a fool. God instituted marriage, and he never instituted a failure. The cases of unhappy, conjugal alliance are as few when compared with the happy homes as the cases of rheumatism when compared with healthy limbs, as the blind eyes when compared with the good eyes, as the figure 1 when compared with 5,000 You might as well denounce health as a failure because some people are sick.

Just in proportion as the institution of marriage is honored in any community is that community prospered; and there is no exception. Just in proportion as men have loose ideas in regard to marriage are their lives corrupt. And what is most beautiful about this heaven-descended institution is that its happiness depends not on worldly successes. Indeed, those are apt most to appreciate their homes who are maltreated of the world, and who fly to them as a refuge. I warrant there is as much domestic love in $800 a year as in $8,000. The exquisiteness of the marriage-robe and the length of the veil trailing through the church-aisle are no surer prophecy of a happy life than the plain promise of that one in fustian and the other in calico. What multitudes of men and women have in this relation proved themselves heroes and heroines!

THE HAPPY CITIZEN.

TO be a good citizen is an integral part of happiness; for no man can be happy in a community which does not recognize him as a blessing or an honor to it. This condition implies moral qualities of a high order, for a good citizen is something more than a mere partisan; he must bring to his public duties those peculiar attributes which made Edmund Burke an ideal politician—"a horror of crime, a deep humanity, a keen sensibility, a singular vivacity and sincerity of conscience."

It is, however, only too true that a large majority of citizens have a tendency to become party men. For whenever we fail to do justice to an opponent who is not our way of thinking, whenever we advocate our opinions with anger and vehemence, whenever we join in the clamor against unpopular names, or repeat the shameful inuendos, or the scurrulous jests we hear, we are not good citizens in any way. "The ideal citizen walks in the light, and wears the truth on his breast, and no mean heart beats beneath it." He can credit his opponents with intellects as keen as his own, with hearts as upright, and motives as honorable, because he possesses that charity, which even amid the hottest strife of party faction, "suffereth long, and is kind, thinking no evil, rejoicing not in iniquity, but rejoicing in the truth, bearing all things, believing all things, hoping all things, enduring all things."

Next to this candor of truth the ideal citizen has a great political integrity, an integrity like his of whom even an enemy said—"if you place the sun at his right hand, and the moon at his left hand, you could not make him swerve from the path of honor and rectitude." To such a citizen the word "bribery" embodies an impossible idea. Yet this idea in connection with politics has penetrated the public mind until it has become a venial sin. But no sin can more quickly and surely undermine self-respect, and the virtues of thrift and economy. For when a man begins to rely on election windfalls to free him from difficulties, he is soon contemptuous of small, honest earnings.

There is not only a personal degradation in bribery, but a domestic one. Taking money for a vote is a wrong which a man generally tells his wife about. Indeed, it is often thought best to approach a man through his wife, as Satan approached Adam through Eve. Thus they are both in the transgression, and neither can look to the other for moral support. Thus love of country is turned into love of money, and patriotism becomes to them an old wife's fable.

Bribery is a sin too often treated with a smile, for it is a sin against God—not because there is a divine or human law against it—but because it deadens the conscience, and dethrones God in a man's soul, and sets up Belial in His place. It may, or it may not, be important that a certain party succeed, but it is inviolably important that every man cast his vote with a religious and unselfish conscience.

Vox populi is not always vox Dei; but vox Dei is always, or ought to be always, vox populi. The voice of the people cannot be under every condition relied on. It compelled Aaron to make a golden calf. It shouted for Diana, against Christ. It cried "crucify Him." If an elector does not by his own moral act appeal to God in his vote, then he appeals to chance. But the vote given conscientiously is a religious act; it is a duty to be done, not as we like, but as we feel to be the best.

Public opinion is not, however, to be scouted. It has done wonders. It abolished slavery, and it is abolishing profanity and drinking; yet we must remember that, even in such cases, reform was carried in spite of a hostile public opinion. To the majority, public opinion is a second nature, and they act on its dictates. Therefore, nothing is more important than that it should be healthy and virtuous. Yet it is a matter of fact that the men who have reformed the world, have done it in defiance of public opinion. They fought a good fight against it. Men like Luther and Wesley and Lincoln had something to say, or something to do, and they said it and did it, caring little how hardly the world talked of them.

The good citizen must also have a supreme faith in God, and in humanity. Feeling the great and awful reality lying in those two words, "national life," he will have faith in the eternal principles on which national life is founded. He will not be daunted nor discouraged by indifference or ingratitude. He will believe in the final triumph of good over evil, which indeed has the certainty—sooner or later—of a inevitable law. He knows that by no possibility wrong can ever be a necessity; therefore nothing that wrongs the honor the nation can be necessary to its welfare. he only perfect diplomacy is perfect truthfu ss. The only perfect law of nations is pe honesty. The only perfect statesmans is faith in God and love to man."

Woman is only artificially debarred in ese duties. She has in all cases an unsee ut preponderating civil power. She may n ast a vote, but she has the ability to infl nce every vote in her domestic and social c. She has a still greater responsibility. S the mother of judges, and legislators, ar n educator of the ideal citizen. From he must learn to honor the flag of their land, to love their country, and to be pr their native city. She teaches them patriots, she trains their young hearts in virtues that go to make the citizen wor of his country, for woman is a citizen not b n circumstance law can give or take away. She dates her right from her birth honr a birthplace, and has always had this po on her head, and always shall have. She mother of all the nations of the earth! if men are to be good citizens, she crea their boyhood the elements out of whic character is formed.

THE DREYFUS CASE.

FRANCE appears likely to be delivered, at last, of the disgraceful Dreyfus scandal. The Court of Cassation, which corresponds with our Supreme Court, has decided that the whole proceedings should be reviewed and has itself undertaken the task. There is a possibility that in that court, Dreyfus may obtain justice, which he could not hope to get before a military tribunal. The question the court will have to decide is, whether the evidence submitted against him on his former trial, justified his conviction, and, it may be said, in the interests of the French people, that the court will also state definitely, whether in its opinion, Dreyfus was guilty or not. For four years this unhappy man has suffered imprisonment of the most brutal description, on an island off the coast of French Guiana. In September, 1894, the French Government learned that some of its most important military secrets were being revealed to the German Embassy in Paris. At that time the chief military authorities in France were rabid Jew-haters; and when they tried to detect the traitor, their suspicions concentrated on Capt. Dreyfus, the only Jew on the General Staff. He was arrested, tried by court-martial and convicted. He was degraded of his uniform, his sword was broken and amid cries of execration from the infuriated populace, he was hurried away to his island prison. But was he guilty of the crime? It is difficult to believe that he was. He was intensely patriotic, and he was a highly efficient officer. No motive for such a crime as he was charged with has been suggested. Money could not tempt him, for his own family is wealthy and he had himself married a rich wife. His private life was clean and he was ardently devoted to his wife and their two children. In most countries, the most conclusive evidence would have been demanded, before such a man could have been convicted of so dastardly a crime. But in this instance, the most flimsy evidence sufficed. A few brave men among whom were Kestner, Vice President of the Senate, and Zola, the novelist, dared to declare their belief in his innocence and demanded a revision of the case. Then new facts favorable to the prisoner came to light. One piece of evidence which had great weight against Dreyfus was a letter purporting to be written by him practically admitting his guilt. This is now proved to be a forgery, and the forger, Col. Henry, confessed that he forged it and committed suicide while in prison awaiting his trial for the offence. There is, therefore, strong ground for a new trial. But strangely, the French Legislature and people have opposed it on the ground that a new trial is a reflection on the army. They do not appear to realize that if the highest officers of the army are corrupt, the sooner they are exposed and expelled the better; while if they are honest men, the revision of their proceedings can do them no harm. Nor do they appear to care that if the prisoner is not guilty, a grievous wrong has been done to an innocent man which cannot too soon be rectified. Regard for the national honor ought to prevent such an attitude, even if they care nothing for the wise man's warning:

He that justifieth the wicked and he that condemneth the just, even they both are an abomination to the Lord (Prov. 17:15).

THE DREYFUS CASE BEFORE THE COURT OF CASSATION IN PARIS.

The City Liable.

An effort of the authorities of the City of Brooklyn to escape liability for damages failed last week in the New York Appellate Court. The plaintiff had already secured a verdict in the lower court for $3,500, but the city appealed the case and had its appeal dismissed. Evidence was given to show that the plaintiff, while walking on one of the sidewalks one evening stumbled against a large flag-stone which had been laid there. It was about five inches higher than the sidewalk, but could not be easily seen because of the wretchedly poor lighting of the thoroughfare. The man was injured so seriously by his fall that he was under medical care for nine months, and will never be a strong man again. A testimony that fastened the responsibility on the city was that two persons had previously fallen over the same stone and one of them had called the attention of the policeman on the post to its dangerous position and he on his part had notified the proper department of the city government. The court rightly held that as the servants of the city ought to have removed the stone, and neglected to do so after being warned, the city was liable for the damage which had resulted from their negligence. People sometimes forget that in the last judgment a similar principle will be recognized.

Judge this therefore, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way (Rom. 14:13).

A Boy Gives his Skin.

An interesting operation was performed at Gouverneur Hospital, New York, a few days ago. One of the patients there is Jennie Paulino, the daughter of an Italian. She was hurt during the early fall by a trolley car which broke one of her legs and tore the flesh from the other. The broken leg was soon well but the other would not heal. For some time the surgeons feared it would be necessary to amputate it, but eventually it so far recovered that the process of skin-grafting was all that was necessary for complete restoration. The child's parents were asked if they knew any one who would be willing to contribute a few strips of skin to be laid on the injured limb. The parents knew of no one, unless their eldest son, who was much attached to the sufferer, would do it. He, however, refused. Instantly a younger son named Gabriel, only nine years old, offered himself for the purpose. He was told it would hurt him badly, but he said he did not care if it would cure Jennie. The surgeons examined him and pronounced him fit for the operation. He was laid on the operating table and several long strips of skin were removed from his body, and carefully placed on that of his sister. His wounds were then dressed and he was removed to a cot. The surgeons say that the operation was entirely successful and both children will recover. Probably the girl never knew how much her brother loved her, but after this proof she can never be in doubt. Christians often do not realize their Lord's love though he gave them an infinitely greater proof.

Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends (John 15:13).

An Insurance Fraud.

A remarkable case is shortly to be tried in a Court of Jersey City, N. J. Some twelve months ago a man applied to an insurance company for a policy on his life. He filled up the application form satisfactorily and the company's physician examined him. His report being favorable the policy was granted. Nine months later the company was notified of his death and a demand was made for the amount due under the policy. But the insurer had died of consumption and the company inquired of their physician how it was he failed to detect the disease when he examined him. He went to see the corpse and at once perceived that it was not that of the man whom he had examined. An investigation followed, from which it was found that a friend of the deceased of about the same age, a strong, healthy man had submitted himself to the doctor's examination in his friend's name. He and the widow and another person connected with insurance business have been arrested and will be tried for conspiring to defraud. The fraud in this case was plain and obvious. The consumptive's friends were evidently well aware that he would be rejected if he was examined in his own person. It is well for us that in going to God we need not have that fear. The vilest sinner whose whole nature is spiritually diseased will be accepted if he comes in Christ's name and pleads his perfect substitution.

In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily and ye are complete in him (Col. 2:9).

A Prize Lost.

The clever work of Lieutenant Hobson in raising the Spanish cruiser, Infanta Maria Teresa, has proved useless. The cruiser belonged to the fleet of Admiral Cervera, and was the flagship of the squadron when it sailed out of Santiago harbor on July 3. She was shattered by American shells and set on fire before she sank. Lately she was raised and repaired by Naval Constructor Hobson, and started from Guantanamo Bay for Norfolk. A terrible storm overtook her while she was passing through what is known to mariners as the Crooked Passage. The pounding waves reopened the holes that had been repaired, and started new ones among the flame-warped plates. She began to fill rapidly. For many hours her officers and crew, 114 men all told, bravely labored at the pumps. It was only when her bow was deep in the sea and her propellers were showing indications that she would soon plunge head-first into the depths, that she was abandoned. Lieutenant Commander Harris, in charge for the Navy Department, was the last to leave the sinking ship, when all her crew had been gotten safely on the Merritt, which took them to Charleston, S. C. The ship would probably have been a valuable addition to our navy, and might have done good service if it had once reached port and been thoroughly repaired, but meeting the storm before it was in condition to bear the strain it was lost. It is never so with the spiritual trophies which Christ wins from the great enemy of souls.

Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory (Jude 24).

Marriage Dissolved by Fire.

A act of futile self-sacrifice was committed in New York last week by a demented woman. She was a devout Roman Catholic, but five years ago she fell in love with a young Jew, and, in spite of the opposition of both families, she married him. They lived together peacefully, both remaining true to their respective faiths; but the wife's family could not forgive her for marrying a man not a Christian. Ultimately they consented to her visiting them, but they frequently reproached her. Lately she became distressed herself on account of her marriage, and in spite of her husband's efforts to cheer her, she sank into a melancholy state, in which she lost control of herself. She frequently said she must make some great sacrifice to deserve pardon. One day last week she took a can of kerosene oil, poured it over herself, and applied a light to her dress. Her children saw her burning, and called a neighbor, who extinguished the flames, but too late to save her life. The poor creature had evidently lost her reason, otherwise she would have known that it is by repentance and love, and not by self-immolation that reconciliation with God is secured.

Though I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing (1. Cor. 13:3, R. V.).

An Undesirable Congregation.

The sexton of a church in New York City recently gave a significant reason for the variation in the size of the congregation. A service is held in the church every morning at seven o'clock. Being asked if many people came at so early an hour, he said that in the summer only a few devout worshipers attended, but in the winter it was necessary to have a policeman at the doors to keep the people out. His questioner remarked that he should have thought it would be the reverse, as in the severe weather people would not like to leave their homes. The sexton replied that the more severe the weather, the larger was the crowd, and when snow was on the ground, the doors of the church were besieged. "You see," he said, "they are chiefly all-nighters—men who have no homes, and they come because the church is warm and the seats comfortable. They are dirty, and their clothes are ragged and full of vermin. They do not pay any attention to the service, but just sit and doze. The warmth and comfort are all they come for; so we have a policeman to keep them out." It is quite natural that such undesirable attendants should be excluded, but the innovation of inquiring into a person's motives in coming to church is suggestive. One wonders how large the congregation of any church would be, if only those were admitted who came with a right motive. Some come because they look for intellectual pleasure in listening to the preacher, others to hear the choir, others because it is not respectable to stay away from church, and others because they think regular attendance will insure salvation. If all were excluded but those who came to worship God and seek the Saviour, there would be more empty seats than there are.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart (Ps. 24:3).

HEROES at the BOWERY MISSION

A Great Gospel Gathering of Soldiers and Sailors at the Mission Hall—Addresses by Gen. Swayne, Col. Van Rensselaer and Others.

WHEN the call came for patriotic volunteers, over six months ago, there were many responses from men whose faces were familiar in the nightly gatherings at the Bowery Mission. Grown men and mere lads, they went forth together at their country's summons, some to brave peril and death at sea, others to join camps where thousands of brave fellows were waiting to be sent to Cuba and Porto Rico. After the war many returned, but not all. Some had found their last resting-place on a foreign shore, having fallen victims to tropical fevers, others died on the battlefield or in the hospital: a few succumbed to the inevitable hardships of camp-life.

Thursday, November 3, was a rallying night at the old Bowery Mission. On that evening, in response to the invitation of Superintendent Wyburn, the usual audience was greatly augmented by the presence of a large number of soldiers and sailors, and the service was made of a special character for their benefit. The Scripture lesson was read by Gen. Wager Swayne, who selected the twentieth chapter of the Gospel of Matthew: The laborers in the vineyard. Speaking to the soldiers, Gen. Swayne said:

"I have a right to call every man here 'Comrade.' I gave my life to my country in the Civil War and only lost a leg." (This little pleasantry provoked a smile. The General's leg had been shattered by a shell.) Continuing he said: "The first quality of a soldier is that he shall be brave. Soldiers must be brave. There will surely come a time when he will be put to the test, and all that has been expended will be wasted if, when the day of battle comes, the soldier does not stand his ground. The soldier who is a coward is useless to his country, and the same conditions apply to the Christian life. You must give yourselves, body and soul, and spirit, to God. God cannot use the coward, but he can take the weak man and make him strong. I have often tested it myself, since I had my leg shattered by a shell; and when, as often occurs, I am assisted by strangers to cross the street, I take it as a message from God to help me in my weakness. I have been testing the truth of the message, of which I have just spoken, for the past fifty years. Be brave soldiers of the Cross, be true to God, and you will be an honor to your country."

Col. Kiliaen Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Sarah J. Bird (the "Mother of the Bowery Boys"), and Captain Dayton also made brief addresses, which were greatly appreciated by all present.

All the soldiers and sailors in the mission hall were presented with copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD War Testament, as souvenirs of the occasion. The men seemed greatly pleased with the gifts. One man rose, and said that a number of years ago, he had been presented with a Bible by a city missionary in London, and had carried it all over the world with him, until two years ago, when he lost it in Australia. Now, as he looked at the New Testament he had just received, he felt consoled for his loss.

After the refreshments were served, a short special service was held, and fully fifty men came forward and manifested a desire to lead a better life.

The Y. M. C. A. Railroad Convention.

The ninth annual conference of the Railroad Department of the Young Men's Christian Associations was held at Fort Wayne, Ind., October 20–23. More than 600 railroad delegates were present. All the meetings were largely attended, and the gathering was one of the most spiritual conferences the associations have ever held. Strong indorsements of the work of the Railroad Department were presented by prominent officials from all parts of the country. The Railroad Department now has 130 associations, employing 145 secretaries, and owning or using 51 buildings designed especially for their work, valued at nearly $800,000.

Chaplains as Evangelists.

While at Montauk, the army was visited by many earnest Christian ministers and lay evangelists, whose coming was heartily welcomed by the chaplains there engaged. To the credit of those who were really engaged in the work, be it said, that they did not ignore the chaplains; but with few exceptions engaged cheerfully with them.

I attended all the religious meetings within my reach, and I am free to say that no speakers were more acceptable than the chaplains, and none more effective. I saw more soldiers go to chaplains and say "Pray for me," than to any one else. On the Sunday night before leaving, myself and Chaplains Prioleau and Anderson, held a union service in the Young Men's Christian Association's tent No. 2, and it was the testimony of both Brother Anderson and Brother Prioleau, that never before had they been asked by so many men individually to pray for them. In this meeting there were some happy conversions, and scores of men pledged themselves to live henceforth for God. I saw no other meeting in the camp that equalled it in size, fervor, or results. I know that the chaplains of the regular army have, to a large extent, the confidence and affection of the men with whom they serve. The men of my regiment have frequently said to outsiders that they would rather hear the chaplain preach than anyone who came to visit them, no matter whom he might be. I count the men of my regiment as my personal friends, and they know I am interested in their welfare, both temporally and spiritually. If God wills I shall send out from my field some men who will be preachers of the Gospel.

Don't strike the chaplains. Pray for them. CHAPLAIN T. G. STEWARD.

DISTRIBUTING WAR TESTAMENTS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS AT THE BOWERY MISSION.

REFORMS THAT NEED HELP.

Co-operation and Alliance the duty of Christians in the face of the Enemy (John 2:13–25).

No man ought to be willing to accept without service the great blessings which come to him through Christ. Christ's own instructions were, "Freely ye have received, freely give." It is, therefore, a manifest duty that when help is needed for the purification of the church, or the world, or for service in the cause of humanity, the Christian should be the first to volunteer. Gratitude to God requires that he who has received much should be active in his service. There is no lack of opportunity. The treasuries of the missionary societies and the societies for spreading the Gospel in our own land need continually replenishing, and there are abundant opportunities for relieving the needs of the poor around us. But it is in personal service that gratitude should especially be manifested. There is still need for men "to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty." The saloon power, the oppression of the poor and other gigantic evils that disgrace our civilized life are so strongly entrenched that only by well-organized and persistent attack can we hope to eliminate them. It is natural that there should be shrinking from such conflicts, but it ought to be overcome. The Christian is an enlisted soldier of the Cross, and his sympathy and active support ought to be given in every struggle of right against might and of righteousness against moral corruption. There is scarcely a community in this broad land in which there is no work of this kind to do. In many the battle languishes and the enemies of God remain in power only because of the half-hearted support that is given by the church to the leaders who are fighting under the banner of the Cross.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

SICILIAN PEASANT LIFE.

And of Ruined Temples and Fertile Fields—Poverty-Stricken Homes.

SICILY, so beautiful that it has been called "The Smile of God," is less visited by tourists than other attractive spots of Europe: its Norman-Saracenic walls and bations, its marvelous castles, and ancit temples where the gods of Greece we worshiped, have had small interest farchæologists. Pleasure-seekers seek ittle because, perhaps, existence is not te comfortable in Sicily. This coun- which used to be known as "the nary of Europe," has long been a very perty-stricken land. Agricultural impments are exceedingly crude, and the igh of the most primitive pattern.

lomes of Sicilian peasantry are often e-like huts with earthern floors, stone wls, glassless windows and no fire- ces. In cold weather scaldaraji (deep, per platters containing a few handf of smouldering charcoal), are brought in service, if the family can afford it. Washday, women are seen in front of r dwellings, boiling clothes in copper kles over charcoal furnaces—unless a am is convenient, when you may catch n as in other unthrifty lands, beating ged garments against stones. Gracefgirls, carrying water-jugs, trip by to a from fountains. Poultry-sellers eam their wares lustily. The itinerant hes-mender goes up and down, with ndle and thread, plying his calling. Carts, two-wheeled donkey-carts, loaded wi vegetables, lumber along.

Down all the dark, narrow streets, gimmering tapers shine in niches or befe rude shrines. Everybody lives outdrs; the wretched hut does not invite. Hillsides and down in the valley, conti ni are working in wheat-fields or vineyds, in orange, almond or olive groves. the hill-top, the castle of a nobleman rs above the chestnut trees.

One of Sicily's most ancient and inteesting towns, Taormina, occupies a narrow ledge between a precipice and the cks of a giant rock, on which, 850 feet ave the sea, are the ruins of a great Greek temple, and higher still a mediæval cstle. Through broken arches, one looks across the Ionian Sea to Etna, of whose smouldering fires the peasants speak in hushed voices, crossing themselves. Old men sit about, and children gambol around, while frequent occupants of the stone benches are Sicilian girls, playing their guitars and mandolins, while resting from labor or waiting for husband or lover to come up from the fields below. In February, the glossy-green leaves and white almond blossoms on the hillside are sometimes sprinkled with snow; then, the old men seeking refuge in the ruins multiply. But snow is infrequent; and the children seem afraid of it, and do not know how to play in it. However, Mr. Hilton, an American traveler and writer, surprised a party of boys in the ruins making a snow-man, which they called "Garibaldi;" when he told them that Sicily's deliverer once lived in America, and that there is a statue of him in Washington Park, New York, their interest was intense; they asked many questions about America, and said they should come, as soon as they were grown, to the land "where everybody had work and pay for it." Sicily, the fair and fertile, needs more railroads, more enterprise. Briefly, she needs the progressive spirit of Protestantism in her churches, her schools and homes.

Mozart's Note Book.

The Mozart Society of Berlin, has recently unearthed in London, the first note book of Mozart, written when that musical prodigy was four years old. The note book contains composition which startled the musical world with their maturity. He and his sister, then with their father visiting London, delighted the court of George III. with their performances, and Mozart composed a symphony to the Queen, the original MS. of which is in the British Museum. The little fellow had to be lifted to the music stool, yet played any music set before him and improvised on any given theme.

It is related that during one of these private recitals, while Mozart was in the midst of a composition he espied a favorite cat coming into the room. His hands dropped on the keys, he slid down from the bench and ran to pick up the cat and fondle her. It was as natural for him to play the organ and compose music as it is for any other child to "play horse" or sing "ring around a rosy." When he was composing his symphony dedicated to the Queen, he remarked to his sister, who was standing near: "Now, don't forget; remind me to give the French horns plenty to do."

THE SEARCH FOR THE FUGITIVE.

French soldiers are hunting for a spy and questioning the servants of the chateau.

I thought in autumn's harvest glow
To rest my head upon the sheaves:
But, lo! methinks the day was brief
And cloudy; flower, nor fruit, nor leaf
I bring, and yet accepted free
And blest, my Lord, I come to thee.

Social Life at San Juan.

Business and social life at San Juan begins early in the morning. By seven o'clock the shops are open, and a stirring of wide shutters in the upper stories of the houses shows that even the women are about. Hundreds of men are having their coffee in the cafes. Probably a band is playing somewhere. By ten o'clock this early activity has worn itself out. The sun has got well up into the sky, white and hot. It is time to seek the shade. Business languishes. About eleven shop shutters begin to go up, and soon the streets are as deserted as at midnight. This is breakfast hour, and until well afternoon not a shop or public building will be found open. About one or two, whether the siesta is long or short, people begin to reappear and shops reopen. In the evening is when the inhabitants in San Juan really live. These are the pleasant hours of the day. From the sea comes a breeze, cool and fresh, to whisper to the shade trees in the plazas.

Animals and Music.

It is said that almost all animals love music, and can be influenced by it. A New York dealer in animals, whose shop contains a strange medley of birds snakes, panthers and bears, quiets his "happy family" by flute-playing. He says that wild things prefer the flute and violin, and that he can make his ferocious black panther "mild as a lamb" with a few soft notes. "An' the brown bear dotes on the flute. It sets him a-goin in no time. He gets into all sorts of funny shapes the moment I begin, an' fairly gives way to fits o' rejoicin'." The monkeys, macaws and parrots screech and jabber louder than ever, in evidence of their pleasure. "It's the little animals that music sets crazy," he avers. "My mice and white rats dance and caper when I play. There are lots an' lots o' insects that act the same way. I've got a Florida tarantula here in a bottle that kicks and squirms when I play to him. Common house spiders do the same way. Catch one an' put him in a bottle, an' try it for yourself."

Chicks in the Eagle's Nest.

A woman living near Bar Harbor had an odd experience with a white-headed eagle not long ago. One after another a brood of chickens was disappearing, and she laid it to the charge of a fox or hawk until she caught an eagle in the kidnapping act. Her husband and herself sought for the eagle's nest and found it in the top of a tall pine-tree, and in the nest were two eggs, which they removed, substituting a pair of hen's eggs. In due time the chicks were hatched: and Mother Eagle, although she regarded them curiously, made no attempt to eat them, and seemed to fully accept them as her babies. The owners of the eggs, however, carried them off, knowing that when flying time came, Madam Eagle would have a large contract in bringing her strange brood up to the standard of her ideas on flying.

THE BARREL OF CIDER.

A Ballad of the Farm.

THEY gathered the golden apples
In the pleasant days of the fall,
The boys and the baby sister,
The father and mother and all.
They gathered the Baldwins and russets
And sorted them wisely and well,
For some they would keep through the winter,
And some they were storing to sell.

A part of the fruit—not grafted—
That grew by the side of the wall
Had fallen and lay unnoticed
Till the very last of it all.
"And these," said the careful mother,
"Will help in a time of need;
The pigs and the cattle will eat them,
Shall we gather them in for 'feed'?"

Then up spake the thoughtless father,
"We'll pile them all into a heap
And make us a barrel of cider
And put in the cellar to keep!"
The earnest protest of the mother
Was treated as "only a whim,"
And the boys, at the thought of the cider,
Worked on with an added vim.

* * * * *

The years sped away in that homestead,
The boys into manhood had grown,
But the bloom of their boyhood had faded,
The joy of their home-life had flown.
The serpent—that once entered Eden
And tempted our parents to sin,
Again through the door of the "apple,"
Had learned of a way to come in.

Oh, bitter the grief of that father
As he thinks of the cider, so sweet,
And the mother, whose heart has been broken,
Who lies in the grave at his feet.
No wonder he shudders in horror
At the barrel of cider, in fall,
And murmurs, "The trail of the serpent
Is over it—over it all."

In many and many an Eden
The serpent is coiling to-day,
And seeking, in silence and darkness,
The boys of the home to betray.
Be watchful and faithful, oh, mother!
Oh, father! act wisely thy part,
Lest the serpent, with poison so deadly,
Shall fasten its fangs on thy heart.

HELPFUL STORY-TELLING.

WAS there ever a child who would not sit and listen for hours and hours to the family story-teller? Who commands such rapt attention and who can exercise more power in the development of young characters—in making them grow sweet and strong—than the story-teller? Let the family story-teller take a leaf out of the kindergartener's book. Says Miss Nina C. Vanderwalker, of the Milwaukee State Normal School:

During autumn the work in our kindergarten aimed to illustrate progressively the principle of co-operation, by showing how everybody helped in getting ready for winter. This involved real and imaginary visits to the garden, the farm, the coal-yard, and the store. "Mother Nature as a helper" was next considered, and this called for a study of natural products,—grains, fruits, and vegetables. This led naturally to the Thanksgiving festival, and the story of the first Thanksgiving was told in considerable detail. Winter phenomena and activities followed with the preparation for the winter holidays, Christmas and New Year. Stories of life in cold countries occupied the month of January, the simplicity of Eskimo life, like that of the Pilgrims, helping the children to understand and appreciate our more complex civilization. This led to the story of Washington and others who helped give us our beautiful country.

Stories of co-operation in nature awaken in the child the desire to be helpful, to do his part. And just as evidences of the love of a friend whom we have not seen make us know what manner of man he is, so appreciation of beauty and goodness in nature, of God working through history to make people happier and kindlier, reveals continually the loveliness of Him whom eye hath not seen. It is beautiful to think of it—this unseen Friend, making Himself known to us only through blessings; through the sunlight, through rain that waters the earth, through the snow which enwraps the fields that they may be more fruitful after slumber: and in the ways of bees and birds and insects who are helpful to man and to each other.

Hsi-lo and the "Golden Lilies."

A Story of Girl Life in the Empire of China.

By REV. FREDERICK BROWN,
Missionary in Tientsin.

"WHY are you looking so sad?" was the question asked a teacher as he went to look after his boys one day. "Why, do you know a great sorrow has come to us; a daughter has been born, and as we already have two girls, the fung swai (good luck) is against us."

THE CHINESE GOD OF WAR.

The teacher was a heathen, and though intelligent as men of his class are, was a believer in luck. Thus he talked of the birth of his third daughter. He reasoned that she would not be able to carry on the worship of her ancestors as a boy could have done, neither would she be of much use; therefore, why should he be burdened with her support for so many years? He little knew what joy the advent of a daughter brings into the homes of thousands in Western lands. In China, a father sometimes counts his wealth by the number of sons he has, and his poverty by the number of daughters.

And so the teacher went about his work the whole day, feeling sad, and his looks betraying his inner feeling.

"The fates have sent her, and I suppose she must stay," he said, as he went on with his teaching in a heathen school.

Hsi-lo's Childhood.

Days and weeks passed, and the little stranger began to entwine herself around her parents' heart. She was a very bright and joyful child, and this led them to call her Hsi-lo (Joy), and they treated her much better than girls are treated as a rule. At the age of four, her mother decided to bind the feet of little Hsi-lo, and she was informed that it would be necessary to do so, that there might be no trouble in securing a husband for her, in days to come. Though Hsi-lo objected that "it would hurt," her pleadings were in vain, and the day was fixed for the binding. This is an old custom in China. It is surprising that the young men are so much in favor of the custom. A young man, who afterward became a Christian, said: "In my youthful days I was a devoted admirer of small feet, and often thought to myself if I could only possess a pair of those 'golden lilies' for a wife, earth would have given me her greatest treasure, and my heart's sincere desire would have been gratified. But mature years and a more practical knowledge of life's realities have entirely overthrown this 'small foot' dogma, and I have decided that I will devote my energies towards its extinction. This radical subversion of my worship of small feet has been the result of my sojourn among enlightened and educated people, and the illuminating truths of Christianity."

Binding the Little Feet.

In due time, Hsi-lo had to yield to this barbarous custom, and her mother decided that she should have as small feet as any girl in the village. Though her father was a teacher, he was not well off, and was obliged to do work on his six acres of land. He often thought to himself that if he only had a son he might have turned over this part of the work to him. Now, however, he would have to make the best he could of his three daughters. Two of them had feet about three inches long, which made them incapable of doing farm-work, unless they knelt down to do it, as some girls in the village did. His hopes of relief failed, because it had been decided that little Hsi-lo should also have her feet compressed.

Needles, thread and bandages were ready on the appointed day, and a friend came in to assist in the important function and work began. Poor little girl! She cried bitterly as her feet were being twisted, squeezed, and bound. What a terrible amount of suffering for an innocent child, to have her dainty feet crushed and bound in such a manner. First the four outer toes are gradually pressed under the big toe: when they are entirely crushed, the instep is broken and the foot is from two to four inches in length. This is the "golden lily foot."

In cases of matchmaking the size of the young lady's feet is the first question asked. If she has feet three or three and one-half inches in length she is declared a belle, though she may be otherwise ugly.

Little did one of the Emperor's wives in the Tang dynasty think of the sorrow the custom would bring to millions of girls, when she desired to please the Emperor or rather outshine her compeers in the art of pleasing. At a feast she appeared in her new dancing apparel, having her feet bound to represent the crescent of a new moon. She devised a new kind of dance, by tottering hither and thither, which was said to be very graceful. This was the beginning of a horrid and most barbarous custom.

Child-Torture.

Little Hsi-lo had her feet thus bound, and each day the bandages were loosed and tied tighter than before. As she retired at night she would tie a piece of string around her limbs to hinder the blood from flowing to her feet, and thus lessen the pain, or she would dangle her feet over the side of the bed to try and get a little sleep and rest. Often she lay through the weary hours, sorrowing and sighing, almost coveting death before she had really entered on life.

The time soon came when Hsi-lo was old enough to be betrothed. The size of her feet was noted, and a few of her accomplishments—such as washing, sewing, and cooking—were mentioned to the professional middle-woman whose business it is to make matches, and bring together those whom she thinks will be congenial companions through life. In a few days, the middle-woman returned, stating that a well-to-do farmer not far away was in search of a wife for his son, and that he would be pleased to have Hsi-lo for a daughter-in-law, though he had never seen her. What the middle-woman had said was sufficient: the son had no choice in the matter; he must dutifully abide by the choice of his parents. This was enough for both parties; the papers were duly made and passed between the parents on both sides, and thus the fate of Hsi-lo was sealed. She was from that time betrothed to a youth she had never seen. She bore the news with the greatest coolness, having while young learned the lesson that her best plan was "not to reason why," but to obey. When the wedding-day arrived, all the clothes and furniture had been gathered and deposited in the home of the bridegroom. A band of music was engaged to precede the bride's chair, as she left her old home to accompany her husband to the rooms prepared for her reception in his father's house.

Hsi-lo's Wedding.

As the procession, consisting of a band of music and two sedan chairs—the first occupied by the bride-groom and the second by the groom—neared the future home of Hsi-lo, a string of fire-crackers was lighted and thrown up in the air for "good-luck." The door of the house was reached—it was not difficult to find the right one, as the door was literally covered with red placards bearing the inscription, "Fu-Fu" (happiness). The bride was lifted into the front room and placed on the "kang" (brick couch), where she remained that she might be critically seen by the endless string of visitors which crowd in on such occasions. Many and numerous are the remarks passed, and criticisms offered, concerning the bride. "She has a big face." "Do you notice her nose is a little crooked?" "She looks as though she will be able to cook," are samples of the chatter.

Hsi-lo is now face-to-face with her mother-in-law, and much depends on the temper and spirit of this relative in China. Obedience is essential on the part of Hsi-lo if she would keep on good terms with the old lady. Fortunately this mother-in-law was better than many, and she had a vein of kindness which she often exhibited to those round about her. Life of a bearable kind was in store for the bride. Seldom did she get rid of the pain consequent on the compressed blood vessels throbbing in her feet; and often did she cry out for relief, but none came. Her husband was rather proud of his wife, and made more of a companion of her than most Chinese husbands do. So time passed, and Hsi-lo settled down to her duties as cheerfully as possible.

A CHINESE TRAVELING CART.

Ten years ago not a railroad or telegraph existed in China to get the news from one end of the land to the other. When the rebellion broke out in the northern provinces, excepting the people in the immediate vicinity, very little was heard about it, and therefore they were not prepared to flee before the rebels, who usually planned raids to take place during the night, when villagers were asleep.

"Hark! What is that?" cried Hsi-lo, as one night she heard guns being fired, and people screaming outside.

A Thrilling Experience.

Soon the rebels broke in the door, but not before the inmates of the house had fled; for they knew that no mercy was to be expected at the hands of a rebel mob. In the darkness of the night the people from the different homes got scattered and mixed up. Many were shot down by their pursuers as they ran away. Wh the men fled, the women and girls tried find shelter by hiding themselves behi houses and under hedges. Poor cr tures, they were unable to run on accou of their small feet, and many could no more than creep. They thus beca an easy prey to the rebels.

Hsi-lo, during this time, had been h ing under a thick thorn hedge not f from her home. Early in the raid s felt too weak and too much a cripple run far; so she had sought shelter the and escaped the rebels' notice for so time. Early next day she was detect and dragged out by one of the leaders the rebel band. With many other wom and girls she was placed, or rather thro into one of the many carts which h been provided to carry away the pris ers and spoils. She had had many tri in her young life, but this was the wo of all.

Some twenty women and girls were th ruthlessly torn from their homes and c ried to the rebel camp, sixteen miles aw Their condition can be better imagin than described. Day by day they work for their captors. Their future seem dark indeed; it might be slavery for yea or till death ended their sufferings. the case of some, death soon releas them; but Hsi-lo, being strong and you was able to endure the treatment.

The Rescue.

A few weeks after the outbreak, t central government sent a large body soldiers to the rescue. One morning th seemed to be unusual activity in the re camp; the men were all packing up though to leave. Word had arrived t the imperial troops were near, and wh the rebels were determined to stand th ground, they knew their chances of su cess were very slender. The prison were allowed to go about their work usual. Evening arrived, and they w preparing to retire, when a great comm tion took place. The men ran to th guns, and brisk firing commenced; b lets flew hither and thither, and the po frightened women crouched behind a thing that would protect them. The sh seemed to come nearer and nearer; o or two of the women were hit by st shots, and Hsi-lo was terribly frighten At last the rebels scattered in all dir tions, and the poor women hobbled places of safety. Many rebels made go their escape over the walls, but this w impossible for the women with "gold lily feet": they must wait and take th chances.

Despair seemed to have taken poss sion of them, when a great shout went from hundreds of men, and over the w leaped the imperial troops to settle a rebels that might have stayed behind.

Restored to her Home.

The women hid themselves in a corn of a mud hut. There they remained night unmolested, though they slept l little. When morning dawned they w exhausted. One of the imperial office passing by, saw them crouched in t corner of the hut, and supposed th must be dead. To his great surprise, noticed one of them move. He called them to come out, and slowly they did They informed him that they belonged a certain village, Li-chia-chuang, and h been stolen. He being a kindly m treated them well, and had some fo brought to them from the camp. Hsi and others were conveyed in carts to th former home. But how changed! O about half of the former inhabita could be found. Among the missing w Hsi-lo's mother-in-law, but her own h band had escaped injury.

Life took another aspect, now that h band and wife had been so wonderfu preserved and brought together aga Each tried to please the other more th before. They early decided to vi Hsi-lo's parents. They procured a ca and having packed their bundles insi the passengers mounted and all was rea The travelers had a journey of 150 li (fi miles), before them.

To those who have never seen a Peki cart and a Chinese road, the difficulti of such a journey will not be very evide But it is needful to take plenty of pillo or bundles, as the ruts are deep, and ha knocks are numerous. The inns alo the way lack the elements of cleanlin and comfort, and the bedding must be c ried, and may be used to pack the cart.

Hsi-lo and her husband arrived at th destination, in due course, and great was the joy of daughter and mother to see each other again. The old mother cried as she listened to the story told by Hsi-lo. During the time they had been absent from each other, great changes had taken place in the lives of the parents. The place to which they had moved was only a short distance from a mission out-station and their next door neighbor was a zealous Christian woman, so it was not strange that they had heard much about Yesu (Jesus), from this woman. True, they had never heard of him before, but only as the God worshiped by foreigners. Their neighbor had told them that Jesus is the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. The father had looked up the great dictionary of China, Kang-hi-tzi-tien, and found it stated there that "Yesu is the Western Saviour of men." What they liked most was that the Bible, which is the believer's guide-book, gave such light as Hsi-lo's father had sought for years. Now he had searched his Bible and all his queries had been answered and all his difficulties had been cleared away. He had been a careful student of the Confucian analects; the Buddhist religion he had somewhat defied, as suited to the lower class of society only. Taoism was out of the question. He knew pretty well what each religion taught. Each was silent on the questions that had greatly troubled his mind.

Now, however, relief had come and from a very unexpected quarter—a woman had been the means of giving light in his darkness. It is not surprising then that he was full of talk about the virtues of the Jesus religion," and when Hsi-lo came she heard much about it.

So far religious matters had not troubled Hsi-lo much. She had gone regularly to the temple on the days set apart for worship and had lighted a stick of incense which she prostrated herself before the idol. This finished, she had thought little about them. Now, however, she had caught some of the contagion of her father's spirit of inquiry and listened to her with eager desire. "Could this Jesus save her from her sins?" "Was it possible that he could help her to bear the load of life?" Yes! she would believe it and from this day trust him.

At the home of Hsi-lo's father, they were glad, one day, to get a visit from a lady missionary who was itinerating in the district. Their next door neighbor told her of the interest evinced by the party in Christianity. Hsi-lo had never yet seen a foreign lady, and, in fact, had no particular desire to see one, after the dreadful tales she had been told as their being able to kidnap people, taking their eyes out to make medicine. Now she was face to face with one of the dreadful creatures, and what would be the result?

The missionary, being introduced by her friend, began by asking names, ages, and every imaginable question which would be thought very improper in Western lands, but which are the correct thing in China. Hsi-lo and her husband told a little of the experiences they had gone through with the rebels, and especially the part where the "golden lily feet" had nearly been the means of Hsi-lo losing her life.

Other visits were made during the next few days, and Hsi-lo began to like their visitor; she was ready to believe the message the stranger had brought to them. In due course, her husband returned to his farm, and left her to stay with her mother a few weeks longer. Each time the missionary came, Hsi-lo paid great attention to her teaching, and began to learn a few verses of Scripture, which her father, seeing she was so willing, was delighted to teach her. Every available moment was now given to study, and Hsi-lo was surprised as she observed the progress she was making. After due preparation, Hsi-lo, her father, and mother, were baptised and admitted as members into the Methodist church.

Shortly after this, Hsi-lo's feet began to give her much trouble. The missionary friend was consulted, and she recommended Hsi-lo to visit the mission hospital and there seek relief. Her husband was sent for and consulted. He readily consented, and, in due time, Hsi-lo was taken to the Isabella Fisher Hospital, where she received every attention and soon made rapid progress toward recovery. There her feet were unbound, and there she learned much more of the Gospel of Jesus, which she now loved so well.

Going back to her home, she determined to devote the remainder of her life, as far as possible, to the preaching and teaching of the Gospel to her friends and neighbors, and to the emancipation of the "golden lily feet" of the poor unenlightened women of China.

ARMY AND GOSPEL NOTES.

A NEW ward was opened one day at Leiter Hospital, Chickamauga, and filled with sixty-six invalid soldiers fresh from the camp. Going through this ward and introducing himself to each soldier, the Y. M. C. A. Secretary came in contact with a sick boy from a Pennsylvania regiment. Stopping to talk to him, he found the boy ready for the Gospel message. The boy said he had come from a Christian home and had a brother in the missionary field, but that he was a bad boy and had given his family much trouble. After talking with him a while he said to the Secretary: "Do you mean to say I can be saved here and now?" The Secretary assured him of it, and opened to him the simple way to be saved. Before the Secretary left, the boy joined him in prayer, praying for himself, and when he was leaving, he said: "Now, remember, chaplain, I have accepted Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour, and in doing so you tell me I am saved." He exacted a promise from the Secretary that he would return during the evening. Going back, the boy greeted him cheerfully and said: "I am a very sick boy, but remember, whatever comes, I tell you now that I have accepted Jesus Christ and am trusting him as my Saviour." The next morning as the chaplain made his rounds the cot was empty—the soldier boy had "entered into rest."

AT Montauk Point one of the Y. M. C. A. secretaries, passing by a tent, saw a soldier reading the Bible. He said to him: "I am glad to see you reading God's word." The soldier replied: "I was not in the habit of doing this until I came in contact with you Association men. I found great comfort from it when in the battle before Santiago, and I mean to lead a different life.

ONE of the soldier boys in the trenches before Sibony, having received a Testament just before sailing, and having been in attendance on the Gospel meetings in the Florida camp, when his comrades were falling and lying dead about him, took out his Testament water-stained as it was, and wrote on the fly leaf: "God has so far preserved me, and I mean from this time forward to serve him."

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Pile of Letters—Following Christ Hand in Hand—Long Engagements—Childish Expletives.

OUR DAILY BREAD.

MAN doth not live by bread alone,
Yet the dear Christ, this word who said,
In whose pure eyes God's great love shone,
Bade us to pray for daily bread.

And what do we, who ask it, want,
When lowly kneeling, this we say,
"Lord, though our strength be spent and scant,
Give us our daily bread this day."

"Not bread to last the weary march
Of toilsome weeks, or months, or years;
The prayer upbuilds its rainbow arch
Above our trials and our tears."

We crave but loaf and cup to last
The one day's need, the one day's task;
And by the memory of our past
We may expect the gift we ask.

And not alone for mortal bread
We pray, since thy dear children, Lord,
Are on the road by angels led,
And oft they hear the living word.

And in the darkness oft they see
Thy stars come out to light their way,
And never are they far from thee,
Jehovah God! their strength and stay.

SUCH a pile of letters to-day, I hardly know which to begin with. Naturally, says Serephina, peeping over my shoulder, take your letters in the order of their dates. That does seem fair, on the surface, but Serephina, who is just a girl, with a girl's scorn of sentiment, and a girl's practical way of going about things, does not know everything. I tell you, friends, when you want to find sentiment in these days you must look for it among the older people. Mother keading her bread in the kitchen: father, pottering about the barn and the shed; old Uncle Luther driving round the country with the stage and carrying the mail; middle-aged Aunt Emily keeping her little bundle of yellow love-letters tied with a white ribbon, down at the very bottom of her camphor-wood chest; all these are much more tenderly sentimental than are Fred and Polly, young people of the period. There is materialism in the air and our boys and girls feel it. Yet, because I am in sympathy with all true lovers, young and old, and because I am vexed that one correspondent fancies me tired of discussing love problems, I'll throw Serephina's counsel to the winds and begin with love-letters first, this week. Next week we'll try another way.

TWO friends walked hand in hand, loving one another dearly, following Christ steadfastly, hoping for a long life of joy and service in one another's company. Their great comfort was in taking literally those words of the Master, "And all things which ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Suddenly God sent to them his Angel of Separation, whom men call death. One friend was caught up to the long, bright heavenly life, the other remained here, lonely and desolate, and alas! with faith shaken. Dear friend, you could bear it, if God had made it your friend's duty to go to China or Japan, and stay there for ten years. Try to realize that heaven is nearer than a country on the other side of the globe. Feel that your loved one is as much yours in the Father's house as when lingering here. Pray every day, with lips moving, at stated times, and in a stated place. If you have not much faith, use the little you have. God will give you rest and joy.

QUITE different is the problem of a young woman, who having been engaged to an honest and faithful lover ten years, now fears she has outgrown him and thinks she must break her engagement, but recoils from doing so lest she break a good man's heart. She should carefully consider the situation and be very sure that she is doing right before she takes the step she contemplates, for though she will probably not break her lover's heart, she will certainly shake his belief in the constancy of woman. Long engagements are usually unfortunate, and should be avoided. The only thing to be done in the present complication is to be absolutely candid, to be sure that no lower motive influences you, that you are not shrinking merely from small means, or a life of toil, that you are quite unselfish. Remember, the greatest wrong you can possibly do the man, is to marry him if you do not love him, and it takes a pretty large capital of love to start a marriage partnership properly; love on both sides, too; love on one side is not enough.

MOTHERS should take precautions against letting their little boys associate with those who are in the habit of using objectionable language. A mother should keep her sons under her own eye, and should know their playmates and friends. While a penalty ought to follow the breaking of the law of correct speech, yet, at least in the household, example goes a great way, and a child will be reluctant to grieve a loving mother. Try not to lose the child's confidence. He is pretty safe so long as he tells mother everything. He perhaps thinks it manly to use expressions which the boys around him utter so glibly. Show him gently that he is mistaken, and if he feels that he must have some expletive to use when he is very much in earnest, advise him to adopt one for himself. Hobson, or Dewey, would do very well just now for the average small boy.

A DEAR invalid, shut in by illness from taking part in the active church work in which she has always found her avocation, is a little downcast at the prospect of a long winter of confinement to the house. She is a lover of flowers, of children, and of good books, so that time may not hang quite so heavily on her hands as she fears, and perhaps she will find that there are ways of helping others, which the dear Lord will show her. For you see, he does not mean her to be a will-of-the-wisp; he is going to give her this winter a little niche where all the dull, long winter her steady candle may shine for Jesus. Those who meet her and see her triumph over pain and weakness, her cheery smile, her quiet goodness, will say, "She is one of God's dear children." Some of us are called to be soldiers, and some of us are called to be saints.

I STOPPED at a house to rest the other day. The people were strangers, but so soon as I had been courteously invited within their doors I felt at home, for a dear elderly lady with a peaceful face was sitting beside the fire reading her Bible. When we read our daily portion, do we ever think what a great company of Christians are doing the same thing, feeding on the same truths, gaining strength and comfort from the same good word of life? And how that company is increasing! Think of the Christians in China, in Corea, in Japan, in India, in the islands of the Pacific. Wherever a mission church is built, abroad or at home, wherever the Gospel is preached, wherever the Bible goes, there are our brothers and our sisters. Day by day

Have You Asthma in Any Form?

The New African Kola Plant is Nature's botanic cure for Asthma. Mr. A. C. Lewis, editor of the Farmer's Magazine, writes that it cured him when he could not lie down at night for fear of choking. Rev. J. F. Coombs of Martinsburg, West Va., testifies to his entire cure after thirty years' suffering and many others give similar testimony. Its cures are really wonderful. If you suffer we advise you to send to the Kola Importing Co., 104 Broadway, New York, who will send you a Large Case by mail free to prove its power. It costs you nothing, and you should surely try it.

"A Watered Garden."

By Pastor Thomas Spurgeon

DURING the late hot and protracted summer, there were two gardens in a suburb of London which presented a very striking contrast. There was only a low narrow wall between them, but to all appearances they might have been in different zones. One of these was brown and blighted, and the other remained reasonably green, despite the drought. The one was neglected altogether, the other diligently watered and tended. These gardens are an allegory, the interpretation of which is sufficiently plain. Two may be in one church, and under the same ministry; the one may be fresh and green, the other dry and withered. Two may be one family, yet be poles asunder in the matter of spiritual attainment. Two may have started with equal advantages and opportunities, and attain, Oh, such different results! Even Eden needed watchfulness and keeping. Hearts regenerated need constant care, or they will soon degenerate, like Gordon's garden at Khartoum.

Let us briefly consider some characteristics of "a watered garden":

1. It is verdant. The waterless plot is like the desert. What leaves remain in it are dust covered, or black with blight. The trees have been burned up by the sun, or injured by insect life. But the watered garden is green from end to end, and from side to side. What a wonderful variety of that eye-refreshing hue is in so small a space! It is a veritable oasis. The water did it. The sparkling drops bring life. The green garment of spring is worn well, for it has been carefully tended.

The soul that is zealously and jealously watered presents a fresh appearance, too. It has the dew of its youth. It cannot grow old, if it is refreshed with living water. In it the graces are ever-springing. Nothing droops and dies. There is lasting spring abides. Oh, for this fulness! Come, gracious Spirit, bathe my soul in thy life-renewing influences. Then my leaf also may not wither!

2. A watered garden is luxuriant. Over against all the herbage and foliage are scanty and scraggy, stinted and stunted. You can hardly recognize some of the plants. As to things, they have done their best; they have not had a fair chance. At the side of water they would bud again. See where are patches of dry soil. Note the empty spaces on the walls where the flowers should have been. But it is very different on this side. There is a profusion of growth. The creepers have not been content with covering the wall—they have gone over it. The plants which were set far enough apart when they began growing have spread until the soil is not anywhere to be seen. Everything has grown as though it delighted to fill the place with foliage. I verily believe they would have spread to the gravel walks, if it had been possible.

Jesus came not only that we might have life, but that we might have it more abundantly. He loves to see us not only living, but lively. "This poor dying rate" is not his ordaining. Oh, no! He would have our hearts to be as watered gardens, not as sandy wastes. Awake, my soul, and claim thy privileges! Invoke the powers of blessing; claim the promise of our vineyard. "I, the Lord, do keep it; I will water it every moment."

3. Again, the garden that has been watered is brilliant. Green is a restful color, but it is apt to become monotonous. Even neglected space is not even green. There are gems and jewels on every hand. The garden is gay with blooms that shine like stars in the firmament. What if some of them are homely and old-fashioned; therein, methinks, their special charm lies. If the heart is carefully tended and divinely refreshed, it brings forth flowers and fruits. It is not content with common morality and ordinary graces. It does not parade its excellences, but they will appear. This is how the Spirit-watered garden grows. Beyond and above the strict integrity and hearty charity, which every Christian should exhibit, there spring on every hand the bright-hued flowers of tender grace, and happy thought, and "sweet reasonableness," and consuming zeal, and loving self-denial, and joyful hope. The soul's garden, watered by the river of God, is bright with goodly flowers. Lord, make my heart thus brilliant!

4. May we not add that such a garden is fragrant? Some flowers, I know, are scentless, and others are by no means sweet to smell. Well, if every flower on this side of the wall is not of the sweetest, the garden is much more odoriferous than the dust heap next door. Especially after a shower, or even when the water-can and sprinkler have done their work, it has the smell of a field, which the Lord has blessed. Is it not delightful? Every flowering plant waves its censer. The air is redolent. Every beauteous bell tolls its perfume out upon the passing breeze.

The well-kept heart is full of fragrance, too. Love exhales from every part of it—love to Jesus, love to all the things of God, love to the saints, and love to sinners. The aroma spreads far and wide. If the walls were twice as high, it would scale them. When the Spirit moves upon us, then the fragrance leaps the narrow bounds. "Awake, O north wind; and come thou south wind: blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out."

5. How pleasant is the fertile plot of ground! No joy is to be gotten from the sterile place, but this green and flowering area is a garden of delights, a source of innocent enjoyment. Thus may we rejoice as we note the progress of our spiritual life, and God himself takes pleasure in his people. He rests in his love. He rejoices over us with singing. Jesus reaps both pleasure and profit from the saints, who thrive and flourish. The Spirit, too, finds joy in marking the glad results of his gracious influences. Would God that all of us were thus of use to heaven. "Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits."

6. This, also, have I to say of the watered garden—it is resonant. Flowers and plants are voiceless, but the birds are vocal, and the creeper-clad walls echo their every note. The birds soon find out the watered garden. There are none next door. What, though some of these feathered friends are only sparrows, their chirrup is better than silence, and every now and then a bird, with brighter plumage or sweeter song, appears.

O, heart of mine, thou wouldst not be so songless if the streams of divine grace flowed oftener into thee! Get living water, and thou shalt soon have streams of melody as well! The birds of hope and peace and joy will fill the air with song, as the flowers fill it with scent, if the dew does but fall regularly, and the early and latter rains descend. "The time of the singing of birds is come" when the heart is green with grace. Lord Jesus, be to us a husbandman. We will suppose thee to be the gardener. All is right with the heart that Jesus tends.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

THE BOY WHO WENT WEST.

A NUMBER of years ago, before any railway came into Chicago, they used to bring in the grain from the Western prairies in wagons for hundreds of miles, so as to have it shipped off by the lakes. There was a father who had a large farm out there, and who used to preach the Gospel as well as to attend to his farm. One day, when church business engaged him, he sent his son to Chicago with grain. He waited and waited for his boy to return, but he did not come home. At last he could wait no longer, so he saddled his horse and rode to the place where his son had sold the grain. He found that he had been there and got the money for his grain; then he began to fear that his boy had been murdered and robbed. At last, with the aid of a detective, they tracked him to a gambling den, where they found that he had gambled away the whole of his money. He had fallen among thieves, and like the man who was going to Jericho, they stripped him, and then they cared no more about him. What could he do? He was ashamed to go home to meet his father, and he fled. The father knew what it all meant. He knew the boy thought he would be very angry with him. He was grieved to think that his boy should have so little confidence in him. That is just exactly like the sinner. He thinks because he has sinned, God will have nothing to do with him. But what did the father do? Did he say, "Let the boy go?" No; he went from town to town, from city to city. He would get the ministers to let him preach, and at the close he would tell his story. "I have got a boy who is a wanderer on the face of the earth somewhere." He would describe his boy and say: "If you ever hear of him or see him, will you not write to me?" At last he found that he had gone to California, thousands of miles away. Did that father say, "Let him go?" No; off he went to the Pacific coast, seeking the boy. He went to San Francisco, and advertised in the newspapers that he would preach at such a church on such a day. When he had preached he told his story, in hopes that the boy might have seen the advertisement and come to the church. When he had done, away under the gallery, there was a young man who waited until the audience had gone out; then he came toward the pulpit. The father looked and saw it was his own boy, and he ran to him, and pressed him to his bosom. The boy wanted to confess, but not a word would the father hear. He forgave him freely, and took him home once more.

I tell you, Christ will welcome you this minute if you will come. Say, "I will arise and go to my Father." May God incline you to take this step. There is not one whom Jesus has not sought far longer than that father. There has not been a day since you left him but he has followed you.

The Emperor and the Watch.

. . ALEXANDER II., on the occasion of his emancipation of the serfs of Russia, received from an admirer belonging to the royal house of Prussia a beautiful watch of exceedingly delicate workmanship, which he prized very highly. One day the watch began to act strangely, losing and gaining time, and the Emperor, anxious to have it put in order, sent it to the leading watchmaker in St. Petersburg. After having it a few days in his possession, the watchmaker returned it to the Emperor, expressing his deep regrets that he was utterly unable to repair the watch, or even to trace the cause of the trouble. Then the Emperor sent the watch to Moscow to the watchmaker who for many years had enjoyed the patronage of the imperial family. He also found it impossible to remedy the trouble. Then the watch was sent to Paris. Surely there a watchmaker could be found equal to the emergency. It was sent to the Russian Ambassador, and he was instructed to have the matter attended to as speedily as possible, and the watch returned without unnecessary delay. After a while the watch came back, in the same condition in which it was sent. The most diligent search failed to find a single watchmaker in all Paris who could repair the watch.

Hardly knowing what more to do, the Emperor consulted with his prime minister about the matter, who said: "Why not send it to Berlin to the man who made the watch, for surely he who made it will be able to repair it." "Good idea," said the Emperor, and the watch was sent to Berlin to the man who made it; and in due time it was returned to St. Petersburg in perfect condition.

How many people there are in this world who have been injured by sin! They have fallen victims to the tempter's snare, to the intoxicating cup, to vice of various kinds, to anger or to dishonesty, and when they discover that the poison is in their hearts, they deplore their undoing and resort to good resolutions, to change of surroundings, or to the signing of pledges. Failing in their efforts, they get their friends to advise them; they go to ministers of the Gospel and expect there to get help; some go to the priest with their confessions, in hope of restoration, but all to no purpose. These never can righten the heart that once has been stung by Satan's dart. Only He who made it can renew it, and they who seek elsewhere must seek in vain. The only place where help can be found is at the throne of grace and mercy, and only He who is the Maker of us all can again tune the heart aright after once it has gone astray.

Shield the Flame.

. . GOTTHOLD, wishing to seal a letter, called for a lighted candle. The maid obeyed his orders, but proceeding too hastily, the flame, which had not yet gathered sufficient strength, went out. Here, said Gotthold, we have that which may well remind us of the gentleness and moderation to be observed in our comportment towards weak and erring brethren. Had this candle, when first lighted, been carried slowly, and shaded by the hand from the air, it would not have been extinguished, but would soon have burned with vigor. In like manner, many a weak brother might be set right, if we only came to his help in the right way, and with kindly advice. It is not by violent strokes that you reduce the dislocated limb. Christ himself does not quench the smoking flax, but blows upon it with the gentle breath of the blessed words that proceed out of his mouth (Luke 4:22); and this was the reason why disconsolate sinners flocked around, and pressed upon him, to hear what he said (Luke 5:1; 15:1).

FOR YOU..

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common sense way, that is by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of the stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

THE STORY OF CONSUMPTION

Dr. Hunters Lecture Continued.

In 1882 Prof. Koch, of Berlin, found in the matter expectorated by consumptives the actual germ that causes consumption. I had declared in 1851 that it was produced in every instance by the germs described by Martin, Carmichael and Lanza, or by some similar local cause acting directly on the lung tissues. Prof. Koch proved beyond question or doubt that that theory was the only true one, and that consumption is always a local disease of the lungs.

Koch's great discovery was ignored by the profession, and made no more impression on practicing physicians than the casting of a pebble into a starvant pool—a tiny ripple momentarily marks the fall of the stone and then the same unchanged surface returns.

Not one of the medical colleges, medical journals, or organized medical associations let the public know of the far-reaching importance of Koch's discovery of the bacilli tuberculosis. Physicians went on treating consumption in the old way, keeping their patients in entire ignorance of the fact that the discovery proved their treatment not only wrong, but certain to prevent its cure.

But in 1891, nine years later, a complete revolution took place. The whole history of medicine fails to furnish another example of such complete abandonment of medical doctrines and principles, and such open public acknowledgment of errors of treatment.

This mighty upheaval was not produced by any profound medical coagitations, reports of medical societies, or newly discovered facts, but came in the twinkling of an eye by a mere newspaper announcement that Prof. Koch had discovered a wonderful lymph which would kill the germs and cure consumption, and that physicians could buy it and dispense it to their patients at so much an injection. Without any proof of the truth of the newspaper report—before the profession had received or given the lymph any trial, or knew anything of its composition, or of any authenticated case cured by it, they cast their doctrines aside, confessed that they knew them to be worthless, and adopted and proclaimed the Koch lymph nostrum as the one and only remedy for consumption. Leading physicians denounced the doctrine under which they practiced all their lives, and without shame admitted that they had never cured even incipient consumption under it.

The lymph was at last obtained and tried, and in less than a year abandoned by all physicians of character as a dangerous quackery which cured nobody, but endangerad the lives of every one subjected to it. So many deaths were caused by it that many governments interdicted its further use as a crime.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

The Christian's Duty Toward the Victims of Intoxicating Liquor. Rom. 14: 13, 21.

Advocates of total abstinence are frequently taunted with the assertion that the Bible does not authorize their crusade. It does not, it is true, enjoin abstinence from intoxicating liquor, but its principles are precisely those on which the temperance movement is based. It teaches that men are to bear one another's burdens; that they are to be careful not to put a stumbling-block in their brother's way; that they who are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and that great care is to be taken to be in enjoying privileges an occasion to cause be put in another's way. Such principles were laid down for each generation to apply to its own difficulties. Now it is obvious to the most superficial observer that the liquor evil is one of the most gigantic that this generation has to meet. It not only fills our jails, asylums and poor-houses, but it is continually snatching one and another from every social circle. There is no one who does not know some noble, generous, brilliant soul ruined to the earth by it. What, then, is our duty in the circumstances? If we apply Bible principles we shall seek to save our weak brother? We may talk to him and encourage him to be moderate, but we shall fail, because he has tried to be moderate and is unable. We may plead with him to abstain altogether, but he is sensitive; he cannot bear the stigma that would attach to him if none but drunkards abstained. It would be a confession of weakness that he could not bear to take, if he alone refused the intoxicating cup. But when we go to him with an example to enforce our words, then we have power. If we put our hand on his shoulder and say, "come with us; do as we do and you are safe;" and for his sake give up what little pleasure the indulgence of it have brought us, we are in that particular fulfilling our Lord's commands.

CUMBERING THE GROUND.

The Responsibility and Danger of Christians Whose Lives are Barren. Luke 13: 6-9.

One of the most marked changes which distinguished Christianity from Judaism was its positiveness. "Thou shalt not," no longer sufficed for a rule of life. It was not enough that the follower of Christ keep himself from evil; he must do good. This fact comes out clearly in the parable. The fig tree might have beautiful leaves and might be an ornament to the vineyard, but if it failed to bear figs, it was a failure. It was a nuisance, because it occupied room which must be filled by a tree that would bear fruit. That was the reason that the owner of the vineyard gave for its removal. There was no reason for Christ to explain the parable; its meaning was obvious. Primarily, it referred to the Jewish nation; but had an application for the individual Christian. Patient and long-suffering as God is, he will not tolerate unfruitfulness. Christ taught this plainly in his parable of the vine and the branches. The branch that bore no fruit would, like the barren tree be cut away. This is a solemn warning. The Christian must be of some use in the world, otherwise he must make way for some one who will work. The leader of a family, the head of a factory, the centre of a social circle, must bear fruit. In some way those about him must be the better for his being a Christian. He must commend his religion to those with whom he comes in contact, otherwise he is not fulfilling his mission. He cumbers the ground. The opportunities put within his reach must be used, otherwise they will pass to some one else. Even if he cannot win a soul for Christ, which is a large supposition, considering how ready the Holy Spirit is to bless such efforts; he cannot bring forth that list of fruits that the apostle recites (Gal. 5: 22, 23). The world has thus far been evangelized in each generation by the fruits of the labors of the preceding generation; it rests with us what the next generation shall be.

"OUR TEACHER."

THAT is what her public school class and her Sunday School class proudly called her behind her back; and just "teacher" to her face. She was not out of her teens—a slim little girl in a rusty brown dress—yet no great lady of the town accomplished more good than Esther Middlebrooks.

If you went out to walk with her, you were astonished to find how many sturdy lovers she had among newsboys and how many fast friends among shop and factory girls. Children who had never thought of it before, joined the Sunday School on the hope of getting into Esther's class. The mission superintendent had a weakness for turning unruly boys and sullen, stupid girls over to her; and Esther welcomed all. Many people wondered what was the secret of her success in Sunday School work.

"I should think," said some, "that after teaching all the week she would want to rest Sunday, and I think she ought."

The superintendent said, "she loves the work and the children. It does not tire her, and to have to stay away from Sunday School would be a punishment to her."

To some dear and close friends, Esther explained: "You see, I have no money to give for Jesus; and I am not wise or great and cannot offer intellectual gifts. I can't talk in meeting, or sing in the choir, or write for Jesus. But, thank God! I can love the children, and bring them to Him."

She did not, in her humility, realize that no one can do a greater or better thing than just that—bringing the children to Jesus—loving them into Christianity. If a child was absent from class, she looked him or her up, or had some other member of the class do so. A part of the class had, with some suggestion from her and under the inspiration of her example, resolved itself into a sort of visiting committee; and the work accomplished by them was quite extensive, all things considered.

Troubles and duties of all sorts drifted into the teacher's hands, and before she knew it she was acting almoner for a number of people who had money to give and who had confidence in her ability to make a wise and effective disposition of it. The same characteristics made her work in the public school easy; her scholars gladly helped her to manage. She looked upon her work, not merely as a means of earning a support, but as an opportunity for doing good; and though she humbly, and perhaps truly, felt that she had not large intellectual gifts, she was a successful instructor, an admirable disciplinarian, and steadily advanced in the good graces of the Board of Education.

The moral of this simple history is that a loving spirit makes one more successful in any effort, and that wealth is not an essential to the accomplishment of good. When Jesus came to help the world, he was satisfied to give nothing less than himself.

The Traditional Grave of Noah.

On the little rocky ledge overlooking the Araxes valley, in Armenia, where Nakhitchevan is perched aloft, is shown the tomb of Noah, a plain, square, white-washed building with a dome, wherein we may gaze upon the names of Armenian pilgrims scribbled upon the walls with a zeal deserving of Ramsgate cliffs. "The oldest city in the world"—what a curious thought in itself! The inhabitants to this day point out the vineyard in the valley below that was the scene of the indiscretion of Noah. And as we gaze across the broad, fertile valley that here opens out to the twin peaks of Ararat glistening in the sun, we are thrilled by hallowed memories. We are in a home of antiquity compared with which the West is but as yesterday. As we jolt along the plain in our lumbering four-wheeled tarantass that is the method of progress over the ranges of Lower Caucasia, we pass for miles through the valley over which this mountain giant watches as a silent sentinel, rising abruptly from the level of the plain to a height of 18,000 feet. The natives inform you that Ararat is inaccessible to the foot of man.

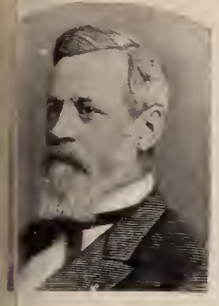
CANADA'S LIQUOR.... ....PLEBISCITE.

Senator Blair Discusses a Remarkable Campaign—How the Traffic can be Controlled in this Continent.

HE Canadian plebiscite vote of September 29th is important to us, because it shows that the people of the Dominion realize what we do not sufficiently, that the liquor traffic can only be dealt with successfully from a national standpoint, and by the exertion of national power. Prohibition in Canada has hitherto been nothing but local option by Provinces, as in this country it has been nothing but local option by States. If a town, city, or county under a local option law, prohibits the sale of liquor within its jurisdiction, its action has a similar relation to those towns, cities, and counties in the same Province or State which do not prohibit, that a prohibition Province or State has to the other Provinces of the Dominion or States of the Union.



HENRY W. BLAIR.

It may be, however, in law, that the Province has greater power over the traffic than the State. It may be that in law a Province can control inter-provincial transportation, while in our country interstate and foreign commerce is subject to national power. It is suggested that the Dominion government may settle the Canadian demand for prohibition by enacting a law recognizing absolute power over the traffic in each Province respectively.

The fact that although each Province has constitutionally complete power in the premises, yet the Dominion has voted for a general prohibitory law covering their whole country, is a convincing proof that, in the judgment of the Dominion, nothing but national prohibition can ever cope with this great national evil. It is palpable that all the powers of a complete government must be exerted over any given domain in order to destroy the liquor traffic. The powers of our national government are limited by those of the State, while powers of the State by those of the Nation; both combined constitute the government of the people of the United States. If the manufacture be permitted anywhere, in any State or Territory, or within the District of Columbia; or if liquors be permitted to come from foreign jurisdictions to American soil, and transportation in original packages be permitted to the cities where the appetite exists, the traffic is bound to flourish. Obviously, then, the powers of the general government must be enlisted against the traffic.

No State power can extend outside its own borders, or exclude original packages of merchandise. On the other hand, the State alone can prohibit the manufacture, sale and consumption after the poison is carried within its limits. Alcoholic liquors are recognized as property, and the general government is bound to protect their importation and transportation. If there be doubt as to the precise point where the State police power attaches, so as to regulate or prohibit the sale, it seems to be conceded that this power cannot prevent the original package from crossing the State line. If once the package is over the line there seems to be no human power that can overcome the ingenuity of the consumer.

The appetite always has its way. In fact if it be manufactured at all, liquor and appetite will find each other. The national constitution now has no power to restrict alcoholic or poisonous drinks otherwise than as property entitled to existence, transportation, and protection, like other property. The State is helpless. The national government has no constitutional power to suppress the traffic, or to aid the States. Only the people can confer that power.

HENRY W. BLAIR.

The Best of Gifts.

The Youth's Companion and the Companion Calendar for 1899.

The present of a year's subscription to THE YOUTH'S COMPANION is in itself a gift of rare and ever-fresh delight. But aside from this, every new subscriber to this excellent family weekly receives from the publishers a special gift, which in a way crystallizes the charm of the farthest as well as the nearest of the fifty-two issues into one compact article of use and beauty.

For a number of years this Christmas gift to new subscribers to THE YOUTH'S COMPANION has been a calendar — one which should tell off the days of the year one by one, and, besides, be something to treasure up for its artistic value. As much thought and skilled workmanship has been expended on these Calendars as upon the richly illuminated Christmas cards which are sold in the stores at Christmas time, and the Calendar, moreover, serves a useful purpose until the carolling bells ring in a new year— and a new Calendar.

To design and produce a Calendar for 1899 which should surpass any of former years, was the task which the publishers of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION undertook, and they believe they have succeeded in it.

The subject of the three designs which form the decorative part of THE COMPANION Calendar for 1899 is the ideal American girl. From the middle one of the three folding panels which compose the Calendar there looks out a serene and lovely face — a faithful portrait of noble womanhood. To the right and left of this are figure pieces entitled respectively, "Early Daisies" and "Among the Wheat." The softest tones as well as the most brilliant shades of the original designs are preserved by the 12 colors in which the Calendar is lithographed.

The form of the Calendar is such that those who at the end of the year wish to keep it for a household ornament can do so, the three decorative panels having no printing on them. Although this Calendar would alone cost at least a dollar sold in the book and art stores, it is given free to every new subscriber to the 1899 volume of THE COMPANION.

It is difficult to speak adequately of the value and variety of the literary contributions now in hand for the 1899 volume. THE COMPANION is first and foremost a storehouse of good literature. It invites the most distinguished men and women in every walk of life to share in the entertainment of COMPANION readers — but it accepts from them only their best work. And every issue contains stories and sketches by writers less widely known, who nevertheless show the possession of rare gifts.

Those who read THE COMPANION during 1899 will be taken to odd and interesting corners of the earth by great explorers; they will meet General Grant, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Robert Louis Stevenson and other celebrities through those who were nearest to them. Some of the best story-writers of both hemispheres will entertain them, and the most profitable advice on practical matters will be given by eminent authorities.

Beginning a more specific catalogue of the good things awaiting THE COMPANION reader, there are the "Tales from the Cables," introducing unfamiliar scenes from the lives of the operators at some of the wild and remote stations of the great cable lines; a group of almost ideal "Humorous Stories;" "Stories of the Sea," full of the mystery of the deep, and the strange adventures of sailors; "Stories by Missionaries," which unite the interest of a thrilling tale with the strange panorama of life which unrolls itself before the eye of the missionary; and "Tales of the Toilers," reflecting the deep pathos of modern industrial conditions, and carrying a significant and hopeful message to both employer and employe.

And this is but opening the cover of the brilliant Announcement of THE COMPANION for 1899. The articles and stories described in its profusely illustrated pages are sufficient in themselves to form a whole library of useful and interesting knowledge and entertainment. Yet they form but a very small part of the provision made for COMPANION readers during the year to come. They will help, however, to indicate the value of the COMPANION, and to explain the hold it has upon half a million families.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Christian Worker, Jersey City, N. J. What do you consider the best spiritual and material equipment for a soul-winner—one who has not had the benefit of a theological education, but who is content to work as a layman on the humblest lines, provided he may thereby bring others to the Cross?

We know of no better answer to your question than that given by Rev. R. A. Torrey to a similar enquiry. He said: "The one who would bring others to Christ must himself be (1) thoroughly converted; (2) he must have a love for souls and a longing for the salvation of the lost; (3) he must have a working knowledge of the Bible; (4) he must pray much; (5) he must be baptized with the Holy Ghost." To this may be added (6) he must be willing to work earnestly and often arduously, with his whole heart, and be willing to face rebuffs and even disappointments, leaving the results to a Higher Power, who will make the spiritual harvest apparent in due season

A. McQ., Pittsburg, Pa. Was any man ever called "His Noseship?"

Yes. The epithet was bestowed on Oliver Cromwell by Marchmont Needham, in his periodical, the Mercurius Pragmaticus, one of the earliest of English newspapers, which, like most publications of the present day, took pleasure in being facetious at the expense of public men.

L. A. T., Erie, Pa. By whom is Deputy Revenue Collector appointed under the Civil Service law?

By the Revenue Collector. For further and fuller information, write to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C.

John E. B., Mt. Vernon, Tex. You say: "There is an infallible rule. God has implanted in our hearts a monitor, which indicates what is right and what is wrong." That being the case, what use have we for the Bible to teach us what is right or wrong? In Heb. 10:22, Paul speaks of an evil conscience. Was that implanted by God? In Acts 23:1, Paul said: "I have lived in all good conscience before God to this day." Was he doing right when persecuting the Church of Christ?

We did not say that conscience was infallible, but that the rule, by which a man might know which way his life was tending, was infallible. As we explained, the conscience may be perverted, or silenced, or misled; but, when quickened by the Holy Spirit, would guide a man safely in times of doubt and difficulty. The common trouble is, as we intimated, that men disregard the voice of conscience and do evil, knowing it to be evil. That fault is a thousandfold more common than the one of which Paul was guilty, of doing evil believing it to be good. The evil conscience of which Paul speaks in the passage you quote was clearly, as you will see by the context, not a corrupt conscience, but a conscience burdened with a sense of guilt, a conscience that reproached the man and needed to be relieved by the assurances of forgiveness.

Mrs. Mina S. A., Reading, Pa. Are there any well authenticated instances of finished and coherent intellectual work being done during sleep and recalled and preserved in waking hours?

There are many such. Condorcet solved some of his most abstruse calculations while asleep. Franklin records finding his way out of a political difficulty under similar circumstances. Sir J. Herschel composed these lines in a dream:

Throw thyself on thy God, nor mock him with feeble denial.
Sure of his love, and of his sure of his mercy at last!
Bitter and deep tho the draught, yet drain from the cup of thy trial
And in it be lin[illegible] smile at the bitterness past.

Goethe, Coleridge, Cockburn and others all mention somewhat similar experiences, and there are recorded instances of musicians having dreamed out beautiful compositions, and written them out in whole or in part during their waking hours.

D. H. W., Danville, Ky. Who is called "the father of English Unitarianism?"

John Biddle, a writer of the seventeenth century. He was the author of many anti-Trinitarian tracts.

E. F. V., Newbern, Va. 1. Who was king or emperor ruled Germany from 1815 to 1871? 2. When did the present Emperor of Austria ascend the throne?

1. None. The period mentioned is during what is known as the "third interregnum" in German history. After the overthrow of the old German Empire, in 1806, the electoral function, by which the imperial throne had always been filled, virtually ceased. Instead of an empire, the thirty-nine German-speaking States formed a "Bund," or confederation, each independent of the other, and under its own ruler, but all united, where common interests were concerned. The Emperor of Austria was the nominal head of this confederacy, but Russia was the most active and influential member. In 1833-35, Prussia, Bavaria, Wurtemburg, and several other States, formed a customs union, Austria being excluded. Frederick William IV., King of Prussia, was offered the imperial crown of Germany, but declined unless it came with the full sanction of the various German princes and the free cities. William, who ascended the Prussian throne in 1861, became Emperor of Germany ten years later. 2. Francis Joseph ascended the Austrian throne Dec. 2, 1848.

P. V. S., Galveston, Ind. How did the American Indian get to this country?

The American Indian is believed by some to be a branch of the Mongolian or Tartar family, which, at a remote period of the world's history, found its way to America by way of Behring Strait

Reader, Cleburne, Kans. 1. Why does Solomon direct wine to be given to him that is ready to perish (Prov. 31:6)? 2. Why is Job described as perfect in Job 1:8, and afterwards represented as abhorring himself and repenting, in Job 42:5, 6? 3. Has the Presbyterian Church any missionary work in Russia?

1. The passage is in the address to a king. He is told that he ought not to drink intoxicants. He has no excuse for doing so, such as there might be for one in enduring misery. He may seek oblivion by that means, however foolish it may be; but the king should know better. 2. The author of the book is stating the case as strongly as possible. He is showing that misfortunes are not proofs of wickedness. So he introduces Job as perfect and describes the calamities that came upon him. In defending himself from the aspersions of his friends, it appears to Job that he has charged God with injustice, hence his sorrow and repentance. 3. We believe not. The Russian government does not tolerate opposition to the Greek Church, though there are many of its people who hold other faiths with more or less secrecy.

Mother, Los Angeles, Cal. Where are the headquarters of the Florence Crittenton Mission; how many branches are there; what is the average number of girls received yearly, and what does it cost to rescue a single case?

The National headquarters are at 218 Third Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. There are branches in about 48 cities and towns; 3,100 girls and 800 babies are being cared for at the present time; $12.50 is the average cost per head in the rescue work. Send to the Secretary of the Mission, at the address given, for all details.

Mary S., Dayton, O. What was "the famous book of the De Lignes," and when was it published?

It was never published, nor was it written or printed. The reference is to a bibliographic curiosity, which belonged to the family of Prince de Ligne, of France, and which was called "The Book of the Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ." Every letter of the text was cut out of each folio upon the finest vellum and being interlaced with blue paper, was read as clearly as though printed in large characters. It must have been a work of infinite patience. Rudolph II., of Germany, in 1640, is said to have offered for it 11,000 ducats.

Wm. De B., Catskill, N. Y. Is there any record of the hairs of a head ever having been "numbered" by a human being?

Partly so, at different times, and for the purpose, we believe, of determining the quality or fineness of light and dark hair respectively. It is estimated that the skin of the average head contains about 744 hairs to the square inch, and as 120 square inches are an average, 89,280 hairs would be the result. This estimate, however, would seem to be largely guess-work.

W. L. C., Guelph, Kans. Are the manuscripts still in existence from which the King James Version of the Bible was prepared

Yes, they are still preserved in our great libraries, but they are of little value except for their historical interest. Since 1611, when the King James Version was issued, manuscripts of a much earlier date have been found. Among them the most ancient are the Alexandrian in the British Museum; the Vatican, in Rome, and the Sinaitic, in St. Petersburg. These vary in date from 300 to 450 A. D.

Subscriber, East Alton, Ill. A scientific writer says that the earth was thousands of years in preparation for the habitation of man. The Bible says it was made in six days. Which are we to believe?

Christian scholars generally believe that the word "day" in the Bible signifies a long period, possibly thousands of years. The fact that the Bible represents it as being made in six days implies that there were successive steps in the work. This is what science teaches. If you imagine God calling the world into existence, as it is now, by a word, you will be puzzled by his occupying six days in doing it, when it could have been done in a moment. Geologists find in the crust of the earth proof that it was made in the progressive manner described in the Bible, and in the same order. We read in II. Peter 3:8 that a thousand years are with the Lord as one day; perhaps these days of creation may have been longer still.

Elizabeth, Newmarket, Ont. What is the meaning of the statement (Romans 8:28), that "all things work together for good to them that love God?"

It means that the events of life, including things that we call misfortunes, will be overruled to spiritual advantage. The Christian is not promised immunity from trouble, but his troubles will tend to make him a better man. He is not encouraged to seek discipline or to act recklessly, with the idea that however an enterprise turns out, it will benefit him. But if after he has sought divine guidance, and if after he has carefully considered a matter, it turns out disastrously, he is not to be cast down, but to expect that in some way God will make the disaster a blessing to him.

W. D., Centre, Wis. A member of a Christian Church corrected me recently when I spoke of Sunday as the Sabbath. Is he right in his contention that there is no Sabbath in this dispensation?

The word, Sabbath, is so closely associated with the Jewish idea of the day, as of perfect rest, that it does not correctly express the Christian idea of the day. The Christian does rest on that day from his worldly labors, but he is busy in the Sunday School, or in some other sphere of usefulness, and generally observes the day in a manner very different from that in which the Sabbath was observed. Besides, it is associated with the resurrection of Christ, not with God's rest from Creation, and is, therefore, more correctly designated as "The Lord's Day." There is no Sabbath in the Jewish sense of the word, in this dispensation, but the day we celebrate has a higher meaning and one that calls for a better observance. You will see in Hebrews 4, how the Christian teaching the idea of Sabbatic rest is not lost but is elevated and broadened.

Old Subscriber, Dayton, O. 1. What in your judgment is the probable future destiny of a suicide? 2. Is there any future opportunity for a suicide to attain eternal happiness after death?

1. The condition of the suicide's mind prior to his committing the fatal act has to be taken into account. There is no doubt that a large proportion of persons who commit suicide are of unsound mind at the time. The brain is unbalanced, and the person is not responsible for his act. You may be quite sure that when a Christian loses control of his faculties, and in that condition kills himself, he will not by the act lose his interest in Christ. God will receive him, as he would if he died by accident or disease. In thinking of a suicide, we must bear in mind the possibility of dementia, and not sorrow as those who have no hope. 2. The Bible holds out no hope of opportunities for repentance and salvation being granted after death either to the suicide or others.

S. H. M., Philadelphia, Pa. Does not Christ's injunction (Mark 10:9-11) forbid marriage to a person who has been divorced?

If you compare this with the parallel passage (Matt 19:9), you will see that an exception is there made. It is a rule in comparing two accounts which differ, to accept the one which appears more complete. That is to say, it is more likely that Mark should have omitted the clause than that Matthew should have inserted it without authority. Accepting Matthew's version, it would appear that the innocent son, whose partner has been unfaithful to the marriage vow, is not prohibited from marrying again. It is only fair to say, however, that some scholars believe that it is wrong for the partner to marry again during the lifetime of the other, no matter how grievously that other may have offended. It seems to us, however, that there is very slender basis for the contention. It is now generally believed that the Apostle Paul, in 1. Cor. 7:15, intended to permit a person, whose wife had deserted him, to contract a new marriage.

WORKINGMEN'S BIBLE CLASS

s a Unique Feature of the Gospel Work in a Leading Boston Church.

HAT great things come from small beginnings, having the divine approval and favor, is illustrated in the growth and work of the Workingmen's Bible Class the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, in ston, Mass. This church, with a nal reputation for its work among the r, has never set on foot any form of ristian activity of greater value than s great Bible class, composed entirely poor laboring men. It was organized years ago by its present teacher, Mr. nuel Russell, who for a number of rs has been one of the large and con- rated staff of workers who carry for- d the various enterprises of the urch.

eginning with a membership of but men, two years ago, the class now has membership of nearly e hundred, who as- ble in the church vest- every Sunday after n for a praise service song, followed by the ly of the Bible, prayer testimony. On Thurs- night of each week a perance meeting is ducted under the aus- s of the class. This ting is always well at- led and full of enthu- m. Many members of class have themselves n saved from the k evil, and are eager ve others. Two and etimes three cottage er meetings are held y week under the aus- s of this class. These ngs are held in some he poorest tenements the great tenement- se district in which church is situated. etimes they are held itchens, or in little ments of but two or e rooms.

the summer time, a pel-wagon service is ied on by the men, and tings are held on the t corners and in the parks. All of services of the Workingmens' Bible s are of the simplest kind. There is h singing, much prayer, and much mony. The leader of the class, Mr. sell, makes no attempt at fine oratory, does he try to appeal to the purely tional nature of the men. In a sim- manner he tries to quicken their spirit perceptions and bring them into full wledge of Christ It is a helpful and iring spectacle to see this great com- of earnest, laboring men praising and carrying forward his work.

Saved From Suicide.

E night in San Francisco some years ago, I was preaching to a great crowd large tent on Mission street. A deep of the need of someone there being im- ately saved, stole over me. I told my gs and a man came forward groaning, g he was the one. Unless saved that it would be hell for him. He was a fine r. Drink and trouble had brought him to nd, and it was to be a choice of the water revolver to end his miserable existence The music had reached his ear and drew from the street just in time to hear my ment of "one more, and possibly a last e, for some soul." A Brand From the Burning.

RING my twelve years' fight with the devil down in Water Street, I seen many wonderful conversions, erhaps the most remarkable case of God's forming power is in the conversion of p McGuire. He was born in Ireland, of Irish-Catholic parents, and was brought here in his childhood. He grew up in the streets of the lower wards of New York, a thief from childhood, and was first arrested when only twelve years old, and frequently afterward. He spent five years in the Juvenile Asylum, three years on a whaling vessel in a trip around the world, and at twenty-three he burglarized a house in New Brunswick, N. J., and was sent to Trenton prison for five years. When released he came to New York, committed another crime and got a five-years' sentence at Sing Sing. There he met Jerry Mc Auley, who was also a prisoner. McGuire sat beside Jerry in the chapel on that famous Sunday morning when "Awful" Gardner, the converted prize-fighter, gave his memorable talk to the prisoners which caused McAuley to yield his heart to Christ. Phil, still unconverted, was released, returned to crime and got into prison again for a term of two years before Jerry got his pardon. Some years later, when Jerry had started the Water Street mission, Phil came into the mission hall, and by Jerry's advice made a start in the Christian life, but soon fell, and robbing the money box, was sent up for another term. Released again, he tried to lead an honest life, but fell into the old drinking ways. One day, seventeen years after he had stolen from the money box, he came into the mission drunk. He said he had been trying for months to get sober enough to come in. He came forward when the invitation was given, and knelt at the mercy seat. That was six years ago, and he was then sixty-three years of age and a drunken wreck. In this condition he called on Jesus for help. His prayer was heard, and old Phil McGuire came out of the mission a saved man. He has remained steadfast ever since, and has been for years our janitor and my trusted friend,—one of the most faithful, kindest, most reliable and zealous helpers in this work.

"She Prayed to the Devil."

A WOMAN came to me in great distress of mind, saying that she wished to unburden her heart privately. I called in another brother in the ministry, and she told how, many years before, she had killed a man in the old country; how the memory of it had haunted her through all these years, though no one knew of the deed. Since that time, she had been guilty of many crimes. I pointed her to Jesus Christ through the use of Isa. 53:6, and she found peace. This woman had, at one time, so resisted the Holy Spirit that she knelt down and prayed the devil to take away her conviction, and for a time she seemed to be without conviction. To-day she is an earnest and active Christian. The killing referred to was not punishable by law.

A CHRISTIAN POET'S GRAVE.

JOHN KEBLE, who has been called "the sweetest and most Christian poet of modern days," was born in Fairford, Gloucestershire, England, in 1792, and his grave may be found in the quiet and picturesque churchyard of Hursley, in Hampshire. Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, the celebrated author, contributes to The Sketch an interesting article on the subject. She writes:

"Hursley, the home of the Rev. John Keble for the greater part of his life, is situated on the edge of the chalk downs just where they began to give place to the forest country to the south of Hampshire. It was not his original home, nor is the scenery that which is alluded to in 'The Christian Year' which was published seven years before his presentation to the living by Sir William Heathcote, who had been his pupil at Oxford, and was in the year 1836, when Mr. and Mrs. Keble came to reside in what was almost an ideal vicarage. It stands on the side of a hill sloping down from Hursley Park to the churchyard, the ground on the lower side being raised so as to form a terrace, shut in by a low brick wall.

"The house is very picturesque, the northern side with a long window down to the ground opening on the slope to the churchyard gate. All is embosomed in trees, the house and terrace-wall overhung with creepers, so that many a visitor, especially those from over the Atlantic, has exclaimed, 'What a fit home for a poet!' And some of them have eagerly carried off twigs as relics. Below lies the churchyard, shut in on two sides by fine rows of lime-trees, which tradition declares to have been planted by Cromwell, the ex-Protector.

"The church with its old tower form a very beautiful object from any part of the surrounding country. It is a dignified three-aisled church in late pointed architecture, and with a deep chancel. Altogether it is a deeply impressive church, and in every detail shows the mind and thought of the sacred poet, who breathed his spirit into the architect, and who ministered there for twenty-one years—thirty altogether in Hursley Parish.

"Failing health, first of Mrs. Keble's, then of his own, necessitated absence from Hursley in the winter months, and Mr. Keble died at Bournemouth, March 29, 1866, being followed six weeks later by his wife. The parishioners commemorated him by a brass cross, inserted in the pavement of the chancel, and, a few years later, monuments were erected over the graves. Mr. Keble's is of red granite, Mrs. Keble's of marble. Beside them is the cross marking the grave of Elisabeth Keble, the sister who shared the same home for many years, and died on Aug. 7, 1858."

Keble's chief works, "The Christian Year" and "Lyra Innocentium," were soon widely known and established his fame as an author. More than one hundred editions of "The Christian Year" were sold, and Keble might have realized a fortune from this source but he preferred to devote so much of his income to church work and to the beautification of the church itself that he remained comparatively poor to the end of life.

Loyal Obedience.

One cold night, a gatekeeper at a railroad station was making every passenger show his ticket before passing through to the train, which provoked considerable grumbling and protesting. Major Whittle, who was on the platform, said to him: "You are a very unpopular man to-night." "I only care to be popular with one man," was the reply, "and that is the superintendent." He might have pleased the passengers, disobeyed orders, and lost his position. He was too wise for that; his business was to please one man—the man who hired him, gave him his orders, and rewarded him for faithfulness, and who, if the occasion for such a course ever arose, could discharge him for any act of disobedience, or for neglecting the interests of the railroad of which he was an employee. And so it happens that the servant of Christ is often bound to make himself unpopular. There are those who would be glad to have him relax the strictness of his rules, and grant to himself some indulgence which his Master forbids. But if he tries to be popular with the world he will lose his popularity with the Lord. He will make friends, but he will lose the one Friend who is above all others. He will win plaudits, but he will not hear the gracious words, "Well done!"

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

A WEDDING PRESENT.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Joshua 15: 19, ... } Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs and the nether springs.

THE city of Debir was the Boston of antiquity—a great place for brain and books. Caleb wanted it, and he offered his daughter Achsah as a prize to any one who would capture that city. It was a strange thing for Caleb to do; and yet the man that could take the city would have, at any rate, two elements of manhood—bravery and patriotism. Besides, I do not think that Caleb was as foolish in offering his daughter to the conqueror of Debir, as thousands in this day who seek alliances for their children with those who have large means, without any reference to moral or mental acquirements. Of two evils, I would rather measure happiness by the length of the sword than by the length of the pocket-book. In one case there is sure to be one good element of character; in the other there may be none at all. With Caleb's daughter as a prize to fight for, General Othniel rode into the battle. The gates of Debir were thundered into the dust, and the city of books lay at the feet of the conquerors. The work done, Othniel comes back to claim his bride. Having conquered the city, it is no great job for him to conquer the girl's heart; for however faint-hearted a woman herself may be, she always loves courage in a man. I never saw an exception to that. The wedding festivity having gone by, Othniel and Achsah are about to go to their new home. However loudly the cymbals may clash and the laughter ring, parents are always sad when a fondly-cherished daughter goes off to stay; and Achsah, the daughter of Caleb, knows that now is the time to ask almost anything she wants of her father. It seems that Caleb, the good old man, had given as a wedding present to his daughter a piece of land that was mountainous, and sloping southward toward the deserts of Arabia, swept with some very hot winds. It was called "a south land." But Achsah wants an addition of property; she wants a piece of land that is well watered and fertile. Now it is no wonder that Caleb, standing amidst the bridal party, his eyes so full of tears because she was going away that he could hardly see her at all, gives her more than she asks. She said to him, "Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs, and the nether springs."

The fact is, that as Caleb, the father, gave Achsah, the daughter, a south land, so God gives to us his world. I am very thankful he has given it to us. But I am like Achsah in the fact that I am not satisfied with the portion. Trees, and flowers, and grass, and blue skies are very well in their places; but he who has nothing but this world for a portion has no portion at all. It is a mountainous land, sloping off toward the desert of sorrow, swept by fiery siroccos; it is "a south land," a poor portion for any man that tries to put his trust in it. What has been your experience? What has been the experience of every man, of every woman that has tried this world for a portion? Queen Elizabeth, amidst the surroundings of pomp, is unhappy because the painter sketches too minutely the wrinkles on her face, and she indignantly cries out, "You must strike out my likeness without any shadows!" Hogarth, at the very height of his artistic triumph, is stung almost to death with chagrin because the painting he had dedicated to the king does not seem to be acceptable; for George II. cries out, "Who is this Hogarth? Take his trumpery out of my presence." Brinsley Sheridan thrilled the earth with his eloquence, but had for his last words, "I am absolutely undone." Walter Scott, fondling around the bookstand, trying to write, says to his daughter, "Oh, take me back to my room; there is no rest for Sir Walter but in the grave!" Stephen Girard, the wealthiest man in his day, or, at any rate only second in wealth, says, "I live the life of a galley-slave: when I arise in the morning my one effort is to work so hard that I can sleep when it gets to be night." Charles Lamb, applauded of all the world, in the very midst of his literary triumph, says, "Do you remember, Bridget, when we used to laugh from the shilling gallery at the play? There are now no good plays to laugh at from the boxes." But why go so far as that? I need to go no farther than your street to find an illustration of what I am saying.

Pick me out ten successful worldlings—and you know what I mean by thoroughly successful worldlings—pick me out ten successful worldlings, and you can not find more than one that looks happy. Care drags him to business; care drags him back. Take your stand at two o'clock at the corner of the streets and see the agonized physiognomies. Your high officials, your bankers, your insurance men, your importers, your wholesalers, and your retailers, as a class—as a class, are they happy? No. Care dogs their steps; and, making no appeal to God for help or comfort, many of them are tossed everywhither. How has it been with you, my hearer? Are you more contented in the house of fourteen rooms than you were in the two rooms you had in a house when you started? Have you not had more care and worriment since you won that fifty thousand dollars than you did before? Some of the poorest men I have ever known have been those of great fortune. A man of small means may be put in great business straits, but the ghastliest of all embarrassments is that of the man who has large estates. The men who commit suicide because of monetary losses are those who cannot bear the burden any more, because they have only fifty thousand dollars left.

On Bowling Green, New York, there is a house where Talleyrand used to go. He was a favored man. All the world knew him, and he had wealth almost unlimited; yet at the close of his life he says, "Behold, eighty-three years have passed without any practical result, save fatigue of body and fatigue of mind, great discouragement for the future, and great disgust for the past." Oh, my friends, this is a "south land," and it slopes off toward deserts of sorrows; and the prayer which Achsah made to her father Caleb we make this day to our Father God: "Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs, and the nether springs."

Blessed be God! we have more advantages given us than we can really appreciate. We have spiritual blessings offered us in this world which I shall call the nether springs, and glories in the world to come which I shall call the upper springs.

Where shall I find words enough threaded with light to set forth the pleasure of religion? David, unable to describe it in words, played it on a harp. Mrs. Hemans, not finding enough power in prose, sings that praise in a canto. Christopher Wren, unable to describe it in language, sprung it into the arches of St. Paul's. John Bunyan, unable to present it in ordinary phraseology, takes all the fascination of allegory. Handel, with ordinary music unable to reach the height of the theme, rouses it up in an oratorio. Oh, there is no life on earth so happy as a really Christian life! I do not mean a sham Christian life, but a real Christian life. Where there is a thorn, there is a whole garland of roses. Where there is one groan, there are three doxologies. Where there is one day of cloud, there is a whole season of sunshine. Take the humblest Christian man that you know—angels of God canopy him with their white wings; the lightnings of heaven are his armed allies; the Lord is his Shepherd, picking out for him green pastures by still waters; if he walk forth, heaven is his bodyguard; if he lie down to sleep, ladders of light, angel-blossoming, are let into his dreams; if he be thirsty, the potentates of heaven are his cup-bearers; if he sit down to food, his plain table blooms into the King's banquet. Men say, "Look at that odd fellow with the worn-out coat;" the angels of God cry, "Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let him come in!" Fastidious people cry, "Get off my front steps!" the door-keepers of heaven cry, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom!" When he comes to die, though he may be carried out in a pine box to the potter's field, to that potter's field the chariots of Christ will come down, and the cavalcade will crowd all the boulevards of heaven.

I bless Christ for the present satisfaction of religion. It makes a man all right with reference to the past; it makes a man all right with reference to the future. Oh, these nether springs of comfort! They are perennial. The foundation of God standeth sure having this seal, "The Lord knoweth them that are his." "The mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, who hath mercy upon thee." Oh, cluster of diamonds set in burnished gold! Oh, nether springs of comfort bursting through all the valleys of trial and tribulation! When you see, you of the world, what satisfaction there is on earth in religion, do you not thirst after it as the daughter of Caleb thirsted after the water-springs? It is no stagnant pond, scummed over with malaria, but springs of water leaping from the Rock of Ages! Take up one cup of that spring-water, and across the top of the chalice will float the delicate shadows of the heavenly wall, the yellow of jasper, the green of emerald, the blue of sardonyx, the fire of jacinth.

I wish I could make you understand the joy religion is to some of us. It makes a man happy while he lives, and glad when he dies. With two feet upon a chair and bursting with dropsies, I heard an old man in the poor-house cry out, "Bless the Lord, oh, my soul!" I looked around and said, "What has this man got to thank God for?" It makes the lame man leap as a hart, and the dumb sing. They say that the old Puritan religion is a juiceless and joyless religion; but I remember reading of Dr. Goodwin, the celebrated Puritan, who in his last moment said, "Is this dying? Why, my bow abides in strength! I am swallowed up in God!" "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Oh, you who have been trying to satisfy yourselves with the "south land" of this world, do you not feel that you would, this morning, like to have access to the nether springs of spiritual comfort? Would you not like to have Jesus Christ bend over your cradle and bless your table and heal your wounds, and strew flowers of consolation all up and down the graves of your dead?

> 'Tis religion that can give > Sweetest pleasures while we live;
> 'Tis religion can supply
> Sweetest comfort when we die.

But I have something better to tell you, suggested by this text. It seems that old Father Caleb, on the wedding-day of his daughter, wanted to make her just as happy as possible. Though Othniel was taking her away, and his heart was almost broken because she was going, yet he gives her a "south land;" not only that, but the nether springs; not only that, but the upper springs. O, God! my Father, I thank thee that thou hast given me a "south land" in this world, and the nether springs of spiritual comfort in this world; but, more than all, I thank thee for the upper springs in heaven.

It is very fortunate that we cannot see heaven until we get into it. Oh, Christian man, if you could see what a place it is, we would never get you back again to the office, or store, or shop, and the duties you ought to perform would go neglected. I am glad I shall not see that world until I enter it. Suppose we were allowed to go on an excursion into that good land with the idea of returning. When we got there and heard the song, and looked at their raptured faces, and mingled in the supernal society, we would cry out, "Let us stay! We are coming here anyhow. Why take the trouble of going back again to that old world? We are here now; let us stay." And it would take angelic violence to put us out of that world, if once we got th[e]. But as people who cannot afford to [ty] for an entertainment sometimes c[he] around it and look through the door: [r,] or through the openings in the fenc[so] we come and look through the crev[es] into that good land which God has [o-] vided for us. We can just catch a glin[se] of it. We come near enough to hea[he] rumbling of the eternal orchestra, th[e h] not near enough to know who blows [he] cornet or who fingers the harp. My [ul] spreads out both wings and claps the[ir] triumph at the thought of those u[er] springs. One of them breaks from [e-] neath the throne; another breaks f[h] from beneath the altar of the tem[.] another at the door of "the hous[e] many mansions." Upper springs of [l-] ness! upper springs of light! upper spr[is] of love! It is no fancy of mine. "[he] Lamb which is in the midst of the th[he] shall lead them to living fountain[s] water." Oh, Saviour divine, roll in [u] our souls one of those anticipated [e-] tures! Pour around the roots of [he] parched tongue one drop of that li[id] life! Toss before our vision those f[e-] tains of God, rainbowed with eternal [s-] tory. Hear it! They are never sick t[h] not so much as a headache, or tw[o] rheumatic, or thrust neuralgic. Th[e] habitant never says, "I am sick." T[he] are never tired there. Flight to fart[h] world is only the play of a holiday. T[hey] never sin there. It is as easy for the[m] be holy as it is for us to sin. They n[ei]r die there. You might go through all [he] outskirts of the great city and find not[e] place where the ground was broken [for] grave. The eyesight of the redeeme[d is] never blurred with tears. There is h[o-] in every cheek. There is spring in e[ve-] foot. There is majesty on every b[ro-]. There is joy in every heart. There is [ho-] sanna on every lip. How they must [pity] us as they look over and look down [on] see us, and say, "Poor things, away d[own] in that world!" And when some Chris[tian] is hurled into a fatal accident, they [say,] "Good, he is coming!" And when [we] stand around the couch of some l[oved] one whose strength is going away, [and] we shake our heads forebodingly, they [say:] "I'm glad he is worse; he has been d[own] there long enough. There, he is d[one.] Come home! come home!" Oh, if [we] could only get our ideas about that fu[ture] world untwisted, our thought of tra[nsfer] from here to there would be as pleasa[nt to] us as it was to a little child that was dy[ing.] She said, "Papa, when will I go hon[e?] And he said, "To-day, Florence." "[To-] day? so soon? I am so glad!"

I wish I could stimulate you with t[he] thoughts. O Christian man, to the h[ig]est possible exhilaration. The da[y of] your deliverance is coming, is co[me.] rolling on with the shining wheels of [the] day, and the jet wheels of the ni[ght.] Every thump of the heart is only a h[am]mer-stroke striking off another chai[n of] clay. Better scour the deck and coil [the] rope, for harbor is only six miles aw[ay.] Jesus will come down in the "Narro[ws] to meet you. "Now is your salva[tion] nearer than when you believed."

Man of the world! will you not to-[day] make a choice between these two [por]tions, between the "south land" of [the] world, which slopes to the desert, [and] this glorious land which thy Father o[ver] thee, running with eternal water-cour[ses.] Why let your tongue be consumed [of] thirst when there are the nether spr[ings] and the upper springs: comfort here [and] glory hereafter?

You and I need something better t[han] this world can give us. The fact is [that] it cannot give us anything after a wh[ile.] It is a changing world. Do you k[now] that even the mountains on the back [of] thousand streams are leaping into [the] valley. The Alleghanies are dying. [The] dews with crystalline mallet are hamm[er]ing away the rocks. Frosts, and show[ers] and lightnings are sculpturing Mo[unt] Washington and the Catskills. Niag[ara] every year is digging for itself a quie[ter] plunge. The sea all around the earth [is] its shifting shores is making min[ute] changes in bar, and bay, and frith, [and] promontory. Some of the old sea-co[asts] are midland now. Off Nantucket, [at] feet below low-water mark, are fo[und] now the stumps of trees, showing that [the] waves are conquering the land. Part[of] Nova Scotia are sinking. Ships to[day] sail over what, only a little while [ago] was solid ground. Near the mouth [of]

FRANCE'S TIME OF PERIL.

The Ministry Overthrown and the Republic Threatened by the Dreyfus Revelations—A Capital Under Military Law.

LETTERS from Paris indicate that the French capital is still greatly excited over the Anglo-French crisis and the Nile question. So general has been the public perturbation that, for a time, even the absorbing Dreyfus case seemed to be forgotten, and the deliberations of the Spanish American Peace Commissioners were unheeded. Now that the Fashoda incident has been adjusted, and the feeling against England quieted down, interest in Dreyfus has revived, and the public are looking forward eagerly to the next development in the remarkable case. There are many conflicting reports in circulation relative to the action of the Court of Cassation, before which the case may come for a re-hearing. It is now said that, in recognition of the intense public feeling on the subject, the court will sit with open doors, instead of "in camera" (behind closed doors). According to one of the Paris daily newspapers (La Liberte) which claims impartiality, of the fifteen members of the Court of Cassation, with whom rests the decision, five are opposed, while the remaining ten are in favor of revision. M. Manau, the "procureur" of the court, is a strong partisan of revision.

These are critical days for the republic. The friends of empire are plotting silently, and only await an opportunity to overthrow the fabric of popular government, and place France once again under an imperial ruler. It is fortunate for the republic that its enemies have no strong leader, with courage equal to the opportunity. Patriotic statesmen see the danger which has come up suddenly, amid the turmoil and the complications of the quarrel over Fashoda, and the withdrawal of the Marchand expedition; and which has been further increased by the startling revelations of corruption in the army, as disclosed by the developments of the Dreyfus case. One of the anomalies of the situation is that the tone of the Parisian press is more urgently in favor of shielding the army and saving its reputation, than of doing justice and averting national dishonor.

M. BRISSON,
Ex-Premier.

GENERAL CHANOINE,
Ex-Minister of War.

M. MANAU,
Of Court of Cassation.

Extensive precautions, both municipal and military, were taken by the prefecture of police for the opening of the Chamber of Deputies. No gatherings were allowed in the streets; any groups forming were dispersed at once, and persons refusing to go were arrested. Infantry and mounted guards were distributed throughout the Place de la Concorde, while police and guards were on the bridge which leads immediately to the entrance of the Chamber, and along the Champs Elysees, and other connecting avenues. Mounted reserves were stationed in the Tuilleries Gardens. Every measure necessary for the preservation of the peace was adopted, and especially with a view to holding back any crowds that might converge upon the Chamber. Barriers were erected and reserves, who remained out of sight, were kept in readiness, night and day, for sudden emergencies.

When the day of assembling arrived, the streets were crowded, and it soon became clear that the multitude would make trouble, unless controlled. Mobs swept through the streets, shouting for the army and against the Jews; and when the police tried to interfere, they were rudely handled. When the Chamber opened, there was a tremendous uproar, and a strong demonstration against the Ministry. General Chanoine, Minister of War, forced his way through the Chamber to the tribune, and in a heated address resigned the war portfolio. He then left the Chamber. At the next sitting, the Chamber refused to sustain the government, and the members of M. Brisson's Cabinet quitted the hall in a body. They proceeded to the Elysee and tendered their resignations to the President of the Republic.

Thus was accomplished the overthrow of the second Ministry by the present Chamber, which was elected only a little over five months ago. France, in passing through the storm, has several times come perilously near the rocks. The Meline Cabinet was the first to succumb, and now that of M. Brisson, after many attempts at temporizing, has foundered on the shoals. General Chanoine's resignation was, of course, entirely owing to the Dreyfus case. It may be mentioned, in this connection, that the latest report is that the government will bring the exiled officer back to Paris, to face his accusers. Just what substantial foundation there may be for such a rumor, or indeed whether it is the purpose to give Dreyfus a rehearing at all, remains to be seen. If France is strong enough to set all other considerations aside, and do justice in this matter, which vitally affects the future life and well-being of the republic, it will, indeed, be a wholesome and encouraging sign. But the feeling that the army must be shielded and protected at all hazards, is uppermost in many quarters, and may work successfully against those who are striving and praying that justice and truth may be victorious.

OUR ORPHANS IN OORFA.

MISS CORINNA SHATTUCK'S work among the Armenian orphan children, in Oorfa, is progressing favorably, as is shown by the following letter which she has sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

I gratefully acknowledge the check for $5, representing contributions by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, sent August 17. We desire to open another industrial department for our boys, and I will appropriate this toward the enterprise, which we think will be tailoring. The boys are growing so rapidly we must all bend our energies to supporting their needs and creating fresh industries.

Twelve of our boys now in the high school are all eager, earnest pupils. Others are crowding on in lower grades till soon we shall have no very little ones left. The month of September was exceedingly hot. With low supply of water for the city and famine prices of wheat, we rejoiced in the blessing of health. Our children remained well, obedient, and happy in their vacation work. About forty-five were at some trade; the shops in the city supplying employment to quite a number. Our little shoemakers, who have been working at the trade for two years, are doing well and can earn their way. All are eager for study. Three of our boys are at college: two at Aintab and one at Tarsus Institute. Another, preparing for college, while working at his trade, spends his odd minutes in study, begging for help in his English and other studies. You would be interested in the way children settle into quiet corners all about the different yards for morning study; also their eager attendance when in evenings we light up and assemble the older ones for our extra hour of study. The younger ones about twenty-five, remain in the mother's room, play little games and engage in a few kindergarten occupations. You will rejoice with us over the reformation of one large boy, who came to us densely ignorant, wayward, and uncouth, causing us more trouble than all the others, but who has now mastered his trade, and is one of our reliable "big boys," presiding at table.

The winter looks dark. Wheat will not be cheaper till "the latter rains" of March and April. The widows look pale and plead "bread," is the cry, or rather "work to earn our bread." We are making efforts to get the embroidery work upon some permanent basis as merchandise, also the handkerchief making and other industries of the girls.

THE BOOK OF THE LAW FOUND.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 4. II. Kings 22 : 8-20. Golden Text, 119 : 2.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

IT was a good day for Judah when Hilkiah, the priest, found the book of the law of the Lord given by Moses, and told Shaphan the scribe, who carried this treasure to the young king, Josiah. What must have been the darkness and spiritual death in the land and in Jerusalem when the law of God was lost, it is difficult to conceive. How can a child, a servant, a workman or a soldier dispense with the orders which direct his steps? He becomes a locomotive without a driver, carrying everywhere danger and destruction with him. The unmistakable contrast between countries where the Bible is not read and where it is read must strike every impartial observer. The life of a man whose hopes and fears, whose tastes and aims are regulated by the Word of God, and whose strength is derived from that intimate acquaintance with God which comes from listening to him and communing with him in his Word with prayer, is marked by a steady calm of which circumstances cannot rob him. He sits with him in his heavenly places who has all things under his feet (Eph. 1 : 22; 2 : 6). How can he be dismayed?

Josiah was only eight years old when he came to the throne, and apparently converted at the age of fifteen (II. Chron. 34 : 3), and four years later he began a work of reformation in the land. In every way he destroyed idolatry (II. Chron. 34 : 3-7), and then in the eighteenth year of his reign he undertook the repairing of the house of God, which his father Amon and his grandfather Manasseh had so desecrated. All this was well, but there was something yet wanting, and the great discovery of the priest Hilkiah supplied the need. There are numbers of would-be Christians, and some real but ignorant children of God, who have it in their hearts to serve him, and they do it to the utmost as far as their light goes: they have not yet found in their Bibles the treasure which it is when once it is read in the light of the Spirit of God.

As long as the Bible is read as a duty, a service to be performed, it is almost the same as when the book of the law was hidden among the rubbish in the temple. But it is when the words which our Lord speaks to us become "spirit and life" to us (John 6 : 63), when the Word of God becomes a personal communication and a continuous revelation of God to us and means of communication with him that we cannot dispense with it; it becomes more than our necessary food; our spiritual life is dependent upon it. We lay up his Word in our hearts that we may not sin against our God (Ps. 119 : 11).

The discovery of the Word of God marked an epoch in the life of King Josiah. he laid it to heart, rent his clothes, and sent to the person in whom he saw most of the Spirit of God (this was not the high priest, but a faithful woman, Huldah, the prophetess,) that she might "enquire of the Lord touching the words of the book," and the wrath of God. Huldah knew God. How she could have maintained her spiritual life without the Word, one can only conceive by remembering how the Jewish children were taught to learn by heart some of the books of Moses, and it is more than possible that she thus knew, and bore upon her heart for years before, the solemn truths which had come so suddenly to the knowledge of the king. Huldah declared that the judgment which had been predicted must take place, but she brought a tender message from the Lord to the royal enquirer. "Thus saith the Lord God, the God of Israel, Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before the Lord, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become a desolation and a curse, and hast rent thy clothes and wept before me: I also have heard thee, saith the Lord. Therefore, behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil which I will bring upon this place." In judgment, our Heavenly Father remembers mercy.

Laid hold of already by the searching, solemn Word of God, the king was yet more drawn out to God by the message of his mercy; his heart was fully won and filled with gratitude to the Lord he served, and he must pour out to others the feelings which overflowed him. What an opportunity for a king! And he did not lose it. He went up to the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and all the priests and the prophets, and all the people both small and great. A national consecration! "And he read." He deputed no other. As a king reigning in the fear of God, he would be God's own messenger to his people. From the beginning of Genesis to the end of Deuteronomy, the king, in person, read the Bible to his people. "And the king stood by a pillar" (R. V., on the platform) "and made a covenant before the Lord to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and all his soul, to confirm the words of this covenant that were written in this book; and all the people stood to the covenant." It is not sufficient to read the Word of God. He wants an answer. He wants us to be a party to what we learn of his will, to be recipients of what we learn of his grace. To read the Word of God without anything passing between God and us makes it a dead Word instead of a living Word to us.

Of course, something came of this. When light comes in, darkness goes out; the extirpation of idolatry received a tremendous impetus, and a much more thorough cleansing of idolatry took place than ever before. The land of Judah has never since Josiah's time been given over to idolatry as before. "Like unto him there was no king before him that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses" (II. Kings 23 : 25). And the secret was his loyalty to the Word of God. Not only at Jerusalem, but throughout his kingdom he effected the purgation of the land from idolatry and all its attendant abominations.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

RETURNING to the history of Judah, we find Josiah, the grandson of Manasseh, on the throne. Between the death of Manasseh, of whose late repentance we read in the lesson two weeks ago, and Josiah, there intervened the brief reign of Amon, the son of Manasseh and the father of Josiah. It continued only two years, and was full of iniquity. It was ended by a palace intrigue in which Amon was assassinated. But evidently it did not have the sympathy of the people at large, for the murderers were executed, and Josiah, the eight-year-old son of the dead king, was placed on the throne. Under this young king there was one of those spasmodic reformations to which the nation was becoming accustomed. The idols which had reappeared, even in the Temple itself, were destroyed, and a force of enthusiastic men went through the country, and even through the desolated northern kingdom, then under the control of Assyria, purging the land of the abominations. Josiah also began the repair of the Temple, which, in the interval of two hundred and fifty years since Joash had made his extensive repairs, had probably become seriously dilapidated. It was in the course of this work that the document, described as "The Book of the Law," was found. Evidently neither the king nor the priests knew that such a book was in existence, but they recognized its authority at once. We infer from the remarks about it, and the effect it had on the king, that it was the book we now know as Deuteronomy that was thus found. The curses contained in the twenty-eighth chapter of that b were precisely of the kind most like to alarm the king. He immediately set a ut the reformation by which he hope to avert God's wrath. It was carried ut with a vigorous hand, but like all refo a tions of a legal and autocratic charact it was only temporary. The people ob bd because it was dangerous to disobey, ad not because they were convinced of he iniquity of their practises.

...A MISSIONARY'S DAY IN ASSAM...

How a Missionary of the American Baptist Union is Giving the Gospel to the People of Dibrugarh.

BY REV. JOSEPH PAUL.

NEW towns in this strange country present better opportunities for Christian work than the populous town of Dibrugarh, where I am at present laboring. It is the minus and headquarters of a railroad h runs to the frontier of Burma, and so a terminus of the Assam Valley Steamer service, whose vessels ply een this port on the southern bank e Brahmaputra to Goalondo, in Ben- seven hundred miles away. These and industries have attracted to ugarh a large and enter- g population whom it is important that we d reach with the el. I came here early summer Lakhimpur have been hrough the onths. I am soon surrounded by a er of sick folk who think that the man can heal all diseases, from a on cold to leprosy. Those who can lped by common remedies, I help ifficult and to me unknown diseases. e alone lest I should do more harm good. All I can do about them is, an aching heart, to "Tell Jesus," for He nows our frame, and the meaning purpose of suffering. Some day I that these people will be better for physically. A medical dispens- some centre amongst them would out fifteen dollars a month to begin and, I think, with careful manage- ment, would soon support itself. It would certainly give me a strong hold on the people.

The sick having gone, or still lingering in the hope of help, a group of opium eaters will draw stealthily nigh: some of these would like medicine to cure the opium habit; others would like a little money to buy opium; one or two would like to sell me a chicken in order to buy the day's supply of that drug; all of them would like to know, whether if they became Christians, they would have land, houses, cattle, etc., given them. For all these the Gospel of repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus Christ, with warnings of judgment to come, mingled with some good promises of God's love to all, if they turn away from sin, is what they usually get. Some of these poor wretches listen and sigh as "having no hope" (for what hope or will has an opium-eater?) and no God besides opium. But most of them turn away saying, "The padre is a very hard man. He wants us to do what is impossible. Who can give up opium?" Some are surprised that we do not seek crowds of men who are simply willing to take the name of Christians while they keep on in their sins.

SCENES IN ASSAM—HUTS OF THE MIRIS—A BEND IN THE SABENSIRI RIVER.

By the time all these have gone, breakfast will be ready. And as I usually eat this meal under the shade of a tree, or that of a large waterproof sheet, it is quite public. When I ask the blessing it is really necessary to explain that I am not worshiping the food on the table, but giving God thanks for it; for they worship almost anything.

Then I spend an hour in devotional study of the Bible, which is very necessary anywhere, but more particularly so when surrounded by so much that is false, formal and flat; so much that is deadening to the struggling Christian soul. After this I go into the village with tracts and single Gospels. Sometimes many copies are sold, sometimes few; the number being regulated, perhaps, by the number of men who can read. I have not yet seen the Miri woman or girl who could read. Very often the distribution of literature will lead to some hours' employment in explanation of the Scriptures. This is, perhaps, the most effective way of making the Gospel known. Sometimes a group of men who are visiting from a distant village will gather round me and ask many questions about our religion, and some will buy a few copies of the Gospels for those who can read Assamese amongst their own kindred.

And now the men, women and girls who have been working in the rice and mustard fields, and the boys who have been herding the cattle and buffaloes will be returning home. The women and girls bring large bundles of wood on their heads, ready for cooking the evening meal. In addition to this burden the married woman usually has an infant tied to her back. The boys, boy like, come home in groups, singing, dancing and playing a musical instrument, which is made of bamboo. Sometimes, on seeing a European, they pause in their march, pair off according to size, and begin a wrestling match. After a few throws and much hearty laughter, they run on and catch up with the animals. These being tied or penned up, the boys are free until the next morning. These boys are very interesting to me. Many of them are learning to read and they do not mind sitting on my boat and reading the Scriptures. Some days, by mutual agreement, a part of the boys will look after the animals while the other part will come to me. Then I have a week-day Sunday School.

All the Miris of both sexes, from the old men and women to the little boys and girls, smoke a mixture of tobacco and molasses. In the evening when all have returned from their several employments, they gather around a fire in the open, and will sit on the bare ground and smoke the family pipe while chatting about the day's work.

While the villagers are thus employed I prepare for the most important part of my day's work. First, by fixing up a stand for the large Sunday School pictures which help to gain and hold the attention of the people. Then, calling a boy or two, I have them light a fire in such a position as to warm the audience, light up the pictures and give me a reading light. I sing a hymn, explaining its teaching, and having gained their attention, read an appropriate passage of Scripture, something which brings in the whole scheme of Redemption. It is seldom that one is permitted to go far without interruptions in the form of questions, which often require careful answers.

At some places the interest is so great the meeting lasts on until ten o'clock. Even then some of the people will follow me to my boat with more questions.

Some may ask what effect this preaching and teaching has upon the people: to answer this would necessitate a much longer letter than I now have time to write. I will simply say that the kind of Hinduism which holds their souls in bondage to Satan, is gradually dying, through the light of the Gospel and Western civilization. I am persuaded that there are many who are looking Christward, and earnestly wishing that they could break away from Hinduism, which means a complete separation from home and friends; it means persecution, and, perhaps, want: in fact it means so much to them that God only can understand it all. Some of these say, "If I become a Christian I must leave my brothers and sisters and mother and father's house." Hinduism blinds their eyes to that Friend who sticketh closer than a brother, and to the permanence and blessedness of "Our Father's House on High."

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

The Duty of Consecrating a Portion of the Income to Christ's Service. Mal. 3:7-12.

While the great enterprises connected with the Church of Christ are restricted in their operations by the lack of funds, the subject of giving must be kept prominently before the people. It is a disagreeable duty, but it has to be done. Money must be obtained in order to fulfil Christ's commands. If the Gospel is to be preached to every creature, the preacher must be sent and he must be paid. If he is willing to give up home and friends and native land, and risk even his life among the heathen in a climate often unsalubrious, surely the least we can do is to see to it that his income is assured to him. Then there are Bibles to be printed in the language of the people, and Christian literature should be provided, and all this costs money. Our own land, too, must not be neglected. Not only must churches be supported, but an aggressive campaign must be carried on by city missionaries, Sunday School pioneers and in other ways. Besides this, philanthropy must not be overlooked. Christ laid special emphasis on the duty of caring for the poor, especially for the poor who are brothers and sisters in Christ. So that really a vast sum is needed to carry on the work of the church.

In order to raise this fund, it is necessary that each member of Christ's church should do his share. That some neglect to do so is obvious. If each followed the Jewish rule of consecrating one-tenth of his income to God there would be no lack. It is true that the Christian is relieved from the law of the tenth as he is relieved from other Jewish laws, but his liberty ought to be an incentive to greater giving rather than an excuse for less. There are cases of poverty in which it would not be just or right to give even a tenth, but they are comparatively few and God does not expect the impossible. But even in those it is frequently possible by some act of self-denial to share in the glory and privilege of giving, and in such cases the value of the gift in Christ's eyes, is enhanced by the sacrifice which made it possible. It is, too, a matter of common experience that when the Christian conscientiously and systematically lays aside a proportion of his income for the Lord's work, God blesses him and gives him a larger income. It is true, now, as it was in the Old Testament times, that "the liberal soul is made fat."

Come and Dine!

GOOD, grand, old-fashioned Thanksgiving Day has come. Nothing could stop it. It pressed on down through the weeks and months, its way lighted by burning cities or cleft by cavernous graves; now strewn with orange blossoms, and then with funeral weeds; amid instruments that piped the "quick-step," and drummed "the dead march." Through the gates of the morning it came, carrying on one shoulder a sheaf of wheat, and on the other a shock of corn. Children in holiday dress hold up their hands to bless it, and old age goes out to bid it welcome, asking that it come in, and by the altars of God rest awhile. Come in, oh day, fragrant with a thousand memories, and borne down under the weight of immemorable mercies, and tell to our thankful hearts how great is the goodness of God.

AN AGED Christian man years ago in Massachusetts died. Instead of the flowers usually put upon the bier, there was laid upon his coffin a sheaf of wheat fully ripe. Beautifully significant! Oh, that on the remains of this harvest year we might place a sheaf of prayer, a sheaf of thanksgiving, a sheaf of joy fully ripe! What places we live in! This world is the house that God built for us to live in. He lets it to us already furnished. What a carpet!—the grass interwoven with figure of flower. What a ceiling!—the frescoed sky. What tapestried pillars!—the rocks. What a front door!—the flaming sunrise through which the day comes in. What a back door!—the sunset through which the day goes out. What a chandelier and candelabra!—the sun and stars. What a flour-bin!—the wheat-fields. What chimneys!—Etna and Stromboli and Cotopaxi. Ah! the Alhambra and Windsor Castle are but Queenstown shanties compared with this great house that God has put up for us to live in. Bless him for such a house!

WE HAVE been sitting at God's table, ten, thirty, fifty, seventy years. From the apples you ate in the orchard when a boy to the fruit last night upon your tea table, it all came out of the same hand. From the horn that called you from the hay field years ago, to the silver bell that tinkled on your table at noon to day, you have never known the pang, the sickening horror, of having nothing to eat. Every one of us has consumed whole acres of corn, whole flocks of birds, whole droves of sheep, whole herds of cattle. Thank God for clothes! There was but one manufactory of Gobelin tapestry, and that was at Paris, under the control of the government; and the fabrics were woven for royal families only. But in all the earth there are factories going day and night, weaving a more wonderful fabric than royal tapestry for us, the King's children. The cotton plantation sends us socks. The flax-field sends us linen. The sheep's wool supplies us cloaks. The sable and the ermine yield us furs. What coats, what hats, what shoes, what mufflers it takes to supply you all your life!

THANK GOD for our families. Where did you get your families from? "God setteth the solitary in families." Have you a companion who is kind, gentle, sympathetic, helpful—sympathetic with all your joys and sorrows? Was it good luck or the merry sleigh-ride that gave her to you? No. Prov. 19: 14: "A prudent wife is from the Lord." Have you children round about your table? Have they eyesight, when so many have been born blind? Have they hearing, when so many have been born deaf? Can they talk and sing, when so many have been born dumb? Have they the use of leg and foot, when so many have been born cripples? Who gave you those glad, healthy, romping children? How much will you take for them? If I should offer you the Kohinoor Diamond for one, Chatsworth Park for another, and ten million dollars for another, you would laugh me to scorn! You would not sell the eldest one, because it is the first born; you would not sell the youngest one, because it is the youngest and the pet: nor this one, because it is the very image of its father; nor that one, because it looks like its mother; nor this one, because it has always been sick, and you especially love it; nor that one, because it is so healthful that you could not think of giving it up.

PRAISE ye the Lord! Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord! Let the people come out from their stores, houses and offices, from the rice fields. Thank God that so many of the boys have got home from Cuba and the unhealthy encampments, and for the hope that soon many more may come. Thank God for Spanish navy sunk, and for Dewey, and Sampson, and Schley, and Hobson, and Shafter, and Joseph Wheeler, and Fitzhugh Lee, and General Miles, and fifty thousand boys as brave as any we have mentioned. God bless the reunited homes, and may he look upon the graves of all the fallen, and then solace their bereft households.

PRAISE ye the Lord! Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord! Let the people come out from the rice-fields of the Carolinas, from Lowell factories, and off from Western prairies, and up from Pennsylvania coal mines, and out from Oregon forests, and in from the whale ships of New London and Cape Ann, and wherever God's light shines, and God's rain descends, and God's mercy broods, let thanksgiving arise! Chorus! Chorus! "He hath not dealt so with any other nation, and as for his judgments we have not known them."

SING, whistle, laugh! Joy is better than cash. Look at the lot of those who have fewer blessings, not at the additional happiness of those who have more. If you have no religious faith, make it your business to get hold of enough to make you feel there is something to be sought for in this life higher than its temporary and fading advantages. There is something better than happiness, and that is usefulness.

All About Our Premium Offers.

THE attention of subscribers is respectfully directed to our remarkable premium propositions. Never before have we had such a surprisingly varied and unusually attractive array.

In the first place, we mention, of course, our Revised Teachers' Bible in Verse Form. Heretofore the Revised Bible was issued only in paragraph form, which rendered it very unfamiliar to the eye, and made it exceptionally difficult to find any particular passage. Then there were no helps, and only a very few had references, while the price was unreasonably high.

But all this has been done away with by the enterprise of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our Revised Bible is in verse form; it has sub-divisions conforming precisely to those in the Authorized Version; it has full references, Teachers' Helps, a Word Book, including Concordance, and the usual number of maps. But over and above all, the price has been brought down so that we offer this superior and exceptionally helpful book in divinity circuit, red under gold edges, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at only $2.00.

Now, if you have another dollar to spare, and can make it convenient to send us $3.00, we will send you a Revised Bible, divinity circuit, with leather-lining, and thumb-index, particularly attractive and specially prepared with a view to durability. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of course, goes with it for a year, at the price mentioned. The richer Bible is worth three of the other, if lasting qualities and thumb-index, leather lining, and a soft, velvety, flexible book have any special attractions for you. We always prepay express charges.

All that we have said about the Revised Bible is also applicable to our Authorized Version. You may have the one or the other at the same price. Both of them are printed from large, long primer type. The binding is identical. The same difference is maintained between the $2.00 and the $3.00 propositions. If you want to know just how large a book we offer, take a rule and measure from top to bottom 9 inches, and from right to left 13½ inches, and the space thus outlined indicates the exact size of our Bibles when open. They are very handy, very superior, very legible, and very durable; the best the market affords.

Next in order is, of course, the Art Bible, with its 852 pictures and its large type. Pictures are object lessons which frequently prove of more assistance to a correct understanding than long and tedious lectures, and the memory is far more apt to retain what the eye has seen than what the ear has heard. This beautiful book is elegantly bound in divinity circuit, American levant, red under gold edges, and can be sent (owing to our purchase of 25,000 of them), with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year for only $3.50. It would be cheap at double the price. Text only—no references.

Margaret E. Sangster has prepared for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this year the crowning effort of her long and honored literary career, and she has christened it "The Art of Home-Making." It is truly a fine book, and does great credit to this warm-hearted, genial authoress who has given months of patient, careful and prayerful toil to the preparation of this helpful, inspiring and beautiful volume. It is a fine specimen of modern book-making, bound in olive silk-finished cloth, with red and gilt decoration, and measures when open x 15 1-2 inches. Sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, all charges prepaid, for only $2.00.

"Around the World with Eyes Wide Open," is a book among books, and Dr. Tupper, its author, has exercised remarkable skill in its preparation, whether considered from a literary or artistic standpoint. Never was a more attractive book on travel given to the world, and at ten times the price. In its pages we find the world as it is to-day, pictorially and described, and Palestine of more time can be studied to better advantage in this volume than by means of a hurried trip, such as was recently taken by the German Emperor. This book is the same size as "The Art of Home-Making" described above, and contains 464 pages, bound in linen cloth, with white parelling and rich red and gold decoration. No book that we have ever offered more rapidly or gives greater satisfaction. "Around the World with Eyes Wide Open", together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, all charges prepaid, only $2.00.

The next in order are our Libraries No. 2 and No. 3, each consisting of ten volumes beautifully bound in silk-finished cloth or vellum, and aggregating 3,100 pages. The ten books and book-case weigh nearly six pounds, all of which are sent, all charges prepaid, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at only $3.00. The fact that we have sold nearly 200,000 of these libraries demonstrates their popularity without further comment. Remember, there are 3,100 books in each Library, large type, handsomely printed and elegantly bound. Both of these ten books and book-case, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are sent charges prepaid, for $3.00—surely a marvelous offer that will not long go begging.

Finally, we offer the Hon. Wm. J. Thayer's heart-stirring book "Onward to Fame and Fortune." It is full of action, full of enthusiasm, full of inspiration. It reads from cover to cover reads like a romance. It contains nearly 500 pages, and is handsomely bound in Turkey red, with ornamental side and back stamp, same size as "Around the Word with Eyes Wide Open" and "The Art of Home-Making." It is sent, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for one year for only $2.00. You may believe us when we say that you cannot make a mistake by selecting this book of energizing, vitalizing, soul inspiring power.

Best of All.

To any and every subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will accept any of the above offers, if he will add One Dollar to the amount called for by the proposition selected, we will send, for one whole year, THE COSMOPOLITAN every month, and Success every week—52 times.

Or, if already a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, send $1.00 more for these two publications. It will not do to send half the amount for either one of the two. You may have each publication sent to a different address, or both to the same address, without extra charge.

ISBANDING CUBA'S ARMY.

NE of the most important steps in the direction of Cuban pacification is the disbandment of the patriot army, which our government has seen fit to en- ce. It was found that the presence of ge bodies of armed Cubans in the cities suburbs, at a time when Spanish evac- ion was in progress, was provocative of order, and a continual menace to pub- peace and security. Our tary commanders have ferred with the Cuban y leaders, and the latter e been assured that their troops will dis- d and return peace- to their farms. government will ply them with ons until they raise crops r themselves. neral Calixto rcia, the fore- st advocate of ban disarma- nt and dis- dment, has n to his side nerals Gomez, huza, Sanguil- Villalon, and er leaders of peace party: l these men, ether with a committee repre- ting the Cu- army, will go Washington rtly to confer h our govern- nt concerning the ure status of the riot troops and the erests of the island erally. Already the oans are beginning to realize the antages of confidence in Amer- honor and obedience to Amer- n rule. General Wood, the U. S. itary Governor of Santiago, has ointed General Perez, of the ban army. Mayor of Guantan- o, the richest and most import- district in Santiago Province. rez has disbanded his troops. red their arms in the arsenal, sent the men to their farms. In vana, unfortunately, the condi- ns are not so cheerful, and the anish soldier is realizing the ty of trusting to Spanish prom- s and Spanish honor. For many nths past these troops have not n paid, the promissory notes en by Blanco being a mere sub- uge to gain time. Finally, the den Publico (military guard of vana), revolted and attacked neral Arolas, the Military Gov- or, and his staff. The rebellion s suppressed by prompt meas- s, and the men disarmed. It is no longer t Cuban troops who are Spain's most aded enemies, but her own soldiers, who r being subjected to many hardships. e at last been victimized by the very lers for whom, only a short time ago, y were ready to lay down their lives. s natural that they should resent such tment. When they contrast it with t treatment the men are receiving who sted the United States, they must re- e how great is the difference between two powers. It is much to be wished t men who are in the service of sin ld note the same contrast, while they change masters.

Romance of a Circular.

A girl's ingenious scheme to find a lost lover has resulted in a marriage lately. The girl comes from Duisburg on the Rhine. She has a married sister who is respectably settled in Chicago. This lady welcomed her sister when she arrived and received her into her home. The newly-arrived girl told her sister that her chief object in coming to the United States, was to find a lover to whom she had promised herself as a child in Germany. He had been here for several years, but she had heard nothing of him except that he was living somewhere in Illinois. She soon discovered that Illinois was a vaguer address than she had realized when in Germany; but she did not abandon hope of finding her boy lover. She secured a list of all the towns in the State, and determined to write to each of them. Her letter, written in German, simply announced her arrival and gave her address, with a request that if it reached her lover's hands he would write her. Many of these letters were returned to her endorsed "unclaimed", but eventually one that she sent to Rockford, was delivered to the right man and he presented himself promptly at the Chicago home and claimed his bride. The girl did not ask him to come to her, or to marry her; she seems to have believed that nothing more was necessary than to let him know that she was near him, and his own love would do the rest. If seekers after Christ had the same confidence in him, they would find rest and peace much more speedily than they do.

If ye seek him he will be found of you (II. Chron. 15: 2).

A Hero in Trouble.

The judge of the Court of General Sessions, in New York, had to perform a painful duty last week. A man was brought before him under indictment by the Grand Jury for forgery and theft, who had performed heroic service in the recent war. He has been in the army for twenty years and whenever he had opportunity he distinguished himself by faithful service. He went to Cuba in the Third United States Cavalry and was present at the battle of El Caney, where he showed such heroic qualities and fought so bravely, that he was made a sergeant. But the man's moral record was a painful contrast to his military record. The offence which brought him into court, was stealing a horse and the forgery of three checks on the Fifth Avenue Bank. He pleaded guilty to both charges and was sentenced to two years in State Prison. He found that his services to his country could not atone for his crimes. There is reason to fear that at the last great judgment many will be similarly disconcerted. Their gifts to charities, and to Christ's cause will not avail them if their sins have not been forgiven through faith in Christ.

Then will I profess unto them I never knew you. Depart from me ye that work iniquity (Matt. 7: 23).

Extraordinary Cures.

A remarkable story of cures, which are called miraculous, comes from Philadelphia to the New York Herald. In the old Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter, the body of the venerable Bishop Neuman is buried. The people of his church had for many years before his death an exalted opinion of his piety. They believed that his power to help them did not cease with his death, but rather was increased. Accordingly a man, whose hand had been lamed by an accident, and was perfectly useless to him, went to the church, where the Bishop's body lay in state, and placed it on the hand of the dead man. Instantly he declared that it was cured, and he could use it as well as before the accident. A woman, whose arm was paralyzed, formed one of the procession, which passed the casket on the next day. She was firmly convinced that if she could touch the body, her arm would be restored. She did so, and held her arm up before the crowd in the church as proof that it was cured. Since the burial, crowds of sufferers have visited the tomb. The detailed records of forty cases of cure of various maladies have been prepared as evidence of "the efficacy of the bishop's power." It would be more correct to say that they were evidence of the power of faith, for the dead bishop could do nothing for the sufferers. They would have been cured just as surely if they had placed the same faith in a stick or a stone. People often speak slightingly of the power of faith, but it is evidently a mighty power, apart from its object. We need not wonder that it avails to transform life and character when it is centred in Christ, who delights to honor it.

All things are possible to him that believeth (Mark 9: 23).

A Grateful Protegee.

A romantic story respecting a man well-known in New York and other American cities is brought by a traveler just returned from Munich. The man in question was a lecturer on Socialism. He was a radical believer in Socialist doctrines, but he was by birth an aristocrat, and shrank from association with the very people whose interests he professed to have at heart. Not so, however, his wife. She was continually taking up cases of poverty and rendering practical help. Many a girl was educated at her expense and enabled to enter a profession. Some time ago the couple went back to Russia to claim a fortune which had been inherited by the husband. He invested it in mining stocks, which proved worthless, and he lost it all. Then he obtained a situation in a bank at Munich, where he earned a small salary, which with rigid economy sufficed for the support of himself and his wife. His business brought him in contact with a wealthy banker in Berlin, who casually mentioned the name of the Munich clerk in conversation with his wife. She was immediately interested, for it was to a lady of that name that she was indebted for the education and position in society by which she met her husband. She wrote to the clerk's wife, and found that she was her early benefactress. Learning of her straitened circumstances, the banker's wife has placed a large sum of money at her disposal, and has insisted that if she does not use the principal, she shall at least have the income of it to make her life comfortable. If such gratitude were shown by the Christian toward Christ, whose claims are infinitely greater, his cause would never lack funds.

Albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self (Philemon 19).

Owns a Town.

A singular proof of confidence is reported in a Kansas journal. It states that the whole of the people of David, I. T., have transferred their property to Mrs. A. J. Blackwell of that town. It appears that a suit in the Northern Judicial District Court of the Indian Territory has recently been decided, after long delay. The decision pronounces the white settlers intruders and confiscates all the property they own. There are three hundred of these white owners, who have been settled there for four years, and have built houses, some of which are very valuable. They postponed the hearing of the suit from time to time, knowing that it would probably be decided against them. When finally it could be delayed no longer, they protected themselves against such a decision as has been given, by transferring their property to Mrs. Blackwell who, as an Indian, has a right to own property in the territory. It is expected that the country will eventually be allotted, and then the whites will regain the property they have confided to Mrs. Blackwell's keeping. This, of course, depends on her integrity and on her ability to hold the property for them. Evidently they are satisfied on both points for there is not a house in the whole town that is not owned by her. If people would exercise such faith in Christ they would be safe from all apprehension.

I know in whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day (II. Tim. 1: 12).

THE BELATED.. THANKSGIVING

Written for
"The Christian Herald" by
MRS. A. E. C. MASKELL

IT was the eve before Thanksgiving. An old farmer and his wife sat at the tea-table, helping themselves to bread and butter and canned peaches, ever and anon taking sips of fragrant tea, that delightful beverage of old age.

Both wore glasses, and were white-haired, while many deep wrinkles furrowed brows and cheeks.

Everything was scrupulously clean, from the rag carpet on the floor to the snowy cloth upon the table, and the old farmer's and his wife's attire. The fire blazed cheerfully in the brightly-polished cook-stove, and the setting sun was throwing a stream of glory right through the two western windows, until it rested upon the picture of a bright, pretty boy on the opposite wall.

"How the sun lights up our boy tonight," said the old farmer, in a quavering voice.

His wife turned in her chair and looked long and earnestly at the picture; then, with a deep sigh, resumed her supper without saying a word.

"Didn't I see Polly Tompkins come in here this afternoon?" asked the farmer.

"Yes; she came over here to invite you and me over to her house to-morrow to a Thanksgivin' dinner."

"That was kind. What did you tell her?"

"I told her we wasn't makin' Thanksgivin' dinners or goin' to any."

"Surely there could be no harm in going over there to dinner."

"No harm, to be sure," she cried out in a sharp voice; "but what have we got to be thankful fur, Sam Sutton? What have we got to be thankful fur?"

"I know, not much," he answered, meekly.

"And so I told Polly Tompkins, I told her as soon as I could find something to be thankful fur, I'd go out to Thanksgivin' dinners, and make some of my own, too."

"What did she say?"

"Why, she undertook to say that we had many things to be thankful fur."

"You don't say," said the old man, lifting up his pale blue eyes in amazement.

"Yes, she said there be many people poorer off than we be, and that many an old critter like us is all crippled up with rheumatiz or something or tother, while we can go 'bout and do all our own work."

"So we can," said the old man, bringing his fist with a loud thump down upon the table.

"Be careful, or you'll splash your tea on the clean table-cloth. Then I asked her if she'd think she had anything to be thankful fur, if she had lost her old homestead that she was born and raised in, and all the dumb critters we loved so well, and all our children taken from us but the youngest, and he purtiest and sweetest of 'em all, to run away and go to sea, leaving us alone in our old age?"

"What did she say?"

"Why, she sniffed a little. You know Polly's a proper hand to cry when she hears anything affectin'. If she'd hed as much trouble as us she couldn't cry. My tears have been frozen to ice ever since we got up that morning and found our boy gone."

"How long has it been, Sally?"

"Your mem'ry never was worth a row of pins. It has been ten long years sence we woke up on Thanksgivin' mornin' and found we had no boy. I've never hed anything to be thankful fur since.

"He's not livin', or he'd been home to his mother long 'fore this. He wus our baby, Sam, and orter to have staid with us as long as we lived."

"There's no gratitude in children nowadays. All they think parents are made fur is to wait on and do fur them. They never think of doin' anything in return."

"Ah! well, our Joe was as good as the common run of boys. I wouldn't have thought, though, he'd been so cruel as to never write to us, that is, if he be livin', which I don't believe he is. I got all his clothes out of the old chist agin yesterday, and brushed 'em up. I'm sure I don't know what I've been keepin' 'em fur. He'd be too big fur 'em now, If we hed a family of growed-up sons and darters married and away from home, like Polly Tompkins, I reckon we'd take some stock in Thanksgivin', too."

"What are we goin' to hev fur dinner to-morrow, Sally?"

"The same as we allus do, I specks—biled pork and taters. When we want an extry dinner, it won't be Thanksgivin', fur I shall never forgit how little Joe helped me git that last Thanksgivin' dinner, and then went off without eatin' a mouthful."

"Do you remember, Sally, how he liked to take my hand and go out with me to hunt flowers fur muzzer?"

"Sam, don't! Oh, don't!"

"And do you mind the day he wus twelve years old, how he went out and bought you that handsome shawl from money he'd been savin' in his little bank for a hull year?"

"Oh, Sam, don't!"

"Yes, he was proper fond of you, and me, too. He was an affectionate boy, Sally."

"Yes; Oh, Sam, yes.

"And it beats the flinders what made him run away. Perhaps we wan't kind enough to him, Sally?"

"I remember that time he wanted to go a-gunnin', Sam, and I hid your gun. I wus afeared he would git killed."

"And I remember how he wanted a hoss and buggy, and I said I couldn't afford it; but I was afeared it would lead him into bad company, wus all," said the old man.

"But you wus right about the buggy, Sam; so wus I about the gun. We knew what wus best for a boy of that age."

"Yas; it was only the boy's wild natur. It seemed he couldn't be tamed. I hed a brother like that, once."

"Joe wusn't like your brother Jack, Sam. Joe wus lovin' and affectionate. Why, he'd never bear to see a tear in my eyes; if he did, he'd come and wipe it away with his little apron."

"I wonder what he'd say if he'd come home and find us so old and gray-headed? We wus stout, and rosy, and black-haired when he went away, Sally!"

"He'll never come now, Sam. He's dead, 'long with the rest of 'em, only we don't know where he's buried. No, Sam Sutton, he'll not come now. I've give up that hope long ago."

"May be so, Sally; may be so."

"And now we'd better get up, and I'll wash the dishes. It don't do no good talking about little Joe any more."

And the old couple, with dreary sighs and bitter hearts, settled themselves away for the evening without returning any thanks to the great Giver of every good gift for mercies bestowed.

The same way the next morning. There was no glad light in their old eyes, no bustle in their movements. They commenced the day with no thanks or thoughts to God, whom they owed so much. The church bells rang out merrily in the clear, frosty air, and carriage loads of happy people passed the old couple's door on their way to church.

"Let 'em go; they have something to be thankful fur," said the old woman, bitterly, as she plied her knitting needles swiftly.

"Something to be thankful fur," echoed the old man.

An hour or two and church was out, and people were going to their festive boards. Twelve o'clock struck; then one; and still the old woman knit.

"Are you goin' to git any dinner, Sally?" meekly inquired the old man.

"I don't feel like it to-day, I don't want any dinner. If you want something to eat, go down cellar and help yourself."

"You didn't bake any cakes or pies yisterday, did you, Sally?"

"No; I couldn't. My heart was too sore. But you'll find something down there. There's plenty of bread, and sass, and butter, and cold taters."

At this moment there came a footfall on the doorstep, a strange, heavy foot, then the latch was raised, and a tall man with a pale face and heavy whiskers stood before them.

The old man paused on his way to the cellar door, and stared at the stranger.

The old woman trembled, and her knitting fell in her lap, while her eyes were riveted upon the stranger.

The stranger smiled, and with a glad cry of "Mother", sprang forward, knelt upon the floor and laid his shaggy head in her lap.

But poor woman! It was too much for her. She fell over in a dead faint. She came to after awhile, and looking up with doubt said: "No, no, it can't be little Joe."

"Mother, don't you remember how I helped you catch the white gobbler for Thanksgiving ten years ago?"

"Yes, it was a white one. But y don't look like my Joe. He was ro cheeked, and no whiskers."

"But I'm a man now, mother dear, a have come home to stay with you a father. I've come home to work for yo mother," and he bared his right ar where, when but a little boy, contrary her wishes, he had the initials of l name tatooed in India ink. There it w plain enough, J. S. S.

"It's him, It's him!" shouted the o woman, laying her face on the letters, a kissing them over and over again.

"God be thanked," said the old man

"But where is dinner? I haven't h a mouthful since early this morning. I traveled on foot for eight hours that might eat Thanksgiving dinner with you

"We have never had a Thanksgivi dinner since you left home," groaned t mother. "God is good after all, and I'd been thankin' Him like I ort, y wouldn't have found us unprepared. I hurry up, father, kill a nice fat pullet a dress it, and we'll roast it and have Thanksgivin' dinner yit. I'll pare t pertaters and fry some crisp doughn jist like you loved 'em when you wus little boy, Joe Dinner will be late, to sure, but you shall have a bowl of bre and milk to stay your appetite until it ready;" and, as she pared her potato she would ever and anon wipe her han on her apron and go over her boy and lay them caref ingly on his black, shag locks.

"We've something to thankful fur, now, father, a its worth while gittin Thanl givin' dinner," she said, as s bustled around, "though we orter give thanks before. I been so stubborn all the years that I wonder the Lo ever let me live at all, a way to see this happy day

"Yes, mother, we've a gre deal to be thankful for—y and father and I," and J gazed fondly from one to t other. "I've been a dread bad boy and a wicked man I didn't care for anything l badness until Jesus came a saved me. If it hadn't be for Him, I would have be eating husks yet."

"And, tell me, was it Jes that sent you home to yo poor old father and mothe she asked, quaveringly.

"Yes, it was no one e but Jesus, mother, for if hadn't been converted, shouldn't have thought of co ing home, or, if I had, drow ed the desire in strong dri or reckless levity. But f God's care all these yea through all my wickedness, wouldn't have been he to-day."

"Is that so, Joe? God surely has be better to us than we deserve. For these many years we thought, your fath and I, that God had been dealing t harshly with us, and that we had nuthi to be thankful fur, and I lost my religi worrying about you—and your father a I tried to bury our sorrow in our ov hearts and have nuthin' to do with t world outside, but I see now that God h been with us all the time. I sometim dreamed I might have my boy back agi sometime, but I never thought he'd con back converted. Oh! God is too good and now the old lady broke down a sobbed, while her husband and her s wiped away the tears of sympathy fro their own eyes.

The dinner was a grand success. J asked a blessing at the table—told t Lord how much they all had to be than ful for, and then they all ate heartily.

That evening as Polly Tompkins w passing the house, Sally Sutton haste to the door and shouted gleefully: "W did have a Thanksgivin dinner, Poll Our boy has come home—our Joe, y know—and there is nobody in the wor got more to be thankful fur than me a Sam, and we had all the time, but didn know it—and I want you to tell ever body, and bring all the neighbors arou this evening to see our Joe. You'll no of you know him, he's so big and han some," and she went back into the hous laughing joyfully.

"THE DINNER WAS A GRAND SUCCESS."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

·HANKSGIVING.... ....AT GRANDPA'S

KINSFOLK from far and near come to Grandpa's at Thanksgiving. Children and grandchildren, uncles and aunts, even isins, several degrees removed, find ir way to the big, hospitable farmise, and for a week before the event- f day, guests are arriving. Every ok and cranny of sleeping-room comes requisition; the house overflows with ies and young people generally. The is jubilant with song and laughter. ndpa and Grandma hear all their old orites and all the new Gospel hymns g to their hearts' content in fresh, glad, ng voices. Hide-and-seek, Ring-a- ry, and Blindman's Buff are in order ry evening. Much corn-popping and stnut-roasting goes on, interspersed h a little love-making.

Vas any place ever so fragrant of good gs, so wholesome and cheerful as ndpa's? The smell of apples greets on the threshold; from the kitchen e spicy whiffs, aromatic and appeng; lavender-scented beds infuse your nbers with dreams of old-fashioned dens. Great bunches of chrysanthems in vases on parlor and sitting-room ntels breathe tribute to passing autumn. e very atmosphere welcomes you: the ters of shiny red apples beam on you: subtle scent of roasting chestnuts minds you that the noble trees on the side have contributed to your entertment. Out in the backyard, among bee-hives (Ah! what crystal-clear ey they yield for your buckwheats!), al among the leafless rose and lilac and et syringa bushes, the lordly gobbler sits before you, pluming himself upon part he will play in the feast. Cocks a crowing, hens are cackling proudly. at would become of Thanksgiving ner should Mrs Cluck decline to lay re eggs?

Grandma's kitchen! Was there ever h a delightful place? Big and sunny is, with festoons of scarlet peppers, asures of golden pumpkins, shining s and pans, singing kettles, mighty, ring stove—and a whole colony of cks! Such merry cooks! One beauty Thanksgiving dinner at Grandpa's is fun the young folks have in helping get it. Grandma loves to have them und her, and she lets who will try their d at pie and pudding-making. Rosy sies, with sleeves rolled up above pled elbows, dabble in dough-trays, al work wonders in crisp pastries, and thsome cookies and candies; tall lads, h aprons pinned on by pretty cousins, ld egg-beaters and dough-breaks, if with finished culinary skill, with uneptional zeal and muscle. "Too many cks spoil the broth," laughs Grandma, en the stuffing and basting of the great ler himself is on hand. Lard and flour go waste—"But," says Grandma, "they'll er be young but once, and the fun— l the experience—is worth it. They'll er be the worse husbands and wives f their romps in this kitchen."

aying the table and bringing in Thanksing dinner is a weighty and a merry emony, which the young folks insist on forming after their own fashion. That ner-table is a composite affair, with its old-fashioned china, regulation pumpkin-pie, doughnuts and other homely dainties, and its up-to-date frivolities introduced by city grand-children, nephews, nieces and cousins, who will have absurd "favors" at all plates—ridiculous brownies stuffed with home-made candies for the little folks and hand-painted cards as funny as comic valentines for the grown folks.

One feature of Thanksgiving at Grandpa's none of us can ever forget—even when Grandpa's and Grandma's kind lips are silent forever. It is the little grace and prayer that these two old folks always say together when we are all gathered around the Thanksgiving table. They thank God so simply and earnestly for the garnered blessings of the year, for our country's prosperity, for having us all there together; and they pray that we may all be with them again next year. This Thanksgiving, there will be a quiver in the dear old voices, tears in the aged eyes, for their best-beloved, a young grandson (last year the gayest and the bonniest of all), sleeps his last sleep in Santiago. But they will master their emotions—they have done things like that before—and go on bravely and cheerily, doing their best to make us all happy, and grateful for Thanksgiving time.

THE KING OF THE THANKSGIVING FEAST.

Pumpkin-pie and turkey in New England,
Venison and bear-meat in the West,
"Possum and sweet taters" in the Southland,
Fruit in Ponce, of all kinds—which is best?

The Marvelous Pie.

A little woman writes to the MAIL-BAG (and her question has been referred to this department), to know what sort of uncanny pie was described by Mother Goose in "Sing a Song of Sixpence." She has always understood that birds in a pie are there to be eaten and not to make music; yet she is informed that Mother Goose was by no means a silly old lady, but a very wise one, who hid deep meanings in absurd sayings. The four-and-twenty black birds in the remarkable pie are the twenty-four hours—or so we have heard: the bottom of the pie represents the earth; the top crust the sky; the opening of the pie the dawn when birds sing and nature sets a "dainty dish" before the king, the sun, who, in his counting-room, the sky, counts out his money, the golden sunbeams. The queen in the parlor, eating bread and honey, is the moon, regaling herself with moonlight and starlight. The clothes, which the maid in the garden hangs out, are clouds. The little bird, which nips off her nose, is sunset. This is what some folks say Mother Goose meant, but whether she did or not, we cannot state of our own knowledge. She may have been only inditing a pretty jingle to rock the baby to sleep by—a very sensible purpose, needing no excuse or occult interpretation.

Nay, 'tis not the board round which we gather,
'Tis the thankful spirit makes the feast.
From Alaska unto Cuban waters,
From the Eastern ocean to the West,
Let us be a band of loving brothers
In our land with peace and plenty blest.

A King's Love for Children.

Henry IV. would have his children call him "papa" or "father," and not "Sire" or "Your Majesty," which was the new fashion introduced by Catherine de Medici. He used frequently to join in their amusements; and one day, when this restorer of France and peacemaker of all Europe was going on all-fours with the Dauphin, his son, on his back, an ambassador suddenly entered the apartment and surprised him in this attitude. The monarch, without moving from it, said to him, "Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, have you any children?" "Yes, sire," replied he. "Very well, then you understand: I shall finish my race around my chamber."

A TROPICAL THANKSGIVING TABLE.

A HARVEST HYMN.

LORD, in thy name thy servants plead
And thou has sworn to hear;
Thine is the harvest, thine the seed,
The fresh and fading year.

The former and the latter rain,
The summer sun and air,
The green ear and the golden grain,
All thine are ours by prayer.

Thine too by right, and ours by grace,
The wondrous growth unseen,
The hopes that soothe, the fears that brace,
The love that shines serene.

So grant the precious things brought forth
By sun and moon below,
That thee in thy new heaven and earth,
We never may forego.

JOHN KEBLE.

"A MENDING THE FIRE."

DID two people ever agree on how to make or mend a fire? And is not the universal desire "to chunk the fire," and divergent tastes and methods in applying the poker to hickory logs, as frequent occasions of heart-burnings as of tinder-burnings? Have any of our readers ever seen the members of a family almost—if not quite—quarrel over the making, and mending, and poking of a fire? "That fire'll never burn in the world," says one, "with all the kindling underneath and none on top. You should stick bits of shavings and fat pine between the logs, so there'll be a draft, and the wood will catch." "Why don't you put your kindling under the logs, where it'll do the most good, instead of spreading it all over the fireplace?" "I had just fixed that fire, and now you've chunked it!" And so the battle rages, and the perturbed hickory logs have no chance to settle themselves into a hearty blaze. Does this rule follow in other affairs of home life? Do we take it impatiently when our little plans are spoiled? Are we always spoiling somebody else's little plan? Perhaps the greatest good our careful labor was to accomplish was to be the kindly spirit in which we would take its seeming overthrow. Are we always advising, criticising, finding fault? Ah, let us give love's fire a chance to burn, that it may blaze cheerily and warm us.

A Tropical Thanksgiving.

This year, tables will be spread for American Thanksgiving dinners in Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and far Manila; and United States citizens will gather around boards loaded with tropical fruits and blossoms, while bird-songs float in through open windows. There will be strange dishes, spiced as for Spanish palates; the ever-familiar oyster, though not always, perhaps, served "just as we had him at home;" dainty fish with unpronounceable names; gamey meats, succulent with juices of tropical wildwoods—and, perhaps, brought into requisition like the wild turkeys that graced America's first Thanksgiving; and marvelous aromatic coffee, as made in coffee-lands.

Perhaps there may be little besides the fruits and flowers in the unhappy countries where gaunt famine and misrule have stalked hand-in-hand so long; many of our boys may be eating hard-tack and salt fish and gathering desert from the orange and mango trees and guava bushes. But of one thing we may be sure: wherever the American citizen is found, and however humble his feast, he will render thanks to God for mercies to his country. And of another thing we may be sure: around all the Thanksgiving tables at home, our soldiers and sailors, through whom victory and peace are ours, will be remembered when we thank God for his blessings to America.

New Thanksgiving Obligations.

What the Festival May be Made to Mean to Our Adopted Citizens.

"THANKSGIVING"—a name now applied to a national festival—had its beginning in the Mayflower country in the days of the precisioners and of Massasoit, the peaceful king of Pokanoket. It followed the Hebraic customs. Into it entered the noblest of traditions. Had not John Howland sung the song of ancient faith in the wild storm that rocked the shallop of the Mayflower in its dreary voyage from Provincetown Bay?

> Amid the storm they sung,
> And the stars heard and the sea,
> And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rung

Had not Governor Bradford—if the legend be a true one—dealt out five kernels of corn as a ration to each of the famishing pilgrims in the year of the great necessity? This event is still celebrated in New England by placing five kernels of corn under the Thanksgiving dinner plate. Was not the remembered prophecy of Robinson, of Leyden, that "new light" should break forth "from the word" in the wilderness being fulfilled?

The peaceful days of Massasoit passed, and he who had protected Roger Williams in the winter of that Quaker's exile, slept with his fathers, perhaps amid the red oaks of Mt. Hope lands. The days of King Philip passed, the tragic times of Tuspuquin and the Indian race disappeared. The Plymouth colony grew; the precisioners had brought with them the Cromwellian tradition of "No Christmas," and the Thanksgiving became the Pilgrim and Puritan festival, following the example of the Hebrew Feast of Tabernacles. The war for the Union caused the festival to become national.

The festival suited well the habits and customs of New England and the West. The Middle West is but the larger New England. In the South, Christmas and New Years were the popular festivals of the planters, and the new holiday gained favor slowly. The historic pride in the festival still adheres most closely to New England and the West. The scenes of the great legends of the day are there; the old songs of the firesides of the family gatherings spring from the New England heart.

New England is changing, and a new Thanksgiving obligation comes to her, and to the West, and to all the States with the change. In New England country neighborhoods are characterized in many places by abandoned farms, churches and schoolhouses. The boys have left the farm for the cities and the West. The girls have gone to the schools of higher culture, or to the factories in the towns and the stores in the cities.

But suddenly, as if spontaneously, the thousands of abandoned New England farms are being purchased. By whom? Not by the Nova Scotians or French Canadians, but by the Portuguese and Italians. These people, as a rule, bring with them religious bigotry, and they find in return race prejudice.

The Pilgrim and Puritan stock of New England are slow to learn the true meaning of the sermon on the Mount of Beatitudes. The Puritan churches have slowly come to celebrate the Christmas festival. In this they have left the past. But to the new population of New England, from Lisbon and Genoa, Thanksgiving has little significance; its legends are unlearned by them, and are less than those of the Argonauts, Æneas, Romulus and Remus. What is true of New England is partly true of some of the older portions of the West, and will be true of our new territory.

The new people from the sunny skies on the Mediterranean have come to the rocky lands of New England to stay and to vote. They are prosperous on farms where the descendants of the old New England families have failed. They go to their own newly builded church amid the old Puritan towers.

Have these people worth and promise? Go for an answer to the lands of the Amazon, and to the pampas of the Argentine Republic. Are they not developing noble empires there; empires that it is safe to predict will be among the wonders of the world in the twentieth century? Are they not thrifty there, industrious, moral, progressive?

If this be so, these immigrants here should be won to a knowledge of American traditions, and be taught that as Americans they share in the harvests of the heroes of the northern lands of the Pilgrims, and the western lands of the pioneers. They bring to us a new obligation. We are their brothers, their keepers.

These people open their Christmas doors to the native Americans. They include their employers in their ancient festival of good-will and gifts. The spirit is promising.

In return ought not native Americans to give up their old race prejudices and make Thanksgiving day not a scolding day on the sins of the times, but a day that shall more and more glorify the names of the heroes of faith, liberty, equality and peace? Ought not our churches, and halls, and tables on that day to be made inviting to the Latin race as well as our own? Have we not a new mission here?

Our adopted citizens doubtless have much to learn, but the times demand that we as Americans should more and more rise to our larger obligations. The new Thanksgiving proclamation should ring with that true sentiment that finds a place on a Boston monument: "My country is the world, and my countrymen are all mankind!" Bigotry and race prejudice would alike disappear before such a spirit that arises to meet the new needs of the hour. The new Thanksgiving can thus be made national, and lead men to vote their consciences as of old. Let Thanksgiving, as at the Hebrew festival, teach the faith of the creators of liberty, who bowed the heavens, and whose will was to advance the kingdom of God.

HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH.

BE WITH ME YET.

IN time of trial, care and pain;
In sorrow's dark, afflicting hour;
Oh! Father let thy goodness reign
And let thy love aye be my power.
E'en tho' my life unworthy be;
E'en tho' thy mercies I forget,
Hide not thy grace, I pray, from me—
Be with me yet, be with me yet.

Thy will be done upon this earth;
Thy honor first above the law.
Teach me to know more of thy worth—
To have for thee a greater awe.
Then when thy prophecy's fulfilled,
And my life's sun about to set;
When e'en this throbbing heart is stilled;
Be with me yet, be with me yet.

INHALER SENT FRE

Dr. Worst's Famous Catarrh Treatment Sent FRE to Readers of The Christian Herald.

Sufferers from Catarrh, Hard of Hearing, Bronchitis and Sore Thr Invited to Give the Treatment a Trial.

DR. E. J. WORST, ASHLAND, O.

Dr. E. J. Worst, of Ashland, Ohio, has made himself famous in a few years by a treatment for Catarrh and Bronchitis, of which he is the originator. While physicians generally were treating these very common diseases with sprays and douches, Dr. Worst perfected his dry air treatment. Air is the only agent that is fine enough to reach the air cells of the head and respiratory organs. It was the agent that carried the disease there, and it must be the one to successfully remove it. Vapors, sprays, and atomizers are all dangerous. Nature never intended them for the windpipe, and instantly repels them. When you get a drop of water down "the wrong way," how soon you cough and gag. This is because nature has placed a very sensitive valve in the windpipe, which closes the instant water in any form comes in contact with it. The only way to reach the inflamed membranes of these organs is by properly medicating the air you breathe. Not one person in fifty was ever cured by the old method of treating catarrh, now everywhere condemned. Dr. Worst has been so uniformly successful in curing patients, that he writes, asking us to make the following announcement

SPECIAL OFFER.

"I will for a short time mail any reader of The Christian Herald one of my new scientific Catarrh Inhalers and medicine for one year, on three days' trial, free. If it gives satisfaction, send me $1.00; if not, return it. It cures more cases than all others combined, hence this offer."

Thousands of people have been cured by Worst's treatment after suffering for many ye from Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, Colds, P and Roaring in the Head, Bronchitis, Sore Thr Headache, Partial Deafness, and all diseases of air passages. The treatment is indorsed and u by all leading physicians.

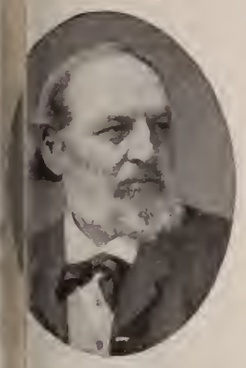
"CHRIST AND THE CHILDREN."

Plockhorst's Great Painting to Appear in "The Christian Herald" Next Week.

A RARE artistic pleasure is in store for all who read next week's CHRISTIAN HERALD. The edition will consist of one million copies, and it will be replete with good things, both literary and artistic, many of the most brilliant minds of the present day having contributed for that special purpose. Most striking of all will be the famous painting by Plockhorst, entitled "Christ and the Children," which forms the frontispiece of the first cover. It is a picture of surpassing grandeur and sweetness, rich in coloring and reverential in its artistic conception and execution. No one who values real art—especially consecrated art—should fail to take this opportunity of securing a copy of this world-famous painting which is to be reproduced by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.



BERNHARD PLOCKHORST.

Foremost among the religious painters of the present age, to Bernhard Plockhorst's creative mind and artistic genius the world is indebted for this beautiful picture. To Bible readers the world over there is no more fascinating passage in the life of our Saviour than that which represents him as calling the little children of Jerusalem to his side, and blessing them, notwithstanding the remonstrances of his disciples, who would fain have kept them back, as uselessly consuming the precious time of the Master. One can better imagine than describe the astonishment of the grave and reverent men when the Saviour of the world set up "in the midst of them" a little Judean lad—some fond mother's dark-haired, olive-skinned darling—and, with the boy at His knee, and tenderly the Divine hand resting on the curly head, gave expression to truths which lie at the very foundation of Christianity. The mothers' eyes filled with grateful tears, as the stern-browed, serious men pressed them back, but the voice of the Master rose in mild rebuke:

"Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God. . . . Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And He took them up in His arms and blessed them.

What is this immortal incident in the family sojourn of Jesus, which Plockhorst has preserved to the ages in his inspired canvas.

The painter of this great picture was born in 1832, in Brunswick, Germany, and began his career as a lithographer. He studied later at the Berlin Academy and in Dresden and Leipsic, and under Prof. Couture. Among his famous paintings are: "Returning from the Saviour's Grave," "Christ Walking on the Sea," and "The Guardian Angel."

LIFE A GAME OF BALL.

In one sense, life is a great "game of ball." We all choose sides, and gather into denominational and political parties. We take our places on the ball ground. Some are to pitch: they are the radicals. Some are to catch: they are the conservatives. Some are to strike: they are those fond of polemics and battle. Some are to run: they are the candidates. There are four hunks: youth, manhood, old age, and death. Some one takes the bat, lifts it, and strikes for the prize, and misses it, while the man who was behind catches it and goes in. This man takes his turn at the bat, sees the flying ball of success, takes good aim, and strikes it high, amid the clapping of all the spectators. We all have a chance at the ball. Some of us run to all the four hunks, from youth to manhood, from manhood to old age, from old age to death. At the first hunk we are pound with uncontrollable mirth; coming to the second, we run with a slower but stronger tread; coming to the third, our step is feeble; coming to the fourth, our breath entirely gives out. We throw down the bat on the black hunk of death; and in the evening catchers and pitchers go home to find the family gathered and the food prepared. So may we all find the candles lighted, and the tables set, and the old folks at home!

NEBRASKA'S CHRISTIAN STUDENTS.

EVANGELIST E. P. Hammond, who is now traveling in the West, has written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning the remarkable evidences of spiritual and material progress in Nebraska. He says:

I have never before realized that this was such an important State in our Union. There are only three per cent. in the State unable to read. Fine schools and colleges abound. Upon arrival here I delivered an address to the seven hundred pupils of the High School, between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one, and yesterday the Chancellor of the State University, Geo. E. MacLean, whom I knew when a boy in Rockville, Conn., invited me to speak to his students. It was a great pleasure to do so. The University has scientific collections valued at $60,000. The library of the institution has forty thousand volumes. The students number over two thousand, and the professors and instructors one hundred and seventy-five. I was pleased to find, as I mingled with these students, that a large proportion of them were evidently true Christians.

THE PEACE COMMISSION.

No definite conclusion has yet been reached by the joint Spanish-American Peace Commission in Paris. It is reported in the French capital that there is still danger of a rupture in the negotiations and that Spain will diplomatically resist to the last ditch the unconditional cession of the Philippines to the United States. It is further said our Government has consented to reimburse the Spanish Government for expenditures for improvements in the Philippines to the extent of one million dollars, and that if the Spanish Commissioners withdraw from the conferences at Paris, our Government will send an ultimatum to Madrid, demanding immediate possession of the islands.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Puzzling Question—That Blind Baby—A Case of Temper—Courtesies Between Betrothed People.

AMONG interesting letters which have lately come to my hand is one from a young lady at present engaged in teaching, but who hardly knows whether her duties to the home dear ones should let her go on or whether she should give up her profession and stay at home. Her mother is an invalid; there are young people in the family who are growing up and still at school. My correspondent, being the eldest, feels herself in a dilemma. If she goes away from home and earns money, she can hire a servant to help with some of the heavier work, and she can also furnish certain luxuries, which she cannot give if she remains with her dear ones. This girl has bravely given up the hope of going to college, because she could not afford the time to spend in that higher training, but felt that she must at once use her Normal School certificate and begin teaching.

I am quite sure that she will be guided to decide rightly whether to accept the remunerative position which is offered her away from home or to stay at home engaging in work which is not so well paid. In the one case, her family will have her presence; in the other, they will have what she can send them. There is not a thought of herself in the matter; she is only troubled about those she loves. My plan is always to take such an affair as this in plain words to the Lord and tell him all about it and ask him to guide my feet. There are crises in life when no human advice can help us, when we must simply go to Jesus and ask his aid, and doing this he somehow directs us, and we do not make a mistake What people used to call a providential opening generally comes to one, and the only thing one can do is to take hold of the duty which seems urgent with both hands. I trust this dear friend will be cheerful whatever she does. If she stays at home, she must not let herself regret that she did not do the other thing. Many of us make this mistake that when we have decided upon a course we turn round and say to ourselves, "What a pity it is I did not do something else." Now, it is never a pity that we did not do the other thing. If the Lord has guided, we are guided right.

A GREAT many correspondents are very much interested in the case of the mother whose baby is blind. One sends a very sweet little poem of which I quote a stanza or two:

I had a child, a beautiful boy,
Moulded in angel form,
Who filled my soul and life with joy
And made my heart grow warm.
But on one morning, early,
Before the dawn of day,
God sent his angels down to earth
Who bore my child away,
And all they left of that bright flower
Was the form so white and cold,
While thou hast with thee shining still
The presence of a soul.
Cherish while 'tis thine to hold
Love and guide its way.

A number of correspondents wished to be put in direct communication with this mother. I am not at liberty to send them her name and address unless she will write again and give me permission. If she does this I will be happy to oblige these kind and sympathetic friends.

"AGNES is a lovely girl," writes a correspondent, "but she has a fearful temper. To live with her is to live over a powder magazine. We have to be just as careful, all the time, not to annoy her or irritate her as we would be about matches if there were a fuse near, and an explosion sure to follow the lighting. Father, mother, the children, are terrorized by Agnes, for after one of her fits of temper she goes into a fit of depression, and is so remorsefully penitent that we are all uncomfortable. As for my father, he dreads scenes beyond anybody I ever saw, and since Agnes was a baby he has made us give in to her whims, saying: 'The easiest way is best.' And now she is a tyrant, and we are slaves. If she would only get married!"

If she should, what sort of a life would her husband have? Such an ill-conducted young woman ought to go about with a badge pinned to her breast: "Danger here!" But, poor child, Agnes is not altogether to blame. Culpable weakness on the part of her family when she was a small maiden, and equally culpable cowardice in their silly yielding to her tantrums now, are at the bottom of her conduct, and their misery. We often observe households in which a premium is put on ill temper, and the person most considered is the person of whom nearly everybody stands in fear. Temper, when undisciplined, is a tiger let loose, but it behooves us all to hold ours in leash, and not to be overcome by the vagaries of others. Solomon was in the right of it when he said, long ago, "Better is it to live in a corner of the housetop than with a brawling woman in a wide house."

AS FOR Maud, who some time ago snubbed an admirer, under the impression that she did not care for him, and who now discovers that she made a mistake, her path is plain, provided the young gentleman is still fancy-free. She will know what to do and how to behave if again they are thrown together, though she must beware of acting with too much friendliness at the outset. A young girl never accepts an invitation to visit at a man's house, unless she is his betrothed, and the invitation is formally given her by his mother and sisters. Even then, as a rule, she would best not visit freely at his home. The proprieties are better served by his visiting her. An engaged young woman, in going to another city where her fiance resides, must either be accompanied by her mother, or stay with friends who will chaperone her. She cannot establish herself alone in a hotel or boarding house. This is in answer to Caroline, who asks, and who says that in her little home town such a course would satisfy the conventions. Pray, dear Caroline, believe that it would be an impossible one in a city like New York.

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST.

A Indispensable Condition of Discipleship, hich will be Rewarded. Luke 12 : 8, 9; ev. 3 : 5.

Our relations in social and family life teach us a lesson in this duty of acknowledging our relations to Christ. What would be thought of a man who did not acknowledge his wife, or who was ashamed to o1 his children? Even in politics we e ect a man to declare himself, and if h will not do so, we count him of little v e in the struggle. How much more, th ought the Christian to avow himself a llower of Christ! To do so requires c rage, and it sometimes entails suffer- n but whether it be easy or difficult, it o ht to be done. Christ made it an in- d ensable condition of discipleship, and it ill remains so. In every age since he w upon earth, men have witnessed for h , sometimes at the cost of property a life itself. In the better days, on wch our lot has fallen, the witnessing sld never be withheld. It is due to o Lord that it should be known that we a on his side, and that he is doing more a better for us than we deserve. It is d to the church, so that other Christians m be encouraged, and the preachers m know that their labor has not been in ain. And it is due to the world, so th men who do not know Christ may le n of him through our words and con- d t. Of course, the confession entails re ponsibility. An inconsistent Christian d s more harm than good by his confes- s , and many shrink from making con- f ion on that ground. But the timid f et the help that is promised to those w go forward in Christ's strength. Th help is sufficient for the weakest, a none need fear that it will be with- h l. Hour by hour and day by day gr e is given according to the need, and to oubt it is to show distrust of the power, as well as of the promise. Then, too, the reward is assured. To those who over- c e their own fears, their temptations a their doubts, and boldly confess C ist before men, the promise is given th he will confess them before his Father in eaven.

No Shore to God's Mercy.

. this mercy of God! I am told it is a ocean (writes Dr. Talmage). Then I p e on it four swift-sailing craft, with co pass, and charts, and choice rigging, an skilful navigators, and I tell them to la ch away, and discover for me the ex- te of this ocean. That craft puts out in on direction and sails to the north; this to e south; this to the east; this to the w t. They crowd on all their canvas, an sail ten thousand years, and one day co e up the harbor of heaven, and I sh t to them from the beach, "Have y found the shore?" and they answer, "o shore to God's mercy!" Swift an- g attempt to go across it. For a mil- li years they fly and fly, and then come ba k and fold their wings at the foot of th throne, and cry, "No shore! no shore to God's mercy!"

IMPROVED
Gram-o-phone
As a Home Entertainer

We desire, if possible, to convey to the readers of The Christian Herald something like an adequate idea of the improved Gramophone, an invention which The Ram's Horn, of Chicago, calls

"... The greatest contribution made by science to the entertainment of the world."

It is a difficult thing to do, because it seems simply incredible that in one simple machine which a child can operate there should be combined not only the pleasure-giving qualities of all kinds of musical instruments, but the power to reproduce every other sort of entertainment appealing to the ear.

Such, however, is the Improved Gramophone, of which The Churchman, of New York, says:

"In the way of entertainment for the home, the inventive genius of the 19th century has produced nothing so wonderful, so practical, and in all respects satisfactory."

But judge for yourself. Take, for instance, the following as one of a hundred different programs:

1 CORNET SOLO - - - - The Commodore Polka
By H. Paris Chambers, the Wonderful Cornetist
2 SONG - - - - - "Marching Thro' Georgia"
By John Tyrell
3 BANJO DUET - - - - "Enjoy Yourselves"
Messrs. Collin and Collins
4 KAISER MARCH - - - - - - - - Wagner
By the Bonnie Rosa, the most famous Band of Bulgaria
5 RECITATION - - - - A Negro Funeral Sermon
By George Graham
6 CLARINET SOLO - - - - - La Sonambula
By A. F. Stengler, many years soloist Gilmore's Band
7 SOPRANO SOLO - - - - - - Staccato Polka
By Miss Virginia Powell Goodwin
8 TROMBONE SOLO - - Love Thoughts Waltz
By Arthur H. Pryor, Trombone soloist of Sousa's Band
9 "A FLAG WITHOUT STAIN" - Diamond Quartette
10 ORCHESTRA SELECTION - The Pomona Waltz
By the Metropolitan Orchestra
11 THE CRACK REGIMENT - - - Sousa's Band
12 THE LORD'S PRAYER AND XXIII PSALM
Rev T. De Witt Talmage

Not in any sense imitations.

The marvelous Harmony of Sousa's Band.
The silver strains of the cornet.
The "plunk-plunk" of the banjo.
The mellow tones of the trombone.
The spirit-stirring rattle of the drum.
The ear-piercing notes of the fife.
The resonant quality of the xylophone.
The sonorous voice of Chauncy M. Depew.
The staccato utterances of Dr. Talmage.
The inimitable idiom of Jefferson's Rip Van Winkle.

All as natural as life itself—these performances being nothing less than ACTUAL REPRODUCTIONS.

It is already an acknowledged feature in the homes of the wealthy and refined. Hon. Chauncey M. Depew writes:

"I have a Gramophone at my house and another on my car. It's the best thing of the kind I know of to entertain one's family and friends."

Do not confound the work of the Improved Gramophone with the unnatural noises you may have heard from the earlier talking machines. The five great soloists of Sousa's band unite in a letter, saying:

"We consider the Improved Gramophone the ONLY talking machine which perfectly reproduces the true tone qualities of our respective instruments."

It has, by actual test, been heard in every part of the Metropolitan Opera House, the largest auditorium in New York, its cornet solos two miles.

In its construction everything has been subordinated to its one object—Entertainment of the best and most varied kind.

Special Concession

To subscribers of The Christian Herald the Improved Gramophone will, for a short time, be sold on the installment plan—$5.00 cash, $3.00 a month for 6 months; records, as wanted, 50 cents. Money refunded, less express charges, if instrument is not satisfactory, and is returned immediately.

THANKSGIVING.

THANKSGIVING and the voice of praise
To thee O! Lord, our God, belong;
To thee our hearts and voices raise
In glad thanksgiving and in song.
Our thanks we give for life and health;
And the rich blessings we receive;
For fruit and grain and all the wealth
That our abundant harvests give.

War, with its horrors, is no more;
Peace, with its blessings, now restored;
Good will prevails from shore to shore,
For which we thank our Sovereign Lord.
For peace and plenty we rejoice;
Give thanks and laud his holy name,
And, with united heart and voice,
Praise him whose love is e'er the same.

Washington, D. C. EDWARD YOUNG.

WELCOMED BY THE SOLDIERS.

"The Christian Herald" in Our Military Camps in Cuba.

The following is one of many such letters we are now receiving:

THIRD REGIMENT U. S. VOL. INFANTRY,
CO. C, M. L. WILLIAMS COMMAND'G CO.
MANZANILLO, CUBA, Oct. 14.

To the Christian Herald:

Allow me to say thank you. You commenced visiting our camp at Macon, Ga. You have followed us to Cuba. We debarked at Santiago from aboard the good transport Minnewaska on the 17th of August, and within four days reshipped to Guantanamo, aboard the Sau-uan, and now we are here at Manzanillo, arriving upon that beautiful swan of these seas, the Riena Los Angeles, and by the first mail ships after our arrival here comes THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—sweet messenger of glad tidings, to dispel the sad night-mare of home-sickness of the soldier boys of "C" Co. 3d U. S. Vol. I. Bless the hearts that contribute such literature as this to my Company. You have done nobly for the Army, and may the rich, sweet benedictions of heaven, as they will, rest upon you. But have you thought how much more you might have done? Not a sermon—not a service, except a burial service, has been held in our Regiment, at least in the Battalion with which my Company has been connected since we left Georgia, on the 13th of August. But this is not all; not more than a drop to the ocean. All Cuba is comparatively without the Gospel. Santiago, 2 Roman churches, 60,000 people. Guantanamo, 1 Roman church, 12,000 people. Manzanillo, 1 Roman church, 20,000 people. All these out of sympathy—out of touch with the people; no moral influence; no Christ; nothing in the world but old, antiquated buildings with empty pews—priests without a sacrifice, and crucifixes that tell of a dead past, and have no promise of a living future. God save the people! No wonder Spain has been driven from this beautiful isle. For 400 years she has possessed—never blessed, but by universal testimony, forever cursed it. The spectre of civilization, like a skeleton, staring us in the face wherever we go, is the result of her effort. Is this the best that Rome can do? The Lord has thrown open the doors in Cuba to the Protestant people of the U. S. Why don't you enter? There is room, and the call is to all. Come at once. The ripened harvest is wasting. Let Protestantism throw off their sectarian conventionalities and proceed to present a living Christ to these people.

Send us thousands of New Testaments, printed in the Spanish language, and we will gladly put them in the hands of the people. As we go among them and distribute rations, is the very time to spread the pure Word of God. I am ready to give any assistance I may be able to render to any Christian effort that may be put forth for the good of these people. Tracts, translated into Spanish, and sown broadcast will do good in hundreds of places. Who will hear the call, who will be first to respond?

I would present Christ to these people in a public way myself, even though my duties are abundant, but I can't speak the language. Now is the Harvest Time.

M. L. WILLIAMS,
Lieut. 3d U. S. V. I., Comdg. "C" Co.

War Testaments at Savannah.

SAVANNAH, GA., Nov. 5.

Dear Christian Herald:—I am in receipt of letter of Nov. 3d, and the case of books, consisting of War Testaments, arrived to-day. We are very thankful for this donation, and they shall be distributed carefully amongst the soldiers of the Seventh Army Corps. I have often desired to speak of the great benefit derived from the circulation of your valuable paper, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is a welcome visitor in the tents of our soldier boys.

The work in our camps does not stop or languish because hostilities have ceased. Men are still dying in the hospital, and famishing for the bread of life; and now that Cuba is so near to us, there is more and more need for the ministrations of the Gospel through the army department of the Young Men's Christian Association. F. L. SMITH.

Insomnia Cured.

"NEW YORK, April 1, 1898.

"THERE is one very great blessing conferred by the use of the Electropoise which, in my judgment, is not made enough of. I refer to its uniformly restful effect on persons who, whether from nervous affection, bodily suffering, worry, excessive mental labor, or whatever cause, suffer from insomnia. Just now I say nothing of the almost miraculous effect of the Electropoise as a cure for rheumatism, paralysis, and other diseases of the blood and muscles; but I hold up before you the power of the Electropoise to put a person quickly and naturally to sleep and keep him asleep until satisfied nature awakes refreshed. In my own family, in this one respect alone, it has been an incalculable blessing. In this way the Electropoise is a preventer of sickness, and prevention is better than cure.

SAVING THE CHILDREN.

od Work of the Abigail Free School and Kindergarten—Gathering in the Waifs.

RESCUE work in our great cities engages with each passing year the larger attention of churches, of philanthropic societies, of business men and of municipal horities. From every point of view t public welfare demands such work, l even Mr. Worldly Wiseman realizes

THE LATE MRS. ABIGAIL HUYLER, hose honor the Abigail Kindergarten was named.

he cannot live to himself nor die to h self, that sin is like a contagious dise which must be quarantined against. ed,—and better still, prevented when ssible. Preventive work is, for the most t, that among children, and there is more fruitful field in all the world for rsionary effort than we find in the tene- t districts of our great cities: "they white already to the harvest." The istian kindergarten is the ideal way of tting the little ones right in life's be- ning, taking them, as it does, before has left its impress upon them, and, w song and story and pretty play, ving good principles and pious habits the warp and woof of their natures. rds of education are yearly opening kindergartens in connection with lic schools; churches and social set- ments are devoting fresh energies to class of work, and kindergartens, hen-gardens, and cooking-gardens are ssoming out everywhere in needy es.

mong agencies which are accomplish- great good for New York's youthful ulation is the Abigail Free School and dergarten, an institution not unknown ur readers, who have contributed to support by direct aid, and have also ed it indirectly through our Chil- 's Home, where hundreds of its little eficiaries have been entertained yearly. s work originated in 1889, and its first e was at 30 Beach St., where Mr. and . C. P. Devare went out into the high- s and byways, gathered the little ones washed, fed and clothed them, and ght them about Jesus, the children's end. They struggled through many culties, and their work found among er sympathetic friends and generous porters a most liberal one in Mr. John Huyler, a well-known business man , a Christian philanthropist, for whose her the institution was named. As ter fields of usefulness attracted, sev- moves were made, and the school is established at 104 Sullivan St. Child from three to seven years old are re- ed in the kindergarten; secular, re- ious and industrial training is given, the little folks are treated to a free heon daily.

n afternoon service is held for the efit of former kindergarten pupils who e become public school scholars; and ewing school for girls is open to little hen under fourteen. On Tuesdays Thursdays at 7.30 P. M., there are se meetings for children conducted by children, but to which grown folks are admitted as visitors. The institution supplies boy missionaries for rescue missions for boys. The Sunday School, like the kindergarten, is a preparatory effort; as soon as the little waifs are ready for such graduation, they are sent to the respective Sunday Schools, which seem to have rightful claim to their attention, just as kindergarten scholars are promoted to public schools when able to receive their benefits. The Sunday School is arranged to meet the cases of children who do not, and will not, attend Sunday Schools in missions and churches, just as the kindergarten is adapted to the needs of children not attendants at public schools.

The little girls in the sewing school, whose average attendance is twenty-five are taught to make, and do make, their own garments; they take them home and wear them. A large supply of good, strong material is consumed, and this department, one of the most helpful, is necessarily an expensive one, and for its success is indebted to the thoughtful aid of many friends. In the Free Dispensary, the year's record shows that 252 children have been supplied with medicines and a physician's attention. The daily average of children cared for in all departments is 232. The demands upon the treasury are heavy, but the circle of contributors, made up of all denominations, has greatly widened; and it is to be hoped that this most excellent work will continue to be sustained and its usefulness largely increased. Mr. Huyler is President of the Board of Directors, which consists of Messrs. S. S. Swain, W. Baldwin, H. B. Smith, Dr. E. F. Hofman and Rev. Stephen Merritt. Mrs. Devare is General Manager, and Mr. Devare Superintendent and Secretary. Letters of inquiry concerning the work should be addressed to Mr. Devare, who will give them prompt attention.

A Novel Relief Work.

A unique relief association exists in Russia. It is for the benefit of unfortunate gentlemen and gentlewomen, and avoids in every way the appearance of being a charity. Members are called "Lay Confessors," although there is nothing religious in its character. Worthy people, of the "higher classes," when in distress, make known their condition to a "Lay Confessor," by whom the confidence is regarded as sacred. If legal or medical advice is needed, eminent practitioners, members of the association, render it gratuitously, or at reduced fees. In financial embarrassments loans are negotiated, and not as a momentary relief without definite object. A practical plan is arranged by the advisers, and when the applicant promises to act in accordance with it, the help is continued until he is set upon solid ground again, thus not only benefiting him, but the society also, by rendering it possible for the loan to be repaid.

The Law of Cache.

Travelers in the Northwest give interesting accounts of the unwritten law of cache, which obtains there. A Canadian gentleman, lately returned from a tour of exploration, says a man going along wishes to leave, say, his coat, behind, for reasons of personal comfort. He hangs it on a tree, and it will be there for him if he does not return for a week. Similarly the ownership of a suspended gun or rifle is respected. A man would be safe in hanging his gold watch and chain on a tree with the assurance that it would be there when he returned to claim it. A cache of provisions is subject to a slight modification in respect to the rule of inviolability. A hungry Indian discovering such will make a fire in front of it, to make it apparent that there is no secrecy intended in connection with his visit. He will then take from the cache sufficient food for his immediate needs and pass on without touching anything more.

SAYING AND DOING.

The Conduct of a Christian the True Test of His Standing. Jer. 7:3–8; Matt. 7:21–23.

Conduct is everywhere in the Bible made the test of the godly soul. Even faith is to be proved by works. It is by their fruits that Christians are to be known. It is necessary to insist on this fact now, as much as it was in the days when the Jew, boasting that he was a son of Abraham, committed sins which disgraced his parentage. Our words may be eloquent, but it is our conduct that is the test. The world judges in the same way. It forms its estimate, not on the long prayers, not on the professions or exhortations, but on the daily life. If a man is tricky in his business, if his word is unreliable, if he is hard in dealing with the poor, if he is selfish and grasping—the world counts him no true Christian, though he may be a member of a church, and his profession be loud and ostentatious. The true religious life is no matter of words, but of deeds. Regular attendance at church is good, and it is a duty; but it is not religion. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are Christ's own ordinances, and no Christian will neglect them; but they are not religion. The faith that works by love, the kindness and unselfishness, and friendliness, and compassion, and purity of life, are the essence of religion, and nothing can make a man a Christian without them. Words are required of us; Christ expects us to confess him in words before men, but he insists on the life being in harmony with the words. True, he receives men who have none of these traits of character; but he receives them in order that these traits may be developed. It is his glory that out of such material as we bring to him, such results can be produced.

Are Bronchitis and Consumption Curable by Climate?

Dr. Hunter's Lectures Continued.

These diseases are so prevalent and cause so frightful a sacrifice of human life that they appeal to the science and humanity of physicians more strongly than any other in the long catalogue of bodily afflictions.

Up to seven years ago the schools of medicines, and practictng physicians everywhere, considered lung disease, especially bronchitis, asthma and consumption, to be incurable. They supposed them to arise from some unknown defect of the organism or change in the general system which, being once set up, was not remediable by any means kuown. All the efforts of physicians by medicines acting through the stomach and general system had failed. Every climate of the civilized world had been tried yet no cures resulted, nor were any racts developed to justify a belief that cure could be effected by any change of air or any modification of stomach treatment.

In 1891, the medical profession as a body, gave up the old constitutional dogma which for centuries had been the sole guide of physicians in treating these diseases, and adopted my theory of their local nature, as the true and only tenable doctrine. Had they followed this reform to its legitimate conclusion great credit would have resulted to the profession, and much good to mankind; but, as Dr. Loomis said, "they had only got half way to a cure"—when they were diverted by the fables regarding Koch's lymph, to the adoption of that muderous quackery which caused the death of hundreds of credulous patients before it was exposed and given up. For that they left the highway of truth and scientific fact and plunged headlong into the mire of hypodermic delusions. Their treatment was a return to the blood taint theory and blood poisoning practices of the old doctrine, and certainly "no cure" was to be found in that. That air alone could cure a chronic disease of the lungs was one of the old, old delusions, tried in vain for hundreds of years in every climate of the globe. For the past forty years I have carefully observed the effects of the Southern climate of Florida, Southern California and Texas, and also of Colorado, the Adirondacks and other northern resorts, and never yet saw a case of consumption cured by any climatic change. To convince my own mind, I, some years ago, took seventy patients down to Florida and remained with them throughout the winter. They suffered more in that climate from colds, malaria, humidity, and electrical changes than they would have done here on the banks of the Hudson, while their attacks of cold were more obstinate and difficult to remedy than I have ever found in the North.

This question of climate was conclusively settled years ago by the Brompton Consumption Hospital, of London. A sum of twenty-five thousand dollars was set apart to test its value by sending favorable cases for cure to the most famous Southern resorts, Madeira, Villa Franca, Nice, Naples and Egypt. Competent physicians accompanied them to supervise their diet and exercise, and skilled nurses to look after their general comfort. It was a test made under the most favorable conditions for success, if success was to be attained by climate alone. But, alas! it proved a complete failure. The report of the hospital shows that of the hundreds sent, not one returned with a better condition of lungs; in all, the disease had advanced; most of them suffered more than they would at home; while more than a sixth of the number died during the winter, and were buried among strangers. No sacrifice is too great for sick and suffering people to make if it will restore them to health, but climate alone will not do it.

Many think that there is some healing virtue in the eminations of pine forests for diseased lungs. But it is not true. Statistics prove that no portions of this country are more subject to consumption than those covered with native forests of pine like the Pine-tree State of Maine, the northern counties of New York, the lumbering regions of Michigan, the pitch tar and turpentine sections of the Carolinas, and the lumber districts of Canada. It is a wretched fad, founded on ignorance of the disease and kept up in disregard of all statistical facts. To believe that the eminations of pine trees will cure inflammed and ulcerated lungs, when none but a fool would treat sore eyes or inflammed toes by these same eminations and expect benefit from them, shows how absurd it all is.

Every educated physician now knows Bronchitis, Consumption and Asthma to be local disease of the lungs, and consumption to result from a particular germ of the air getting into the lungs and preying upon and ravaging their tissues. For any physician to tell a patient that air alone will destroy these germs or heal the imflammed and ulcerated parts is gross quackery and imposture, for no physician is so ignorant as to believe anything of the kind.

And yet it is true that cure can be effected only through the medium of the air. Natural air is the vehicle by which healing and germ destroying remedies are introduced into the lungs and brought into contact with the diseased parts. It is air medicated according to the disease that is required; air that has been rendered antiseptic and healing by the knowledge and experience of the physician.

THE SERVICE OF SMILES.

O smiling through this world of care,
And make the days more bright and fair.
Much the clouds o'erspread the sky—
Many hopes and comforts die—
All we can all some cheer impart
To soothe a dull and careworn heart.
Deserves the Lord, who thus beguiles,
The gloom from souls with sunny smiles.

Smiling through this world of care,
Will easy make the loads to bear.
And bring some rest and sweet relief
To souls borne down by care and grief.
Each one's heart some sadness lies,
And tears have bathed all human eyes.
Deserves the Master who beguiles
The gloom away with sunny smiles.

Smiling all the way along,
And fill the days with joy and song.
To speak a word of hope and cheer
To every soul that passes near.
For each of them, as well as thee,
The blood was shed on Calvary.
Christlike he is who beguiles
By both sin and grief with smiles.

KING MTESA AND THE BIBLE.

Stley Relates How the African Monarch Was Won to Christ.

In a speech delivered in England not long ago. Henry M. Stanley, the celebrated explorer, told the remarkable story of a missionary Bible. He said:

"Annet Livingstone, the sister of David Livingstone, made me a present of a richly bound Bible. Not liking to risk it on the voyage around the Victoria Nyanza, I asked Frank Pocock, my companion to lend me his somewhat worn and stained copy; and I sailed on my way to Uganda, little thinking what a revolution in Central Africa that book would make. I stayed in Uganda some time, and one day during a morning levee, the subject of religion was broached, and I happened to strike upon a motional chord in the king's heart by making a casual reference to angels. King and chiefs were moved as one man to hear more about angels. My verbal descriptions of them were not sufficient. "But," said I, "I have a book with me which will tell you far better, not only what angels are, but what God and his blessed Son are like, to whom the angels are but ministering servants." "Fetch it, fetch it," they eagerly cried. "Fetch it now; we cannot wait." The book was brought, opened, and I read the tenth chapter of Ezekial, and the seventh chapter of the Revelation from the ninth chapter to the end: and as I read the eleventh and twelfth verses you could have heard a pin drop. And when they heard the concluding verses, "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat," I had a presentiment that Uganda would eventually be won for Christ. I was not permitted to read that Bible away. Mtesa never forgot those wonderful words, nor the startling effect they had on him and on his chiefs. As I was going away from his country, his messenger came and cried, "The book! Mtesa wants the book!" It was given to him. To-day the Christians number many thousands in Uganda. They have proved their faith at the stake, under the knobstick, and under torture till death.

Pi.—A Wonderful Shrub.—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and Urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. J. Darling, of North Constantia, N. Y., as told in the New York World of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis, after, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing to die. Similar testimony of extraordinary cures of Kidney and bladder diseases of long standing comes from many other sufferers, and 1200 hospital cures have been recorded in 30 days. Up to date time the Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 490 Fifth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affection due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

Hood's Sarsaparilla contains more curative power, is prepared with greater care by educated and experienced pharmacists, has the greatest sales, and effects the greatest cures. Take only Hood's.

BIG CUT IN PRICES

ONLY 1,000 Sets on THESE TERMS.

Since the close of our famous Introductory Sale of the only genuine ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, nearly two years ago, we have been fairly besieged by requests from all over the United States and Canada, to make a special low-priced edition of that greatest of all reference libraries, and thus place it within the reach of people in moderate or even poor circumstances. Such a course would have compelled a cheapening of either materials or workmanship, which we have not deemed wise—not even in so worthy a cause. Nor could we afford to make an open offer at a sweeping reduction in the price of a gigantic work, like this, costing more than $750,000, to recover which investment will require many years of constant selling at regular prices. But, yielding at last to the irresistible pressure, we now propose to celebrate the Christmas season of 1898 by distributing just 1,000 sets of our world-famous Dictionary and Cyclopædia at less than one-quarter the prices at which the genuine edition is now being sold every day. These books will be taken from our regular stock, latest revision. Paper, printing, binding, illustrations and contents precisely identical with our regular $40 to $70 sets, except that some of the bindings are very slightly worn or defaced, leather corners a trifle crooked, or possibly scratched here and there by careless handling. These defects do not reduce the practical value of the books one penny's worth; but we cannot offer them as perfect stock. With the exception noted, every set is GUARANTEED PERFECT IN CONTENTS AND BINDING.

This is the Genuine ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Inquirer. Bangor. Me. I have heard the higher criticism denounced from the pulpit. What is it that the higher critics have done?

Their work has been directed to the analysis of the books of the Bible, with the object of finding out, among other things, when they were written, how they have reached us in their present form, and to what extent they are the work of the men whose names they bear. The strong feeling against the higher critics, which has been manifested by many preachers, is due to the critics adopting conclusions for which, in the opinion of their opponents, there is not sufficient ground. As an example, the higher critics contend that the book of Deuteronomy was not written by Moses, but by some unknown writer, about six or seven centuries after the death of Moses. They also contend that many of the books have been edited and re-edited by later scholars. It is generally admitted now, even by scholars who approve of the work of the critics, that many of their theories have been proved untenable.

Church Member, Brooklyn, N. Y. Am I bound to forgive one who has injured me seriously, when he has not asked for forgiveness, nor shown any contrition for his offence?

Your obligations require a forgiving spirit. The question for you to answer is whether you are ready to forgive. You ought not to cherish resentment. Perhaps if you made that disposition clear, the one who has injured you would repent and express sorrow for what he has done. If the fault is altogether his, there is sin resting in his soul, and if, as we infer from your letter, he is a professing Christian, you have a duty toward him. You or your friends should show him his fault, that you "may save your brother." An acknowledgment is due from him, and if he will make it, you and he will both be the happier. If he will not, his offense is increased, but you are not responsible for that. If you are ready to forgive and have tried to be reconciled, you have done your duty.

S. B., New Haven, Conn. How do you reckon New Testament time?

The natural day was from sunrise to sunset; civil or official day from sunset to sunset. The first watch of the night was from 6 to 9 P. M.; second, 9 to 12 P. M.; third (cockcrow), 12 to 3 A. M.; fourth, 3 to 6 A. M. The "third hour of the day" was 9 A. M.; the sixth, 12 A. M., and so on.

Reader. Council Bluffs, Ia. Is there any statement in the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles" which shows whether they observed Saturday or Sunday as the Sabbath?

In the fourteenth chapter is the direction: "On the Lord's Day do ye assemble and break bread and give thanks." This, we believe, is the only reference to the subject in the book. It is possible, but extremely improbable, that Saturday may have been the day so designated. The Lord's Day is a phrase occurring only once in Scripture (Rev. 1:10), but it was in common use in the writings of the early Fathers, and was always employed to describe the first day of the week, which was preeminently the Lord's, because on it was celebrated Christ's resurrection.

Ward C. A., Pomeroy, O. What was the maiden name of Martha Washington?

She was originally Miss Martha Dandridge, and in 1749 was married to Col. Daniel P. Custis, who died. She became the wife of Washington, Jan. 6, 1759.

Student, Los Angeles, Cal. A friend contends that the Koran is one of the oldest if not the oldest religious book in the world. Is she right?

She is quite wrong. The oldest writings are the Mosaic books, known as the Pentateuch. The Buddhist Tripitikes, the Chinese Five Kings, the Hindu Vedas, the Zenda Vesta, of Persia, the Eddas, of Scandinavian theology, are all older than the Koran, which is in reality the most recent of all the great Bibles, being only 1,200 years old.

Layman, Atlanta, Ga. Do you think that foreign missions have produced results at all approaching the value of the money expended? They have now been in operation about a century, yet to me the effect seems meagre.

It is difficult to place the results in a form to show the real benefits which have accrued. They are probably much greater than actual figures show. In many heathen lands the dread of persecution or social ostracism, which prevents men and women avowing their conversion after they have been converted. But the figures, incomplete as they are, show results truly marvelous, which in our opinion fully justify the expenditure. The following is a brief summary of results: 280 societies at work in the heathen world; 10,000 foreign workers; 71,100 native helpers; 500 separate fields; 19,290 different stations; 8,000 churches; 1,300,000 communicants; 3,000,000 believers in Bible truth; 7,000 Sunday Schools, with over 1,000,000 pupils; 680,000 in mission schools, seminaries and colleges. At the beginning of this century there were only 5,000,000 copies of the Bible in the world. Now it is published, in whole or in parts, at the rate of over 6,000,000 copies a year, and is accessible to nine-tenths of the world's population.

Churchman, New York. I was told that four medallions on the wall of a new church that I attended were the representations of the four evangelists. They were a man, an ox, a lion and an eagle. In what way can they represent the evangelists?

The explanation given by a leading church scholar is that the emblems refer to the respective characteristics of the authors of the Gospels. Matthew's gospel emphasizing the humanity of Christ; his emblem is a man. Mark's vigorous, robust style of writing caused him to be represented by the emblem of a lion. Luke's presentation of Christ as a sacrifice led to his being portrayed under the figure of an ox, the animal chiefly used in sacrifice. John's soaring style, dwelling on the divinity and previous existence of Christ, was indicated by the emblem of the eagle.

Reader, Newport, R. I. Will you kindly give me some information in regard to Spanish mismanagement and maladministration in Cuba that will assist me in preparing a paper for our Young People's League on the cause of the late war with Spain?

Your best and most complete source of information, concerning all that relates to the late war and its causes, can be found in the book entitled Columbia's War for Cuba, by Allen H. Tupper, Jr.; published by Bromfield & Co., Bible House, New York; price, $1.

"Distressed One," Scranton, Pa. Do you think that Heb. 6:4-6 and 11. Peter 2:22 must be understood as excluding from hope a person who has sinned subsequent to his conversion, but has sincerely repented?

You may be quite sure that if any backsliding child of God repents and asks pardon through Christ, he will be forgiven and restored to God's favor. There are in the Bible too many invitations to backsliders, to leave any doubt on that point. Both the passages to which you refer, intimate doubts as to the backslider being willing to return. Experience confirms that view, for there is nothing more difficult than to win a man who knows all about the Gospel and has had some transient experience of religion, but has fallen into outrageous sin. He usually becomes careless and indifferent, which is generally a hopeless condition. Whenever he sincerely repents he will be restored. As Hezekiah said to the people of Israel: "The Lord, your God, is gracious and merciful, and will not turn his face from you if you return unto him."

J. B. M., Dayton, O. 1. What is the population of Cuba at the present time? 2. What has become of the reconcentrados, whom we were feeding before the war began?

1. The population which at the beginning of the war was estimated at 1,200,000, is now very little, if any, over 1,000,000. The reduction has been caused by death and deportation. While a few thousands of Cuba's inhabitants have died in the war, six times that number have perished by disease. Probably 100,000 have now been returned to Spain, while from 10,000 to 15,000 Cubans have sought refuge in this country. 2. Many are dead and the rest have returned to their farms and villages and are no longer reconcentrados, although still wretchedly poor.

Inquirer, Louisville, Ky. What was the [illegible] Gen. Gordon's death in Khartoum, to which frequent reference has been made in [illegible] dispatches?

He was killed and beheaded by the [illegible] of the Mahdi, on January 26, 1885, according to the account of Slatin Bey, to whom his [illegible] was shown by Shatta, one of the Mahdi officers, the same day.

Constant Reader, Aurora, Ill. In what way did John the Baptist's baptism differ from Christ's? Why was it necessary for people whom John baptized to be baptized again, as stated in Acts 19:5?

John's baptism was within the pale of Judaism, and indicated only repentance and reformation of life. He apparently baptized all who came, although he warned some that he thought them insincere. Christ's baptism indicated faith in himself. John distinctly told his hearers that his mission was one of preparation. Christ's baptism implied more than repentance, more than preparation. It implied union with him. Those who were baptized in his name (for he did not himself baptize) confessed their faith in him. Thus John's baptism was prophecy; Christ's was fulfilment. The men whom John baptized were therefore prepared for the next step, which was symbolized by being baptized in the name of Christ.

"Anxious," San Antonio, Tex. During a revival last year, I pledged myself to Christ, and was very happy for [illegible] weeks. I joined the Methodist Church and am still a member, but my happiness is gone, and I am almost in the same condition as I used to be. Do you think I was really converted? What ought I to do?

Your condition is a very common one. It does not prove that you were not really converted. Many look to the ecstasy they felt under the first realization of their union with Christ. But they may gain a deeper and more abiding joy. A husband may love his wife just as truly and sincerely after a few years of married life, though he is not so demonstrative as he was on their honeymoon. Perhaps you are dwelling too much on your own feelings, and watching yourself too closely. It is not your feelings that save you, it is Christ who saves. If you set yourself resolutely to live the Christian life, determined to avoid sin in word and thought, you will be led to Christ for help, and you will find him so kind and so necessary that your love for him and faith in him will increase. Another good method is to explain the way of salvation to others, even if only to children in the Sunday School. In helping others you will be helped yourself.

Jessie L., Paterson, N. J. How wide was the part of the Red Sea where the children of Israel crossed?

According to the ablest modern Bible scholars, the passage was made at a point known as Ras Atakah, where the total width is about five miles. The shallows extend far in from the shore. The real channel is of considerable depth, being about five-eighths of a mile wide.

Reader, Waterbury, Conn. At a recent church meeting here, the question was raised as to the origin of camp-meetings. It was decided to ask the CHRISTIAN HERALD when and where the first camp-meeting was held.

Camp-meetings, in the sense of open-air worship, are of the remotest antiquity. The whole pilgrimage of the Children of Israel was a continuous camp-meeting. Assuming, however, that the information desired relates to modern times, we would say that the first camp-meeting in this country was held in Kentucky in 1790, the leaders being John and William Magee. John was a Methodist who was traveling on a missionary tour in the Red River district of Missouri. Church services were held, but the attendance was so great that the meetings had to be held in the adjoining woods, and a great religious revival took place. The next gathering was in the woods near Muddy River, Mo., where large numbers were attracted from long distances.

Reader, Chicago, Ill. Is there any way of overcoming an evil habit? I have prayed to be delivered from one, but God does not answer.

Perhaps you expected that God would work a miracle, relieving you of all need of effort on your own part. If you prayed to him to lift you to the top of a mountain, he would not lift you bodily to the summit, but he might give you the strength to climb to it. You do not say what your habit is, but the struggle with all evil are similar. Victory must come from the strength God will give you. But you are expected to use it. You should avoid temptation. There may be circumstances which tend to bring you under its power. Perhaps care in diet, in exercise, in the books you read, in the character of the acquaintances you make, and their conversation—all these may have an influence. You must study your position and propensities, doing all you can to overcome the evil, and you may do so with hope, knowing that God will help you.

PHOTOGRAPHED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION.

MRS. MCKINLEY, THE "FIRST LADY OF THE LAND."

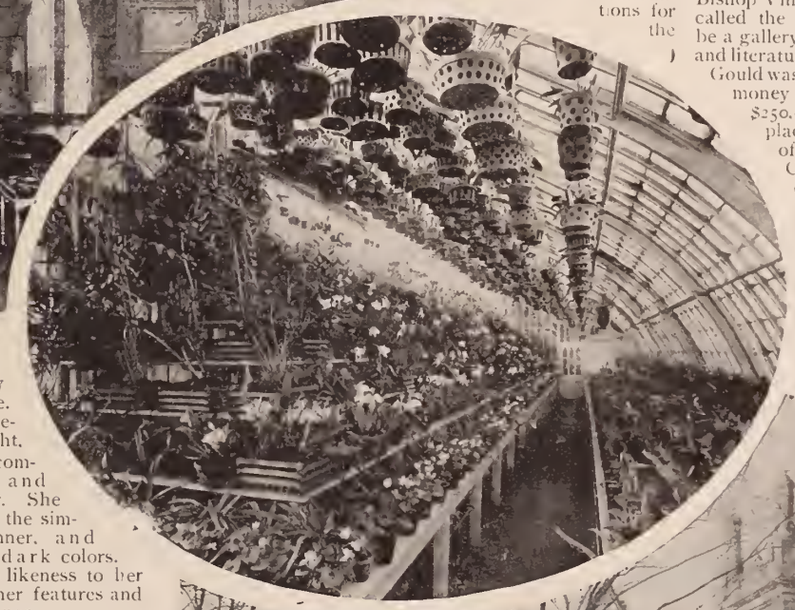
This photograph, showing Mrs. McKinley in her favorite chair and sunny corner in the West Hall of the White House, and wearing her favorite gown—that in which she loves to receive her friends—will be valued by our readers as the best portrait yet presented of this lady, whose beautiful Christian character adorns her exalted position. Though an invalid, her face is ever cheerful and bright, her hands are invariably busied with some useful task, and she is a faithful attendant at the Lord's house. She is a patroness of many charities and interested in numerous good works.

HELEN GOULD AS LADY BOUNTIFUL

Her Millions Consecrated and Her Life Wholly Devoted to Good Deeds--- An Example to American Women.

THERE is probably no woman in the United States at the present time who is more warmly beloved by the American people than Miss Helen Gould. Always active in good works since childhood, the part she has played so modestly and unostentatiously, yet so effectively, since the beginning of our recent war and unknown, is one which has won for her the love and admiration of a nation.

MISS GOULD'S SITTING-ROOM.



It comparatively little is known of Miss Gould, outside of what appears from time to time in newspaper records. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD today gives for the first time many interesting and accurate details concerning this attractive personality, the materials of this sketch having been gathered from an authorized source of information and from a personal interview.

Born at a time when her father was beginning to be a power in the financial world, and reared in the lap of luxury, Miss Gould has astonished the whole country by becoming a girl very different in aims and deeds from most daughters of millionaires. Strong in her beliefs and quick to perceive the folly of a purely fashionable existence, she resolved to lead a life of usefulness. She has always endeavored to do some good thing, those about her, and to keep that good deed from the knowledge of the public. She is as modest as she is good. The applause of the multitude has no attractiveness in her eyes, and she always seeks to keep her benefactions out of the newspapers. For years past, she has been working in a quiet unostentatious way to relieve the distress she sees about her, and is ever on the lookout for a chance to do good. She searches out those who are too proud to be said. She takes a personal and abiding interest in the charities to which she contributes, and she not only devotes her money, but her time, to their good. Instead of attending receptions and balls, her afternoons and evenings are often devoted to the meetings of various boards of which she is a member. Her name is rarely seen in the list of those present at fashionable functions, but when the directors of some hospital or charitable institution meet, she is often present. Her interest is an active one, and goes beyond the question of mere dollars and cents.

Her life, since the death of her father, a few years ago, has been a very busy one. She makes her home at Lyndhurst, a palatial family residence on the banks of the Hudson, at Tarrytown, N. Y. When I entered the beautiful grounds about the mansion, I was impressed at once with the homelike atmosphere of the place. Chickens were running about among the bushes, the lowing of cows was heard from the pasture, and all about were delightful, old-fashioned flower gardens. There were vegetable gardens, too, and the entire estate had an appearance of homely comfort.

Within the mansion, things were much the same, giving an appearance of comfort and homeliness. The furniture, while beautiful, was not elegant, and there were many things savoring of the country home in which Jay Gould was raised. There was very little bric-a-brac and but few draperies. It might have been the house of some well-to-do merchant.

Miss Gould herself, when I saw her, impressed me as being a woman with a character of great sweetness. Her face wears a look of tenderness and sympathy that is very attractive. She is of medium height, with dark complexion and black hair. She dresses in the simplest manner, and mainly in dark colors. There is a likeness to her father in her features and in her manner.

She extended her hand to me in the good old American way, for she has a great disdain for the dictates of fashion, and wouldn't think of greeting one without shaking hands.

I was made to feel at home immediately, and she began to tell me about a trip she had taken to New York that morning, and about some new charity she had undertaken.

"How much work it must take for you to keep in contact with all your charities, Miss Gould!" I remarked.

"Oh, I haven't so many that I can't take care of them," was the modest reply, "and then I have those who help me, you know. Everything is arranged systematically, too. I have certain days to do certain things, and in that way I get along very nicely."

"How pleasant it is to be able to do so much good with one's money," I said.

"Yes," said Miss Gould, "it is a great privilege. Still, I never think I am doing half enough. I only wish I could do more."

"But you ought to feel satisfied. You are certainly doing more than almost any other woman in the country, and people don't know half of what you do.

"No, I know they don't. I would rather they wouldn't. I don't do it for notoriety's sake, and it gives me no pleasure to see my name in the papers."

I soon gave up trying to persuade her to talk on the subject of her charities. I saw that she would rather discuss anything else.

On the subject of the war she was highly enthusiastic, and expressed her great sympathy for the soldiers who were at the front; but she refused to talk about the great good she was doing for those soldiers, as head of the Women's War Relief Association.

I did not need to ask her about many of her great benefactions during and since the war. Her first great gift of a hundred thousand dollars to the Government was only the beginning of the work she has accomplished. The Relief Association, of which she became the leading spirit, spent thousands and thousands of dollars in furnishing the soldiers at the front with comforts and medicines. They sent great shiploads of cots and blankets and delicacies for the sick to Santiago and to Porto Rico, and when the peace protocol was signed, and the fever-stricken troops were returned to Montauk Point, they worked almost night and day to furnish the accommodations for the men. Miss Gould prepared a hospital of her own at Tarrytown, and there she took a number of the very sick or the severely wounded. They had little or no chance to recover in the crowded military hospital, and she determined to take them where she could personally look out for their comfort. It is needless to say that those soldiers have blessed her with every breath they drew. So, too, have the sick soldiers whom she and her associates in the War Relief Association have sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn.

No one has attempted to estimate the money paid out by Miss Gould to aid the soldiers. Doubtless if a reliable estimate could be obtained it would be up in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. But it is not only in war time that she is lavish in expending money to help others. All her life she has been doing good. Many villages and towns along the Hudson have been recipients of her bountiful charity. One of her favorite ways of doing good is to offer prizes to pupils of high schools and colleges.

In 1890, Miss Gould gave $8,000 to Vassar College to found a scholarship in memory of her mother. The Chautauqua movement has been another object of her generosity. Last year she gave $5,000 to Bishop Vincent to erect a building to be called the "Hall of Christ," which will be a gallery and repository for sacred art and literature. Roxbury, N. Y., where Mr. Gould was born, is a constant recipient of money from Miss Gould. She gave $250,000 to the Presbyterians of that place to build a church in memory of her father. In New York City, she entirely supports one of the largest and most valuable missions, and contributes to the work of almost innumerable institutions. Such is the life that Helen Gould leads. It is a remarkable life for a young woman of the highest social standing, and with $35,000,000 in her own right, to live. It is remarkable, because so few young women, in her position, successfully resist the attractions of social life. But Helen Gould is different from other young women, and it is good for the world that she is. Who can estimate the good this young Lady Bountiful's wealth has done, or the wonders it may yet accomplish!

Let us be thankful for this faithful steward of a vast estate, who is laying up treasures in the life that is to come.

Cradle of the Twentieth Century

Text: I.Chron. 12: 32: The children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do.

GREAT tribe, that tribe of Issachar. When Joab took the census, there were 145,600 of them. Before the almanac was born, through astrological study, they knew from stellar conjunctions all about the seasons of the year. Before agriculture became an art they were skilled in the raising of crops. Before politics became a science they knew the temper of nations; and whenever they marched, either for pleasure or war, they marched under a three-colored flag—topaz, sardine, and carbuncle. But the chief characteristic of that tribe of Issachar was that they understood the times. They were not like the political and moral incompetents of our day, who are trying to guide 1898 by the theories of 1828. They looked at the divine indications in their own particular century. So we ought to understand the times; not the times when America was thirteen colonies, huddled together along the Atlantic coast, but the times when the nation dips one hand in the ocean on one side the continent, and the other hand in the ocean on the other side the continent; times which put New York Narrows and the Golden Horn of the Pacific within one flash of electric telegraphy; times when God is as directly, as positively, as solemnly, as tremendously addressing us through the daily newspaper and the quick revolution of events, as he ever addressed the ancients, or addresses us through the Holy Scriptures. The voice of God in Providence is as important as the voice of God in typology; for in our own day we have had our Sinais with thunders of the Almighty, and Calvaries of sacrifice, and Gethsemanes that sweat great drops of blood, and Olivets of ascension, and Mount Pisgahs of far-reaching vision. The Lord who rounded this world six thousand years ago, and sent his Son to redeem it near nineteen hundred years ago, has yet much to do with this radiant, but agonized planet. May God make us like the children of Issachar, "which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do."

The grave of this century will soon be dug. The cradle of another century will soon be rocked. There is something moving this way out of the eternities, something that thrills me, blanches me, appalls me, exhilarates me, enraptures me. It will wreath the orange blossoms for millions of weddings. It will beat the dirge for millions of obsequies. It will carry the gilded banners of brightest mornings, and the black flags of darkest midnights.

What may we expect of it, and how shall we prepare for it, are the momentous questions I propose now to discuss. As in families, human nativity is anticipated by all sanctity, and kindliness, and solemnity, and care, and hopefulness, so ought we prayerfully, hopefully, industriously, confidently to prepare for the advent of a new century. The nineteenth century must not treat the twentieth on its arrival as the eighteenth century treated the nineteenth. Our century inherited the wreck of revolutions and the superstition of ages. Around its cradle stood the armed assassins of old world tyrannies; the "Reign of Terror," bequeathing its horrors; Robespierre, plotting his diabolism; the Jacobin Club, with its wholesale massacre; the guillotine, chopping its beheadments. The ground quaking with the great guns of Marengo, Wagram, and Badajos. All Europe in convulsion. Asia in comparative quiet, but the quietness of death. Africa in the clutches of the slave trade. American savages in full cry, their scalping knives lifted. The exhausted and poverty-stricken people of America sweating under the debt of three hundred million dollars, which the Revolutionary War had left them. Washington just gone into the long sleep at Mount Vernon, and the nation in bereavement. Aaron Burr, the champion libertine, becoming soon after, the Vice President. The government of the United States only an experiment, most of the philosophers and statesmen and governments of the earth prophesying it would be a disgraceful failure. No poor foundling laid at night on the cold steps of a mansion, to be picked up in the morning, was poorer off than this century at its nativity. The United States Government had taken only twelve steps on its journey, its constitution having been formed in 1789, and most of the nations of the earth laughed at our government in its first attempts to walk alone.

The birthday of our nineteenth century occurred in the time of war. Our small United States navy, under Captain Truxton, commanding the frigate Constitution, was in collision with the French frigates La Vengeance and L'Insurgente, and the first infant cries of this century were drowned in the roar of naval battle. And political strife on this continent was the hottest, the parties rending each other with pantherine rage. The birthday present of this nineteenth century was vituperation, public unrest, threat of national demolition, and horrors national and international. I adjure you, let not the twentieth century be met in that awful way, but with all brightness of temporal and religious prospects.

First, let us put upon the cradle of the new century a new map of the world. The old map was black with too many barbarisms, and red with too many slaughters, and pale with too many sufferings. Let us see to it that on that map, so far as possible, our country from ocean to ocean is a Christianized continent—schools, colleges, churches and good homes in long line from ocean beach to ocean beach. On that map Cuba must be free. Porto Rico must be free. The archipelago of the Philippines must be free. When we get those islands thoroughly under our protectorate, for the first time our missionaries in China will be safe. The atrocities imposed on those good men and women in the so-called Flowery Kingdom will never be resumed, for our guns will be too near Hong Kong to allow the massacre of missionary settlements.

On that map must be put the Isthmian Canal, begun if not completed. No long voyages around Cape Horn for the world's merchandise, but short and cheap communication by water instead of expensive communication by rail train, and more millions will be added to our national wealth and the world's betterment than I have capacity to calculate.

On that map it must be made evident that America is to be the world's civilizer and evangelizer. Free from the national religions of Europe on the one side, and from the superstitions of Asia on the other side, it will have facilities for the work that no other continent can possibly possess. As near as I can tell by the laying on of the hands of the Lord Almighty, this continent has been ordained for that work. This is the only country in the world where all religions are on the same platform, and the people have free selection for themselves without any detriment. When we present to the other continents this assortment of religions and give them unhindered choice, we have no doubt of their selecting this religion of mercy, and kindness and goodwill, and temporal and eternal rescue. Hear it! America is to take this world for God!

On the map which we will put on the cradle of the new century we must have very soon, a railroad bridge across Behring's Strait, those thirty-six miles of water are not deep, and they are spotted with islands capable of holding the piers of a great bridge. And what, with America and Asia thus connected, and Siberian railway, and a railroad now projected for the length of Africa, and Palestine, and Persia, and India, and China, and Burmah intersected with railroad tracks, all of which will be done before the new century is grown up, the way will be open to the quick civilization and evangelization of the whole world. The old map we used to study in our boyhood days is dusty, and on the top shelf, or amid the rubbish of the garret; and so will the present map of the world, however gilded and beautifully bound, be treated, and an entirely new map will be put into the infantile hand of the coming century.

The work of this century has been to get ready. All the earth is now free to the Gospel except two little spots, one in Asia and one in Africa, while at the beginning of the century there stood the Chinese wall, and there flamed the fires, and there glittered the swords that forbade entrance to many islands and large reaches of continent. Bornesian cruelties and Fiji Island cannibalism have given way, and all the gates of all the continents are swung open with a clang that has been a positive and glorious invitation for Christianity to enter. Telegraph, telephone and phonograph are to be consecrated to Gospel dissemination, and instead of the voice that gains the attention of a few hundred or a few thousand people within the Church walls, the telegraph will thrill the glad tidings and the telephone will utter them to many millions. O, the infinite advantage that the twentieth century has over what the nineteenth century had at the starting!

In preparation for this coming century we have time in the intervening years to give some decisive strokes at the seven or eight great evils that curse the world. It would be an assault and battery upon the coming century by this century if we allowed the full blow of present evils to fall upon the future. We ought somehow to cripple or minify some of these abominations. Alcoholism is to-day triumphant, and are we to let the all-devouring monster that has throttled this century seize upon the next without first having filled his accursed hide with stinging arrows enough to weaken and stagger him? When will we learn that we must educate public opinion up to a prohibitory law, or such a law will not be passed, or if passed, will not be executed? God grant that all State and National Legislatures may build up against this evil a wall which will be an impassable wall, shutting out the alcoholic abomination. But while we wait for that, let us, in our homes, in our schools, and our churches, and on our platforms and in our newspapers, persuade the people to stop taking alcoholic stimulant unless prescribed by physicians, and then persuade physicians not to prescribe it if in all the dominions of therapeutics there may be found some other remedy.

Alexander, the Great, made an imperial banquet at Babylon, and though he had been drinking the health of guests all one night and all next day, the second night he had twenty guests, and he drank the health of each separately. Then calling for the cup of Hercules, the giant, a monster cup, he filled and drained it twice, to show his endurance; but, as he finished the last draught from the cup of Hercules, the giant, he dropped in a fit, from which he never recovered. Alexander, who had conquered Sardis, and conquered Halicarnassus, and conquered Asia, and conquered the world, could not conquer himself; and there is a threatening peril that this good land of ours, having conquered all with whom it has ever gone into battle, may yet be overthrown by the cup of the giant evil of the land—that Hercules of infamy, strong drink. Do not let the staggering, and bloated, and embruted host of drunkards go into the next century looking for insane asylums, and almshouses, and delirium tremens, and dishonored graves.

Another thing we must get fixed is a national law concerning divorce. There are thousands of married people who are unhappy, and they ought never to have been wedded. They were deceived, or they were reckless, or they were fools, or they were caught by a dimple, or hung by a curl, or married in joke, or expected a fortune and it did not come, or good habits turned to brutality, and hence the domestic wreck. But make divorce less easy and you make the human race more cautious about entering upon life-time alliance. Let people understand that marriage is not an accommodation train that will let you leave almost anywhere, but a through train, and then they will not step on the train unless they expect to go clear through to the last depot. One brave man this coming winter, rising amid the white marble of yonder Capitol Hill, could offer a resolution upon the subject of divorce that would keep out of the next century much of the free-lovism and dissoluteness which have cursed this century.

Another thing that we need to get fixed up before the clock shall strike twelve on that night of centennial transition is the expulsion of war by the power of arbitration. Within the next three years we ought to have, and I hope will have, what might be called "a jury of nations," which shall render verdict on all controverted international questions. All civilized nations are ready for it, Great Britain, with a standing army of 210,000 men; France, with a standing army of 580,000 men; Germany, with a standing army of 600,000 men; Russia, with a standing army of 900,000 men; Europe, with standing armies of about three and a half million men; the United States proposing a standing army of 100,000 men. What a glorious idea, that of disarmament! What an emancipation of nations and centuries! The Czar of Russia last summer proposed it in world-resounding manifesto. Disarmament! What an inspiring and heaven-descended thought! In some quarters the Czar's manifesto was treated with derision, and we were told that he was not in earnest when he made it. I know personally that he did mean it. Six years ago he expressed to me the same theory in his palace at Peterhof, he then being on the way to the throne, not yet having reached it. His father, Alexander III., then on the throne, expresse to me in his palace the same sentiments peace, and his wife, the then Empress, wi tears in her eyes, said, in reply to my remar "Your Majesty, there never will be anoth great war between Christian nations." "Ah! hope there never will be. If there should ev be another great war I am sure it will not sta from this palace."

What a boon to the world if Russia a Germany and England and the United Stat could safely disband all their standing armie and dismantle their fortresses, and spike th guns! What uncounted millions of dolla would be saved, and, more than that, what complete cessation of human slaughter! Wh an improvement of the morals of nation What an adoption of that higher and bett manifesto which was set to music and let dov from the midnight heavens of Bethlehem ag ago! The world has got to come to this. Wi not make it the peroration of the nineteen century? Are we going to make a present the twentieth century of reeking hospitals a dying armies and hemispheric graveyards? I you want the hoofs of other cavalry-horses the breasts of fallen men? Do you want oth harvest fields gullied with wheels of gun c riages? Do you want the sky glaring wi conflagration of other homesteads? Ah! t nineteenth century has seen enough of w Make the determination that no other centu shall be blasted with it.

During the first half of this century we pended eight million dollars to educate the dians, and four hundred millions to kill the According to a reliable statistician, during t century we have had the Crimean war, whi slew seven hundred and eighty-five thousan and cost one billion seven hundred million d lars; and our American civil war, which slew million men, North and South, and cost lions of dollars, digging a grave trench fro Barnegat Lighthouse, N. J., to "Lone Mou tain" cemetery at San Francisco. And y must add to these the Zulu war, and the Austr Prussian war, and the Danish war, and the It ian war, and the Americo-Spanish war, Franco-Prussian war, and the China-Japane war, and the war of 1812, and the Napoleon and other wars. What a record for this boast Nineteenth Century! It has called out all realms of Diabolus in grand parade, Satan viewing them from platform of fire, as demons in companies, and regiments, and br ades, have passed with banners of fire a riding on horses of fire, keeping step to the of the grand march of hell. In the name the God of nations, let the scroll of blood put upon the shelf, never to be taken down.

Will it not be grand if on the first day of twentieth century the Last Will and Tes ment of the nineteenth century shall be open and it shall be found to read: "In the nam of God, amen. I, the dying century, do ma this, my Last Will and Testament. I give a bequeath to my heir, the twentieth centu peace of nations; swords, which I direct to beaten into plowshares, and spears, which m be turned into pruning hooks; armories, to changed into school houses, and fortresses, be rebuilt into churches; and I order that gre er honors be put on those who save life th upon those who destroy it. This Last Wil sign, seal, and deliver on the thirty-first day December, in the year of our Lord, ninete hundred, all the civilized nations of earth a all the glorified nations of heaven witnessing

But what we do as individuals, as church as nations, as continents, we must do ve soon, if we want the transition from century century to be a worthy transition; for I he the trumpets of the approaching century a the clattering hoofs of the host it leads on.

The other night, while thinking of this s ject, as to the way in which we ought to me the new century, so near at hand, I fell into sort of dreamy state, in which the chronolo of events seemed obliterated, and I saw Pennsylvania avenue two processions, whi seemed to meet each other as this century go out and another comes in. As near as I cou tell in that dreamy state, it was the last nig of the century, and I saw the spirits of t mighties in American history passing down t marble steps of the Capitol on yonder hill, a moving through that memorable Pennsylvar avenue. There they come, the departed me bers of the Supreme Court of our nation, l on by Chief Justice Marshall. There co the distinguished men of our national legis ture, in which are Webster, and Clay, a Benton, and Calhoun, and Preston, and C win, and Edward Everett, and John Quin Adams, and Samuel L. Southard, and Ruf Choate, and others—some great for statesma ship, others great for wit, others great for e quence, others great for courage. They pass through the avenue. Yonder I see the funer pageants of Senators and three Presiden Banners draped in gloom, tossing black plum ollowing tossing black plumes. Catafalques, each drawn by ight white horses, while minute- uns boom. Yonder a nation in ears follows the victims of the xploded "Princeton," the slain ecretaries of State and Navy. residential inaugural proces- ions, accompanied by vanished usic that has returned, the lips gain on flutes and cornets long ago rusted, ut now repolished, and I hear the beating rums, which silent for many years are again ounded, greeted by the huzza of hundreds of housands of voices. Many decades hushed, ut again resonant. Regiments of the army of merican Revolution followed by regiments of he army of 1812, and regiments of the army of 864. They have come up from the encamp- ients in the tomb to take part in this great arade in honor of the century on this night assing away.

As that long and brilliant procession, vani- hed, but now a resurrected and remarshaled ost. passes before that reviewing stand, I see nother procession coming from the opposite irection to meet this. They are the Presi- ents, the Senators, the legislators, the judges, he philanthropists, the deliverers of the twen- eth century. They come up from the schools, he churches, the farms, the cities, the home- eads of the continent. Their cradles were ocked on the banks of the Alabama, and the t. Lawrence, and the Oregon, and the Andros- oggin, and the Potomac, and the Hudson. hey have just as firm a tread, just as well- uilt a brow, just as great a brain, just as noble a eart, just as high a purpose, just as sublime a ourage, passing in procession one way through hat avenue as the other procession passes the ther way. Yea, the men coming out of the ventieth century in some respects surpass hose coming out of the nineteenth century, r they have had better advantage, and will ave grander opportunities, and will take part higher achievements of civilization and hristianity. What a meeting on this midnight velve o'clock, the two processions of the ighties of the two centuries! Uncover all eads and bow reverently in prayer. Thank od for the good done by the procession oming out of the past, and pray to God for ood to be done by the procession coming out the future. But halt, both processions! alt! Halt! Break ranks! Back to your rones, ye mighties of the nineteenth century, nd enjoy the reward of your fidelity! Back your homes, ye mighties of the twen- eth century, your Presidential mansions, our editorial-rooms, your stupendous respon- bilities, and do the work for the twentieth ntury! Farewell, and tears for the one pro- ession! Hail, and welcome to the other pro- ession!

It has been a custom in all Christian lands r people to keep watch-night as an old year es out and a new year comes in. People semble in churches about ten o'clock of that st night of the old year, and they have ayers, and songs and sermons, and congratu- tions until the hands of the church clock al- ost reach the figure twelve, and then all bow silent prayer; and the scene is mightily im- ressive, until the clock in the tower of the urch, or the clock in the tower of the city ll, strikes twelve, and then all rise and sing ith jubilant voice the grand doxology.

But what a tremendous watchnight the world soon to celebrate! This century will depart twelve o'clock of the thirty-first of Decem- r of the year 1900. What a night that will , whether starlit, or moonlit, or dark with mpest. It will be such a night as you and I ever saw. In all neighborhoods, and towns, nd cities, and continents, audiences will as- mble, and bow in prayer, waiting for the last reath of the dying century, and when the ock shall strike twelve, there will be a sol- nnity and an overwhelming awe such as has ot been felt for a hundred years; and then all he people will arise and chant the welcome of new century of joy and sorrow, of triumph nd defeat, of happiness and woe, and neigh- orhood will shake hands with neighborhood, nd church with church, and city with city, and ontinent with continent, and hemisphere with emisphere, and earth with heaven, at the stu- endous departure and the majestic arrival. ay we all be living on earth to see the sol- nnities and join in the songs and shake nds in the congratulations of that watch- ght; or, if between this and that any of us hould be off and away, may we be inhabitants that land where "a thousand years are as he day," and in the presence of that angel oken of in the Apocalypse, who at the end the world will, standing with one foot on he sea and the other foot on the land, "swear y him that liveth forever and ever, that time hall be no longer."

Where the Cereus Blooms.

Life and Social Conditions in Mexico, the Land of Natural Wonders, Sunday Bull-Fights, Tortillas and Giant Cacti.

From a Special Correspondent.

GUAYMAS, SONORA, MEX., Nov. 10.

THIS is truly the land of the "Reina de la Nocha" (Queen of the Night), as our Mexican friends poetically denominate the exquisite night-blossoming cereus, (flash-light photographs of which are at the head of this letter.) It is a great pity that one cannot see this magnificent flower at its loveliest by daylight. Its peculiarity recalls your American poet's apostrophe to the moon, which was so dull and lifeless in the day-time:

> But the night revealed to me
> All its grace and mystery.

The fruit of the plant is very refreshing, when found in the woods on a hot day. It is of a blood-red color, and somewhat resembles the strawberry.

Persons who have never traveled in these latitudes, have no idea of the tremendous size to which certain species of cacti attain. Lately, I saw one of the largest dimensions in the vicinity of Ortiz, on the way to the camp at Barranca, whither I went to investigate the coal mines. This giant cactus is about twenty-five feet in height, but I was told of others not far away that have attained an altitude of forty-five feet. I confess I was unable to ascertain any useful purpose to which these mammoth plants can be put, although they make a very fine and picturesque effect in a mountain landscape. The smaller kind are serviceable in a way. Many of them are about twelve inches in diameter, and they are frequently used by travelers as a means of securing a water supply. The tender shoots are made into a sweetmeat, being cut up into pieces, about three inches square, and boiled in sugar. This delicacy they call "bisnaga."

A GIANT CACTUS.

THE MAIN STREET OF GUAYMAS ON SUNDAY; BULL-FIGHTERS IN FOREGROUND.

There is a delightful freshness about some of the home arrangements here, particularly the inner courts of city residences. They are really beautiful garden spots, and pleasant and cool retreats during the heat of the day. The sweet orange tree is generally the limit of embellishment, on account of the scarcity of soil. The city itself is literally founded on rock and all earth in which plants and trees are nursed has to be carried into the town in carts.

One of the wonders of this region is the great natural salt deposit on Carmen Island, some 130 miles south of this city. This famous deposit, which is on the seashore, is two and a half miles in length and is practically inexhaustible. Eighteen wagons haul salt from this vast natural storehouse daily, and it is stored in piles near the railroad, whence it is conveyed to ships and loaded for export. About forty acres of the salt field have been dug this far. There is a spring at the inland end, which floods the mine, and the water has to be pumped out before more salt can be taken. Then the wet salt is placed in piles and dried, before shipping. An analysis shows 98.25 per cent. of chloride of sodium or almost chemically pure salt. There are slight traces of iron, magnesia and lime. Much of this salt goes to the United States and a good deal to the mountainous districts of Mexico. The laborers who work in these salt fields enjoy splendid health. They are good-natured and willing, and with the exception of occasional cases of intemperance, live quiet and uneventful lives.

Nothing could be simpler than the food of the average worker's household, whether white or Indian. In the huts near here, I have seen Indian families living on the rocks happy and contented, with beans as their staple food, which with tortillas (the Mexican cakes), they ate with relish three times every day in the year. It would make our American home folks smile to see the kitchen arrangements in such cabins—a conglomeration of tin cans, crude earthenware, and possibly an old basket comprising the entire furniture, with Mother Earth as the bed, and the blue sky dotted with golden stars as the only covering. Yet contentment and a measure of happiness reigns even among such meagre surroundings as these.

It must not be supposed, because social conditions here are so different from those that prevail in the United States, that all are densely ignorant. There are country schools where the children learn rapidly. The girls are shy and reserved, while the little olive-hued boys are just as mischievous and fun-loving as boys in other parts of the world. They rarely fight and never maltreat animals. Many write prettily, and there are instances where the Indian children have excelled the others in primary studies at least.

Children here lack ambition, and manual labor and any unusual mental effort is avoided as much as possible. As soon as they can read and write, they usually consider their education finished. Work—especially that of an artisan—is beneath their dignity, and many devices are employed to enable them to live without such a degradation. Borrowing is a favorite method of getting around the difficulty of earning a livelihood.

It would not be just to say that all are thus indolent, however. There are, of course, many bright exceptions among both whites and Indians. One sees hardy Indian fishermen busily at work all day long, and the abundance of fish, oysters and shrimps attest his activity. The ranch laborers, too, are hearty and robust. They get two or three reales per day, and a half-bushel of corn weekly to maintain their families and are generally contented with their lot. Groups of Seris Indians come to the towns and villages to sell their wares, consisting of ornamental mats made of the brilliant plumage of native birds. These plumes are taken with the skin entire and preserved by an Indian process. Unfortunately the Seris are addicted to the liquor habit. The Tarumaris, from the higher range of the Sierra Madre are peaceable and industrious, but like the Seris would rather dispose of their products for liquor than for cash. Their clothing is simple enough, consisting of a blanket thrown over the shoulders, and another draped below the waist.

INDIAN CHILDREN OF SONORA.

I have found the Indians themselves an interesting study. They are numerous in the immediate vicinity of Guaymas, and are mostly employed as laborers, loading and discharging ships, carrying heavy goods, driving teams, etc. Their women make good cooks and general domestics. It is not customary here for such servants to sleep in the houses of their employers, with the exception of such as are in close attendance on ladies and children. Usually, a well-to-do home requires a number of such domestics, who are hired at from three to eight dollars per month, Mexican silver. A majority of the laundresses are Indians, who take the clothing from their patrons' homes to their own cabins in the suburbs, and return them later in the week, not infrequently delaying the delivery until Sunday morning.

One of the photographs I have taken will be specially interesting to your readers as showing how Mexicans regard the Sabbath. This is the land of bull-fights, and Sunday is, above all others, the day chosen for this brutal sport. I have shown you, with the camera, the "parrada" of the bull-fights at 11 A. M. on Sunday,—an hour when Christian congregations in the United States and elsewhere are raising their hearts and voices to God in prayer in the churches. Although much has been done toward evangelizing certain portions of Mexico, a great deal remains to be accomplished before this part of the vast "neglected Continent" becomes fully acquainted with the Gospel.

These impressions from an observer in this distant part of the globe may interest your circle of readers. It is a country full of new and strange surprises, beautiful as to scenery, grand as to possibilities and entertaining as to its people and their social surroundings.

PUGILIST BENDIGO'S CONVERSION.

WHEN I was visiting in London in 1874, I read a notice in a daily paper that "Bendigo," a notorious pugilist would relate his Christian experience in the West End of London, in company of the Rev. Dr. Hague, of the Baptist church. We found the hall packed with the elite and sporting men of London. On the platform appeared the converted prize-fighter, who was over six feet high, with long and muscular arms. His hair was iron-grey and his face without a scar. No antagonist had been able to touch his face, but I noticed that his knuckles had been knocked out of shape. He began by saying: "My friends, this is my third visit to the metropolis. Once I came to fight Deaf Burke, and I whipped him; and then I came to fight Ben Caunt, and I whipped him; and now I have come to fight the devil, and I expect to whip him. I lived in Nottingham and was the hardest sinner in that neighborhood. A Wesleyan preacher was announced to hold a revival service and I was induced to go and hear him. He preached on the Saviour's arrest in the garden of Gethsemane; and in his discourse he described Judas Iscariot and his band of Jerusalem rowdies, who had come to arrest the Saviour of mankind. When he described their attack on the Saviour, I felt I would like to have been there, and would have protected the innocent man and cleaned out the rowdies. Next night I was induced to go again, and the preacher chose for his subject the conversion of Saul the Tartar, then went on to describe how Christ had converted the Tartar, and I said to myself, 'If Jesus can convert a Tartar he can save me,' and I went forward for prayers. I was the most besotted and wretched man in Nottingham, but Christ saved me, and I am here to tell what he has done for my soul."

BISHOP JOHN P. NEWMAN.

Two thoughts were suggested to my mind; that Jesus would condescend to enter such a depraved soul, and that he could make a saint of such a sinner. That man became a bright and shining light. BISHOP JOHN P. NEWMAN.

An Habitual Drunkard Redeemed.

WHILE holding a meeting in a Southern city, there came forward one night a man in the last stage of drunkenness. He wore a very shabby suit of clothes, and looked the picture of despair. When I asked him why he had come, he said: "Can Jesus Christ do anything for me?" I told him that beyond doubt he could. We prayed for him and others, and he went away. A minister present told me he was the son of one of the most prominent men of that city; he had spent two fortunes, was a perfect outcast, and his wife and children were in want. Seven years passed away, and I was again in the same city. I received a letter one morning asking me to come to a certain number on a certain street, and take dinner with a man who wished me to see "what God could do for a drunkard." I went, and found a beautiful little cottage, with a canary singing in its cage in a window. A bright-eyed little girl answered my ring, and informed me that the man whom I wished to see was her father, and lived there. In a few minutes the wife came in and welcomed me cordially; then husband and children came, and we sat and chatted pleasantly. After dinner, having spent a delightful hour, he grasped my hand, and said: "Wherever you go, I want you to tell the people what the Lord can do for a drunkard, and if you wish you may tell my name." He occupies a good position, and is still doing well.

Transformed Through Prayer.

WHILE I was preaching daily in a country church in the South, an intelligent young man in the community, who belonged to an infidel family, came to the meetings and did all he could to disturb them by talking aloud and provoking those near him to laughter. He attracted the attention of all the Christians present, who did not rebuke him or even so much as ask him to desist, but began to pray for his conversion. All seemed to feel that the success of the meetings depended on the conversion of that young man. No public prayer was made for him, but the people in their homes and on the way to church were impelled to pray for him. On the second day he was quiet, and on the third day, with great burden of conviction, he confessed his sins, and asked to be shown the way of life. He at once accepted the Lord Jesus as his Saviour, united with the church and began to seek the salvation of others. A. C. DIXON

Miriam.

I SHALL never forget the winter evening, in 1887, when Miriam entered the Florence Mission, in Bleecker street, New York, and told me her story. She said she was an English girl of good family, and it was easy to believe it, for there were evident marks of culture and refinement in her person and manner, which confirmed her statement. But how she had sunk! Years of dissipation had made her face bloated and had given her eyes that uncertain, furtive look that tells of long and heavy potations. She said that she had acquired the love of liquor as a girl in her father's house. She was accustomed to take wine at the table, as her parents and sisters did, but, unlike them, she soon felt a craving for it that was irresistible. Again and again she pledged herself to abstain; her family forgave her for the disgrace she was bringing on them, and she started a new life; but only to fall into more terrible degradation. Finally, in the hope that in new surroundings she might reform, her family provided the means for her to come to America. It was a fatal step. Away from her home and all who knew her, she was under no restraint, and she drank without fear or remorse. Her story of her years in New York was one of steady demoralization. It was awful. She was thoroughly disgusted with herself and her life, and as she told me her story, she declared that she would do and suffer anything to be delivered, if it were possible, but she feared it was not. I knelt with her in prayer, and then I opened the Bible and showed her the promises and the assurances that Christ was able and willing to save those who trust in him. It was a long struggle, but at last a spark of hope was kindled, and she placed her case in Christ's hands. Gradually, as her faith increased and she found that Christ really did give the power she needed, her heart was filled with joy. I never knew so great a change. Humble and grateful, but always happy, she lived very near to God. She became our organist at the mission, and her wonderful skill drew many passers-by in Bleecker street within its walls. They were thrilled by her power, but we, who knew her, loved her for herself. This continued until April 2, 1898. On that day, she was going to visit one of our saved girls, when she was stricken with apoplexy. Her friends at the mission were sent for, but before they reached her side, her spirit had taken its flight. A few days before her death, she had written to me, referring to our first meeting, more than ten years ago, and reminding me of what I had said of Christ's power to save. "It is all true," she wrote. "He saved me and took from me all my evil desires, and made me a new creature."

The Return of the Prodigal.

AMONG the surprises of my life was a letter which came to me from a young man evidently born in a refined, lovely Christian home. It was so full of gratitude and kindness that if it had been my own son, it could not have touched my heart more deeply. I give a part of his letter below:—

"Dear Madam:—You do not know me, nor do you know that you have helped me into the Kingdom. I thank God for the Bowery Mission, and for putting it into your heart to spend your time winning souls for Christ. I am rejoicing in the light now, and would not turn back for all the world. I was a prodigal son, smoking, drinking, gambling—these all were part of my life. I was estranged from parents and friends. They did not know if I were dead or alive. After I was converted I wanted to work among the boys of the Bowery. I hope to bring others to the same Saviour that I have found." Many of his old comrades have been led to Christ through his testimony and example.

A Soul Won By a Hymn.

A MAN in one of our meetings had been brought there against his will; he had come through some personal influence. When he got there we were singing:

Come! oh, come to Me!
Weary, heavy-laden,
Come! oh, come to Me!

He said afterward he thought he never saw so many fools together in his life before. The idea of a number of men standing there singing, "Come! come! come!" When he started home he could not get this little word out of his head; it kept coming back all the time. He went into a saloon, and ordered some whiskey, thinking to drown it. But it kept coming back. He drank more whiskey; but the words kept ringing in his ears. He said to himself, "What a fool I am for allowing myself to be troubled in this way!" He had another glass, and finally got home. He went off to bed, but could not sleep; it seemed as if the very pillow kept whispering, "Come! come!" "What a fool I was for ever going to that meeting at all!" he muttered. When he got up he took the little hymn book, found the hymn, and read it over. "What nonsense!" he said to himself; "the idea of a rational man being disturbed by that hymn." He set fire to the hymn book, but could not burn up the little word "Come!" He declared he would never go to another meeting; but next night he came again. Strange to say, we were singing the same hymn. "There is that miserable old hymn again," he complained; "what a fool I am for coming."

D. L. MOODY

Sometime afterward, that man arose in a meeting of young converts, and told this story. Pulling out the little hymn book—for he had bought another copy—and opening it at this hymn, he said: "I think this hymn is the sweetest and best in the English language. God blessed it to the saving of my soul." D. L. MOODY.

How a Statesman Came to the Cross.

ABOUT fifteen years ago, I was conducting revival services at Danville, a beautiful little town in Illinois. The meetings were largely attended, and many experienced a blessing. One Sabbath evening, I took for my text: "How long halt ye between two opinions?" The audience of fully a thousand persons was deeply interested. They were all friends and neighbors and knew each other, and it was more like a great family gathering than a public assemblage. When the invitation was given, there arose in the audience a fine-looking man of distinguished appearance. He came forward to the altar-rail, knelt a few moments and then arose and in clear and emphatic voice, made profession of his faith, declaring that he had there found the light and peace of salvation. As he spoke all eyes were upon him, and his act made a deep impression and led to many others accepting Christ. As I afterwards learned, the new convert was a man of national fame—Gen. B., a statesman and a commissioner at the head of an important Department of the Federal Government. He had never before taken serious thought of eternal things, and religion to him had been simply a matter of form and ceremonial. He afterward became a worker in our meetings and one of the most zealous and thoroughly consecrated Christians I have ever known. THOMAS HARRISON.

A Penitent Infidel.

ABOUT ten years ago, I was holding services in a populous town. I was told that the most prominent business man there was an infidel. He was a man of intelligence and morality, but a very pronounced opponent of religion, who missed no opportunity of denouncing Christianity and its professors. To our surprise, he attended the first meeting in the Presbyterian Church. We soon found, however, that he came to mock. The sermon that night was on the heinousness of sin. He went away seriously thoughtful. He came the next night. I preached on God's remedy for sin. He remained to pray, and went home a saved man. He closed his place of business for the two weeks I remained in the place, and visited every house in the town, and apologized to the people for having ever advocated infidel views, and assured them that the religion of Jesus Christ was a sublime reality. He told them of his own conversion and urged everyone to attend the meetings. Many came on his invitation and were saved. He lived seven years after that time, and during those years he steadfastly maintained his Christian profession. His funeral was largely attended, and there were many testimonies to the consistency of his Christian character and the earnestness with which he strove to win souls for Christ.

A Blind Hindoo Fakir's Conversion.

POONJA BHAGAT, Poonja the Saint, was a Hindoo Fakir of remarkable fame and sanctity. He had performed many of the severest penances known to his religion—sitting at times in the blazing heat of the sun with four large fires lighted around him, going on long pilgrimages and gaining great fame among his co-religionists. He was particularly in request amongst the sick and dying, owing to the supposition that he was able to "cast out devils," it being supposed that all sickness was due to the action of some eighteen evil spirits. By passing his hand over the body of the patient and professing to swallow the evil spirit (who was powerless to harm him on account of his extraordinary sanctity), he was reputed to possess the power of ridding persons of their maladies. For each devil who was extirpated, he received a separate fee. When the Salvation Army visited his neighborhood, Poonja Bhagat was gloriously converted. Although blind and absolutely dependent upon his medical practice—if such it could be called—for his support, he at once renounced it, donned the Salvation Army uniform and testified publicly to the change he had experienced. An officers' meeting was being held in the neighborhood of his village. Poonja, though not an officer, begged permission to attend, in order, as he said, that he might get filled with the Holy Ghost. He was not disappointed. It was extraordinary to witness the baptism of power and love that fell upon the old blind priest. Guided by his boy, he went to his native village and preached to his people with such power that he was able to report to us within a few days two hundred conversions. Officers were sent to his assistance, and a wonderful work ensued, which spread from village to village. Poonja, himself, was accepted as an officer and preached to the day of his death.

SINGING THROUGH PALESTINE.

a D. Sankey, the Gospel Minstrel, in the Holy Land—Songs of Gladness and Sadness at the Sacred Places where Jesus Walked.

SINGING ON DAVID'S TOWER.

THROUGHOUT the Christian world the name of Ira D. Sankey, the Gospel singer and evangelist, is a familiar household word. Mr. Sankey lately returned from an extended tour in the Holy Land, and he has recorded his experiences and observations for the benefit of the readers of this Journal. Coming from such a source, they cannot fail to be interesting. On reaching Egypt, he traveled from Cairo by train to Ismailia on the Suez Canal, and thence to Port Said, where he embarked for Jaffa. There he took train for Jerusalem. Of this journey he writes:

We had been but a moment or two on the train when we heard the whistling conductor call in a shrill voice, "All aboard for Jerusalem." In a moment more we were speeding away over the plains of Sharon, toward the mountains of Judea, twenty-five miles to the eastward. In this plain alone did we see any really good farming land. We saw them plowing as of old, the work still being done with a cow and a donkey yoked together, the wooden plow having but one handle. At the second stop we made, our dragoman ran into a field by the roadside and plucked a handful of wild flowers for us, saying, as he held up a little red blossom, "This is the Rose of Sharon." The very flower was the first thing that made us realize that we were really in the land forever made sacred by Him who said, "I am the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley."

A Song at the Jaffa Gate.

Upon arriving at the Jerusalem railway station, we received many invitations to ride in various conveyances, but declining them all, we engaged a quiet-looking Armenian, who drove us to our destination. As we went along toward the Jaffa Gate, looking up at the towering walls of the city, an old hymn, learned in our boyhood days, came vividly to mind, and we went sweeping through the gate singing:

Jerusalem the golden,
With milk and honey blest:
Beneath thy contemplation,
Sink heart and voice oppress.

But, alas! the song was soon turned into a sigh as we beheld the real condition of the city. Our glorious visions of a "golden city with milk and honey blest," etc., was all too soon dashed to the ground. We were permitted to drive only a few rods within the walls, where, on the crowded "Street of David," we found our hotel.

Our first attempt at sight-seeing was a visit to the portion of the city known as Mt. Zion. Here we found the excellent schools for native children, founded some years ago by the late Bishop Gobat. We heard the children sing a number of the "Gospel Hymns," which have become well known in Jerusalem; and, at the request of the teachers, I taught the school one or two new sacred songs, and sang for them two or three solos, including "The Ninety and Nine."

Singing on David's Tower.

We went next to see the Tower of David, one of the highest points in the city, and found it in the possession of the Sultan's soldiers. With some difficulty, we secured permission to ascend to the top, up a narrow and dangerous stairway, accompanied by an armed soldier. After enjoying a magnificent view of the city and surrounding country, the Turk keeping his eye on us the while, we turned suddenly upon him and commenced singing in full voice a verse of the 121st Psalm:

I to the hills will lift mine eyes.
From whence doth come mine aid;
My safety cometh from the Lord.
Who heaven and earth has made.

Of course, the Moslem did not understand a word of the Psalm, but seemed quite interested in the singing, and after receiving the usual "Backsheesh," he escorted us safely down.

We felt much relieved when we got away from the place and away from the savage-looking warriors.

In "Little Bethlehem."

One pleasant afternoon we went out to Bethlehem, which is only about six miles from Jerusalem, toward the south. The road is hard and smooth, and we soon came to a high point in the way, where we had a fine view of the town, bathed in the sunlight, on the hillside a mile away. From this spot we could see, in the valley below, the "Shepherd's Field," where the herdsmen "watched their flocks by night, all seated on the ground." Along this road Christ had often passed, and we could not refrain the feeling that we were now treading on holy ground. While looking at this beautiful picture, our beloved Phillips Brooks' hymn, familiar to all readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, came into mind:

O! little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie.
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep.
The silent stars go by.

As we entered the narrow streets of the village, much more cleanly than those of Jerusalem, we were struck with the beauty of the women and children. Upon asking our dragoman how it came that they were so much more beautiful here than elsewhere, he replied, "Sir, it is because the mother of Jesus pronounced a blessing upon the women of Bethlehem the day her son was born, and it has been upon them ever since."

When we entered the Church of the Nativity, which is built over the manger where Christ was born, we were startled by again seeing soldiers with rifle and sabre, standing guard to keep the peace between contending factions, who came to worship around the Cradle of the Babe of Bethlehem. After descending a stone stairway and wandering about through dark rooms and passages, lighted only by a single wax taper in the hands of our guide, and having many places of interest pointed out to us, we came at last to a recess in the rock, about six feet square, which they said was the actual manger where the world's Redeemer was born. A large granite or marble slab marked the sacred spot. Gold and silver lamps that are ever kept burning, cast a weird light over the place.

LITTLE ONES OF BETHLEHEM.

While we stood there, many worshipers came prostrating themselves before the stone, kissing it with evident religious fervor. So constant is this devotion manifested here, that it is said the stone has been kissed away and renewed several times.

On account of the fine weather prevailing at this time, we decided (after returning to Jerusalem), to go at once to the River of Jordan and the Dead Sea. The road is now a very good one for carriages and is the only one leading from Jerusalem to Jericho. Over this road Jesus passed on his way to Gethsemane and Calvary. It was on this highway also the man fell among thieves and was found by the good Samaritan. The place where the inn was located in those days is still pointed out, and is now called the Half-way House. We stopped here for an hour to rest our horses, and then hastened down the mountain, stopping for a few moments by the way to look at a beautiful monastery situated in a deep wild gorge opening out into the valley of the Jordan, through which passes the brook Cherith. It is located on the spot where Elijah was fed by the ravens. We crossed the little stream at the foot of the mountain when we reached the valley, not, however, without being stranded in the middle of the brook for some minutes against a huge boulder. The water was high, the driver a poor one, and only after considerable effort did we get past the rock and safely to the land.

Boating on the Jordan.

From the Dead Sea we drove several miles before reaching the ford of the Jordan. Much rain had recently fallen in the valley and the roads were very bad. We barely escaped being stranded in a huge pond just as we approached the shore of the famous river. The carriage which followed ours stuck fast in the midst of the slough and the ladies had to be carried to dry land on the backs of the dragomen. We were disappointed with the appearance of the "stormy banks," of which we had so often sung, but after partaking of a hearty lunch by the river side, we secured a small boat and crossed to the "Other side of Jordan." The water was very high and muddy, and in some places the banks were overflowed. They said that the spot where we took our boat was the actual place where Jesus was baptized of John.

The Home of Mary and Martha.

As we returned to Jerusalem, we stopped for lunch under some old olive trees on the roadside, close to Bethany, and while we sat beneath their shade we looked at the little village and thought of Him who often came here to find a quiet resting place with Mary and Martha, away from the crowd and turmoil of the city. The location is the same as in the olden time; the houses and streets are all changed. When we went into the village we were disappointed as we observed the wretched condition of the people. They pointed out to us what they said were the remains of the house of Mary and Martha, and also the grave of Lazarus; but we did not take much interest in these places, well knowing that the real house as well as the grave had long since passed away.

We visited the Garden of Gethsemane, which lies in a deep valley on the east side of the city, at the foot of Mt. Olivet. A high stone wall surrounds the Garden, preventing one from seeing anything within. We walked along the eastern wall, beset by a dozen or more wretched lepers, crying for "Backsheesh," until we found the gate leading into the Garden. It was opened by the guard and when we entered we found an iron picket fence, through which we could see everything within the Garden but could touch nothing. There were several old olive trees, two or three tall cypress trees and a lot of small shrubbery.

A Cluster of Flowers from Gethsemane.

These with some bright flowers were all that could be seen. We were anxious to get some little memento of our visit to this sacred spot and seeing an old man working among the flower beds we called to him, intimating that we would be glad to have at least a single flower to take away. He soon understood our wish and, going to a bed of flowers near one of the oldest olive trees, plucked a handful and gave them to us. We felt very grateful and taking a silver coin we offered to pay him for them, but he shook his head, made the sign of the Cross on his breast, and with a smile returned to his work. We looked at him in amazement.

This venerable man was the first person we had met in either Egypt or Palestine who had refused money when it was offered. As we turned to go away we heard one of our party say, "God bless the old gardener of Gethsemane, and may his tribe increase."

The Right Password.

. . THERE will be a password at the gate of Heaven. A great multitude comes up and knocks. The gatekeeper says, "The password?"

They say: "We have no password. We were great on earth, and now we come to be great in Heaven."

A voice from within answers: "I never knew you."

Another group comes and knocks. The gatekeeper says: "The password?"

They say: "We have no password. We have done many noble things on earth. We endowed colleges and took care of the poor."

The voice from within again says: "I never knew you."

A third group approaches and knocks. The gatekeeper says: "The password?"

They answer: "We were wanderers from God, and deserved to die; but we heard the voice of Jesus—"

"Aye, aye!" says the gatekeeper, "that is the password! Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let these people in!"

How Do You Do?

A CHINAMAN meeting a Chinaman in his native country has for salutation, "Have you eaten your rice?" An Egyptian meeting an Egyptian in that hot land, has for salutation, "Do you sweat copiously?" A Frenchman meeting a Frenchman in his native country, has for salutation, "How do you carry yourself?" But an American meeting an American is apt to say, "How do you do?"

In so greeting the readers of this "Million Edition" of our paper, we are somewhat agitated and embarrassed because throughout all newspaperdom it is estimated that on an average five people read a newspaper, and that reveals the fact that ten million eyes may fall upon this page, if each reader have the usual equipment of eyes. But we must put aside our embarrassment, and give salutation first to all the homes into which this periodical may enter. Ah, yes! The home is where we live and expect to die. If we are all right there, we are all right everywhere. As a newspaper, we bless the children and the old folks, and all the ages between. Peace be upon table, and chair, and couch, upon parlor and kitchen. May neither want nor sickness nor accident enter the circle, and when the time arrives for departing this life, may the inmates not know they are going, until without pain they wake up amid the gardens of an everlasting Eden, and the throne-rooms of eternal Palaces.

WE OFFER our salutation to the farmers. Born in the country we know all about the trials of a farmer's life. We often hear about the independent life of a farmer. Independent of what? Of the curculio that stings the peach trees, of the rust in the wheat, of the long rain with the rye down? Independent of the grass hopper, of the locust, of the army-worm, of the potato-bug? Independent of the drought that burns up the harvest, of the cow with the hollow-horn, of the sheep with the rot? Independent of the snow bank out of which he must shovel himself? Many farmers who have made their fortunes in the city and go out in the country to build houses with all the modern improvements, and make farming a luxury may not need any encouragement, but the yeomanry who get their living out of the soil, and who that way have to clothe their families, and educate their children, and pay their taxes and meet the interest on mortgaged farms—such men have a terrific struggle. For them we mean to gather up all the cheering agricultural facts, and tell the story of plow, and hoe, and threshing machine, and for them ask the perpetual blessing of Him of whom Christ said, "My Father is the husbandman."

OUR SALUTATION is also to business men. We would like, this coming year, to lessen the number of the martyrs of counting room and stock exchange. We will hail the bargain maker with stories of alleviation. There is no danger that our complimentary pages will puff him up, for he has so many things to roughly take him down. Before the night of the next day after he reads this, some shop-going person will come in and tell him that his prices are exorbitant, and that his goods are of an inferior quality, and that his show-window gave promise of far better things than he found inside. Before the night of the day in which we say encouraging words to that merchant, there will be some crank, male or female, who will come into the store and depreciate everything, and haul down enough goods from the shelves to fit out a family for a whole winter, without buying a cent's worth. If the merchant be a grocer, there will be some one before night who will come into his establishment and taste of this, and taste of that, and taste of something else, in that way stealing all the profits of anything that he may purchase—buying two apples while he is eating one orange. No danger that the merchant will become apoplectic with plethora of praise. Our benediction shall fall on all counters, and day-books, and ledgers, and exchangers, and salesmen, and bargain makers.

THEN WE shall have weekly greetings for all mechanics, and toilers with hand and foot as well as brain. There are employers who say nothing to their employees except to swear at them. We shall cheer all those who bore with a bit, or shave with a plane, or strike with the hammer, or cut with a broad-axe. We will show what such men have been, and what they may become, notwithstanding all obstacles. Let all mechanics and toilers everywhere remember that Christ was a carpenter.

Yea, our salutation is to all occupations and professions. We mean to cheer the aged with thoughts of eternal juvenescence, and persuade the herdsman amid the troughs of sin to go back to the banquet at the Father's homestead. We have seen cars so arranged that one car going down the hill rolled another car up the hill. They nearly balanced each other: and every man who finds life up-hill ought to be helped by those who have passed the heights and are descending to the vale. Oh, let us bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ!

FOR THE next twelve months we pledge ourselves as a newspaper to heal all the wounds, and irradiate all the darkness, and cheer all the disheartened, as far as we have any power to do so. We rally for this work the pictorial art, and will cause to dawn upon our readers the faces of men and women who are trying to make the world better, and all the great humanitarian, and evangelistic movements of our day and generation will be brought before our readers in detail.

If, as in the time past, we appealed for the famine-stricken, and the war-ravaged, and the earthquake shaken peoples of the earth, and received response, and distributed alms in America, in Armenia, in Constantinople, in India, in Russia, in Cuba, we will do so again if other calamities should befall the nations, only trying to help on larger scale, as the doors of opportunity are being swung wider open.

NOW, LET our forty printing-presses roll and rumble with the largest edition ever attempted by a religious newspaper. Prospered be the express companies, and the railroad trains, and the United States and European and Asiatic mails which carry it! May it be at least like one pinion in the wing of the Apocalyptic angel that is to fly through the midst of heaven proclaiming glad tidings to all lands and all people. We ask for the prayers of all the good in behalf of the usefulness of our "Million Edition."

Partiality in Bible Reading.

IN study of the Scriptures one part is not to absorb attention to the neglect of others. Let us not be so pleased with the lily that Christ points out in His sermon that we cannot see the raven that flies past; nor, while we examine the salt to find if it has lost its savor, forget to take the candle from under the bushel. The song of the morning stars at the creation must have response in the doxology of the hundred and forty and four thousand. David's harp and the resurrection trumpet are accordant. The pennon swung from the cedar masts of ships of Tarshish must be answered by the sail of fishing boat on Gennesareth. Into this great battle for God we are to take Gideon's sword, and David's sling, and the white horse of Victory on which Immanuel triumphs. Hiddekel and Jordan must be confluent. Pisgah and Moriah, Sinai and Calvary, must all stand in the great Scriptural ranges. No solo or quartette in this Bible music, but the battle chorus of all the patriarchs, prophets, evangelists and apostles.

Wasted Time.

THE endless study of proprieties and etiquette, patterns and styles, is bedwarfing to the intellect. How belittling the study of the cut of a coat, or the tie of a cravat, or the wrinkle in a shoe, or the color of a ribbon! How some are worried if something gets untied, or hangs awry, or is not nicely adjusted! With a mind capable of measuring the height and depth of great subjects; able to unravel mysteries; to walk through the universe; to soar up into the infinity of God's attributes—hovering perpetually over a new style of hat. I have known men, reckless as to their character, and regardless of interests momentous and eternal, exasperated by the shape of a vest-button!

There are eighty thousand native Christians in China, and over seventy thousand in Japan.

It is said that Admiral Dewey spent the night before the battle of Manila in reading the Bible and in earnest prayer.

It is estimated that the annual gain of Christians throughout the world is about one hundred thousand, as against sixty thousand ten years ago.

There are now in London seventy-three Young Men's Christian Associations, with a total membership of 13,697. There are now in the world 6,466 centres—an increase of 234—with a membership of 515,000.

Sir Charles Turner is quoted by The Missionary Review as saying that "in India a Christian village can be distinguished from a non-Christian village by the greater cleanliness and greater cheerfulness of the inhabitants."

The Swedish Missionary Union has on the Congo six stations, with twenty out-stations; about thirty European missionaries, forty-four native evangelists, forty-three schools with 1,083 children. During last year 261 converts were baptized.

While portions of the Bible have been translated into nearly 400 languages and dialects, the whole Bible has been published in 107. Of these, 40 are in Europe, 41 in Asia, 13 in Africa, 10 in Australasia and Oceanica, and 3 in North America.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings in Minneapolis, Minn., were very largely attended. The leading churches of the city united in the movement and aided the evangelist in the individual work among the inquirers. A large number of young people are joining the various churches.

It was stated at the thirteenth anniversary of the North End Mission, Boston, Mass., that of the 204 women who during the year had passed through the Rescue Home, conducted by the Mission, 107 had been either restored to their families or positions had been found for them.

The Atlantic Ocean and the Upper Congo river, in Africa, have at last been united by a railroad from the coast to Stanley Pool, thus opening up 3,000 miles of navigable stream, and the very heart of the Congo region (not long ago in darkest ignorance of the Gospel), to civilization and missionary effort.

Spain is not altogether Roman Catholic. Recent statistics show that there are now in the country 56 Protestant pastors, 35 evangelists, and 16 helpers. There are 116 Protestant schools, with 61 male and 78 female teachers, who instruct 2,500 boys and 2,100 girls. There are 80 Sunday Schools with 3,250 scholars.

Official reports show that the number of marriages in France decreased from 286,662 in 1894 to 282,918 in 1895; the number of births from 855,388 to 834,173; while the deaths increased from 815,629 to 851,986. It is now proposed to offer as a bounty for the encouragement of marriage, a decrease in the term of army service for married men.

Within the last five years, five conspicuous missionaries of Oriental systems have appeared in this country. They have all been accorded a fair hearing, but it is worthy of remark that their advocacy has not resulted, in a single instance, in the founding of any movement which might be expected to influence the religious life and character of the American people.

News comes from Armenia that over the whole area of Asia Minor there is a slowly returning sense of security, and such a measure of freedom is already attained that the persecuted people can now assemble without tear to hear the Gospel of the love of God. The American missionaries have nearly four thousand orphans wholly or partially dependent upon them.

Dr. Lawes, the well-known missionary of New Guinea, in stating the progress that has been made in that island during the last twenty-two years, says that there are now ninety churches and schools in places where the utmost darkness and savagery existed; there are 3,000 scholars in connection with these schools, and 1,350 men and women are professed followers of Christ.

Dr. Baedeker, the distinguished European evangelist who is able to labor in nearly every nation in Europe, giving the people the Gospel in their own tongue, asks prayers for his success on his new tour on which he is just setting out. He will visit Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Turkey, Armenia, and South Russia. "I hope," writes the Doctor, "to preach the Gospel wherever opportunity offers, and to do whatsoever my hands find to do with my might."

In a recent statistical compilation of the numerical strength of the different Protestant denominations, H. K. Carroll, LL. D., gives these comparative figures: Methodists (white and colored), 5,653,280; Baptists, 4,153,857; Presbyterians, 1,490,340; Lutherans, 1,420,905; Disciples, 1,003,072; Protestant Episcopal, 636,773; Congregationalists, 622,557. Last year the gain was: Methodists, 108,770; Baptists, 85,318; Disciples, 80,000; Congregationalists, 20,000; Episcopalians, 19,930.

The China Inland Mission has been operating 32 years in China. About 200 stations and out-stations have been established and there are 342 native helpers, working together with nearly 700 missionaries. There are in connection with mission churches about 5,000 persons. Over 8,000 have been baptized, and Dr. J. Hudson Taylor has recently estimated that between 15,000 and 20,000 men and women have been brought to the Lord through the instrumentality of the mission workers.

A correspondent of a contemporary reports that on the walls of a factory at Toledo O., there is nailed a strip of tin bearing this inscription: "The Rule Governing this Factory. Therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." The owner of the factory says: "After nearly three years of testing I am pleased to say that the Golden Rule works. It is nearly 1,900 years since Jesus gave it to the world, and I think the least his professed followers can do is to try it."

A CENTRE OF FINANCE.

RARELY, indeed, at the close of a great war, does a nation, whether victor or vanquished, emerge from the conflict with its financial integrity absolutely unimpaired. Yet such is our fortunate condition, now that the trouble with Spain is a thing of the past, and after the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars—all Europe wondering at the liberality of our appropriations. At the most important juncture, Wall Street, the financial heart of the Union, from which the golden current is set flowing through a thousand arteries and channels, regulating the pulse of the business world, has gave evidence of its patriotism. Those exciting summer months revealed Wall Street in another aspect than that of a mere speculative centre, where the mad race for riches goes on so selfishly and furiously that men forget all else in the pursuit. There were times when the national feeling ran so high that the "ticker" was neglected, so far as the fluctuations of stocks were concerned, and the Cotton, Produce, Oil, Mining, and other exchanges were transformed from mercenary marts to patriotic assemblies. But those stirring days have gone, and there is in the appearance of the Street to-day nothing to suggest wars, great panics, failures or tragedies—events which are part of its past history. The wild plunges to grasp riches that proved elusive; the fortunes lost or won in an hour; the famous pools, rings, cliques, and combinations; the plannings and plottings of former years, the exploits of "bulls" and "bears," who mounted to fame over the ruin of others —all are mere memories, with few counterparts in the events of the present. The busy neighborhood shown in our illustration, is familiar to every one who has visited downtown New York. Looking up Wall Street toward old Trinity Church, the eye rests upon great business buildings in whose offices the daily transactions often aggregate many millions of dollars. Nearby are the various exchanges, while all around cluster banks, brokers' offices and the private quarters of the great operators who, in times of excitement, control the markets. Just at this moment the Street is peculiarly interesting by reason of the bright business outlook. Especially is this true of the grain crop of 1898, which promises to be marketed at prices that mean prosperity to the farmer, much of the crop going abroad. It is more than ever important in such a time of prosperity to remember the Source of all national good.

When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee (Deut. 8:10).

Why the Window was Dark.

A citizen of Springfield, Mass., tells a pathetic story of feminine fidelity. It appears that the people who live in a certain district of that city noticed that one window of a quaint little cottage in which they had always been accustomed to see a light burning, was dark. The oldest inhabitant had never seen that window before without a light. Inquiries elicited the fact that the old lady, who had lived there all her life, was dead. She was ninety years of age when she died. In her early girlhood she had loved a young sailor. They were engaged to be married. And when he told her that he was going to rejoin his ship, her heart sank. He comforted her as best he could, and they promised lifelong fidelity to each other. The girl said she should look anxiously for his return, and as a sign that she was waiting for him she would put a light in the gable window every night at sundown. Soon after his departure a furious storm swept the New England coast and his was one of the ships reported, "missing." Eventually everyone but the girl abandoned hope of any one on board being saved. She would not give up hope, and true to her promise, the light burned in the gable window every night. She lived seventy-two years after her lover's departure, but to the last, the light never failed to appear at sunset. Only now that her life has gone out, is the window dark. Such fidelity for so long a period is very rare. It is much to be wished that Christians who have a sure promise of their Lord's return were similarly careful to keep their lights burning.

Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning and ye yourselves like unto men who wait for their Lord (Luke 12:35).

Exiled by Filial Love.

A remarkable trial is reported by the Kentucky correspondent of a New York journal. He says that a young man, for whom the police of that State have been looking for more than two years, returned some months ago to his home and was arrested. The charge against him was murder. The victim was a farmer who was shot while ploughing in his field. There were no witnesses, but as there was a feud between the farmer's family and that of the young man on trial, suspicion was aroused against them. Evidence was found confirming the suspicion, but it pointed rather to the young man's father than to him. The young man, however, dropped expressions in the hearing of certain persons which were regarded as tantamount to a confession of his guilt. As he absconded shortly afterwards, there was no doubt in the public mind about his being the murderer, but though diligent search was made for him, he was not caught. For two years he was a fugitive and an exile. Recently his father died, and then he returned. He was able to prove his innocence of the crime by a confession, which his father made on his death-bed, in which he acknowledged having committed the murder. The son said that his father being in delicate health and unable to fly from justice, he had diverted suspicion to himself to save his father, and if he had been caught he would have suffered the penalty without implicating his father. He could not have given greater proof of his love for his father than in suffering exile and possibly an ignominous death in his stead. This was filial love, but how much more wonderful was the love of Christ for the human race.

While we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Rom. 5:8).

Implicated by His Reading.

A detective in Detroit, Mich., has explained to a reporter of the Journal of that city the process of reasoning by which he succeeded in making the cleverest capture of his career. He was called in by a defrauded company to secure the arrest of the manager who had absconded. There was no clue to his destination that the company could furnish, and as he had had three days' start, there was some fear that he would not be caught. The detective searched the missing man's house in hope of finding a clue. Among other things he found was the ticket entitling him to borrow books from a certain library. He went there and obtained a list of the books the defaulter had obtained. He found that they were all books describing the Central American states. He drew the inference that the man was going there, and immediately telegraphed a description of him to New Orleans, asking the police to watch departing steamers. The next day the fugitive was arrested in the office of a steamship line to which he went to purchase a ticket for Nicaragua. The detective's mode of reasoning was justified by the result, but if the same process were applied to people who hope one day to enter heaven, it is not every one whose destination could be inferred from the character of the books he reads.

They shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables (II. Timothy 4:4).

The Air as an Electrical Conductor.

A new discovery in electricity is announced by Mr. Tesla in the Electrical Review. Experiments which he has been conducting for some time past have convinced him that in certain conditions of the atmosphere, it would serve in a modified form as a conductor of electricity without the use of a wire. Further experiments showed that the key to the difference was in the rarefaction of the air. He found "that the conductivity of the air increases so materially with the increase of electrical pressure and degree of rarefaction that it becomes possible to transmit through even moderately rarefied strata of the atmosphere electrical energy up to practically any amount and to any distance." With these facts he proceeded to construct his apparatus. It was necessary that it should be connected with the earth and with a terminal far above it. For this purpose he uses a spiral coil of fine wire surrounded by a coil of heavier wire, the former connected with a terminal in the air and the latter with the earth. The atmospheric terminal is maintained in place like a balloon and the receiving point is at or about the same altitude, at any distance. This latter may be movable, as a vessel floating in the air, or the top of the mast of a ship. By this means, without any connecting wire, communication may be made, Mr. Tesla says, between two places widely separated. The essential condition is to reach the upper air, which is purer and more rarefied. By this means a communication might be sent to a besieged city, though the besiegers had cut all the wires, or to the captain of a ship on a voyage when there could be no wires. Thus to the struggler in life's conflict, messages often come from above, cheering and strengthening and guiding him when those about him can see no way by which he hears the message.

Light is given to a man whose way is hid and whom God hath hedged in (Job 3:23).

To Protect the War-ships.

Among the industries which have received an impetus from the increased naval activity since the war, is one about which little is known by the general public. In a small factory in Brooklyn, N. Y., the workmen are busy day and night constructing the new thermometers that have been adopted for our great floating batteries. These delicate instruments have been devised to meet various risks to which the vessels are exposed, especially that of spontaneous combustion in the magazines. The object it is sought to attain is to have some means of registering the highest and lowest temperature of the rooms. The automatic ink-marked diagrams have been found unreliable. The new system is one of parallel tubes, furnished with small floats, which stick in the tubes at the highest and lowest point that the mercury reaches. It is thus possible for an observer to see whether in the interval since he last looked at the thermometer, there has been any temporary change of temperature. The authorities are aware how terrible would be the consequence of spontaneous combustion in the magazine of a warship, and therefore take this means of facilitating watchfulness. The Christian has similar need of vigilance over his own soul. When his love of God grows cold, or his animal propensities are inflamed, he is in danger of spiritual disaster.

Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life (Prov. 4:23).

A Plague-Stricken Ship.

Stringent measures are being taken at San Francisco to prevent the outbreak of the bubonic plague in that city. The cause of the precautions is the arrival of a French vessel from Hong Kong, China, flying the yellow flag, which indicates the presence on board of an infectious disease. It was learned that the captain of the vessel and one of the sailors had died of the dreaded bubonic plague on the voyage. The federal officer of the port immediately ordered the crew to be sent to Angel Island, where they were to be quarantined till all danger of attack is past. The ship is being held and fumigated daily, and will not be allowed to come to her wharf, until she is certified to be thoroughly disinfected. It appears that the terrible scourge, which has now killed six victims in Vienna, was raging in Hong Kong when the vessel left. It is very unusual for a vessel on so long a voyage to bring the germs of the fatal disease, but as the second death occurred twenty-five days after leaving port, the San Francisco authorities are wise in taking no risks. It would be well if similar care were exercised to save the country from the contagion of sin, which is as fatal to the soul as the bubonic plague is to the body, and it is more to be dreaded because its effects are eternal.

Seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye being led away by the error of the wicked fall from your own stedfastness (II. Peter 3:17).

Trying to Destroy God's Word.

Sunday School Lesson for December 11. Jere. 36 : 20–32. Golden Text, Isa. 40 : 8.

A PRIEST WITH SACRED ROLL.

WHAT is a powerful king to do with a man who tells him unwelcome truths? In the course of the world's history many mighty monarchs and illustrious statesmen and generals have wrestled with this problem. It is very exasperating to have some man, without wealth or station, denouncing his king, exposing his wickedness, and declaring that he is leading the nation to disaster. What can a king do with such a man? He may kill him, or shut him up in prison or—better than either, but more difficult and more humiliating than either—he may change his own ways and take away from the preacher the basis of his accusations. Some kings have taken one course, some another; but the difficulty is always a serious one, however it may be dealt with. Such a problem was that forced on Jehoiakim, king of Judah.

The situation of the king at that time was full of danger. The little kingdom of Judah was menaced by Egypt on the west and by Babylon on the east, and between the two, as between two millstones, was likely to be ground to pieces. Besides this, Jehoiakim was under obligations to both powers. It was the king of Egypt who had put him on the throne, removing his brother to make room for him; and we may be sure he was not allowed to forget the fact. On the other hand, the king of Babylon had conquered him, and was induced to leave him on the throne, only on condition that Jehoiakim pledged fealty to Babylon and promised to pay tribute. So while he owed his throne to Egypt, he owed his continuance on it to Babylon. He was thus under conflicting obligations, and was sure to offend one of the rival powers. He had to learn, as many a man has learned since his time, that an obligation may be lightly incurred, which may prove a galling fetter in after years. Forced to choose between his two masters, Jehoiakim wavered for three years, and then, contrary to the advice of the best elements in the nation, cast in his lot with Egypt against Babylon.

Among the men who opposed the king's course was Jeremiah, one of the ablest and most cultured of the Bible writers. He belonged to the order of priests, and was born at Anathoth, a village near Jerusalem. Early in life, as he tells us, he was called to the prophetic office, and was charged with a message to his nation. He protested that he was too young for such a duty, but he was assured that he had been specially prepared for this work from his birth, and must undertake it. His writings show how he shrank from going on the mission, as well he might. It was a message of denunciation and doom. His subsequent history shows that he was a tender hearted man, reluctant to cause pain to any one. And therefore a man who would suffer as he has uttering the words committed to him as he told those who heard him. He went to Jerusalem and proclaimed in bitter sorrow the woes impending over the beloved city. He had gained the public ear, and was recognized as a prophet, before Jehoiakim came to the throne. His voice therefore had a potent influence when he denounced the king's course.

It was not alone, or chiefly, on grounds of public policy that Jeremiah denounced the king. Like Isaiah, Jeremiah had insisted that the national safety depended, not on alliances with foreign powers, but on fidelity to God. He could point in proof to the deliverance God had wrought for his people in the time of Hezekiah, when the enemy was mysteriously slaughtered in one night at the very gates of Jerusalem. He declared that if the nation would serve God and rely upon him, neither Babylon, Egypt, nor any other power could overcome it. The nation's very existence hung on the protection of God, yet Jehoiakim had deserted him, had restored the idols which Josiah, his father, had cast out, and had given himself over to the unspeakable abominations of heathen worship. With the boldness of one delivering the message of the Most High, Jeremiah denounced the king for his idolatry and all his evil deeds, and declared that he would come to an ignominious end and would be buried with the burial of an ass. It was a dangerous duty to perform, but the prophet did it fully and fearlessly, yet with sincere sorrow. When a man enters God's service, he must lay aside fear of men, and that weak affection which would keep back unpalatable truth. A boy may become more popular with his companions and may escape punishment by a lie, but if he is true to his God he will do his duty at any cost.

We are not told what course the king took to silence the candid preacher. Jeremiah complains that he was "shut up," but it is clear that he was not imprisoned at that time but he may have been restrained from preaching. The king paid no heed to his words. He evidently regarded Jeremiah's theory of divine protection as fanatical. He liked to keep religion and politics apart, as the practical politician always does. He had more confidence in the help of Egypt than in the help of God. There are many people to this day, who in a difficulty or in trouble act in the same way and will appeal to their friends, or to strangers, rather than to "the Friend who sticketh closer than a brother." In a short time a horde of armed men, sent by the king of Babylon, ravaged the country, and then the scared king proclaimed a fast. Jeremiah availed himself of the opportunity. Though for some reason not mentioned, he could not preach himself, he sent his friend Baruch to read a discourse that he had dictated. Its purport we can imagine. It was a repetition of the solemn warnings of impending ruin which Jeremiah had already proclaimed. Baruch read this manuscript to all the people at the gate of the Temple.

A message fraught with such dire warnings impressed the princes in the crowd and they brought it to the attention of the king. He insisted on seeing the manuscript, but would not wait to hear it read. He listened to the beginning, and then, losing patience, he took a knife and cut it in pieces and flung it into the fire. It was not contempt that moved him, but the mad rage of one who would stifle conscience and would heed no warning. So men, now, turn away from those who warn them of the consequence of their sins and reject the counsels of those who would save them in their own despite.

Read three or four leaves. There were no leaves to the roll, but as is suggested in the margin of the Revised Version, the word probably means columns. The ordinary manuscript was a series of columns running from one edge of the parchment to the other at right angles to the length of the roll. The king was foolish not to hear the whole message. When God threatens he adds to the threat a provision of pardon in case of repentance and it may have been so in this case. The story is told of a young man who had almost broken his father's heart by his wickedness, that he went to his father's funeral wondering if the old man had left his property away from him. He was the heir, but he knew that his father feared he would squander it and it might be that it was left to some one else. His anxiety when the lawyer opened the will, was intense. In a few minutes he would know whether he was a rich man or a pauper. He heard the lawyer read that all the property was left to the young man's uncle. Instantly the young man drew a pistol and shot himself. If he had waited to hear the next words, he would have learned that it was left to his uncle in trust for the benefit of the testator's beloved, but improvident son.

I sat on the hearth. The Revised Version renders it more correctly "a fire in the brazier." The ancient houses, having no chimneys, were warmed by fires in iron gratings, which were fitted into depressions in the floors. Thus the means were at hand for the destruction of the scroll, on which the offending words were written. When a man is bent on doing wrong, he generally has not far to look for facilities. When Jonah wanted to run away from his duty and fixed on Tarshish as the place to go to, he doubtless thought it providential that when he reached Joppa he found a ship going there, but he soon discovered that he had misread the indications. A criminal, who was put to death on the scaffold, declared that he should not have committed the murder, if it had been necessary to go even into the next room for a weapon but seeing an axe within his reach when he was angry, he seized it and killed his victim. Ever since he did it, he said he had cursed the man who left it there. As the judge told him, he had more reason to curse himself for having anger in his heart. That was where the mischief began. Jehoiakim hated God's word and the fire being handy, he flung it in.

They were not afraid. That did not prove that there was no cause for fear. Some men are reckless, but they are seldom brave men in the true sense of the word. A clergyman who went on a voyage in a sailing ship was horrified at the profanity of one of the sailors. He spoke to him about it and the man laughed at him. "Are you not afraid," asked the clergyman, "that God should strike you dead when you speak of him in such terms?" "I am not afraid of anybody or anything, but you may be, for I should think you are a timid man," was the reply. But a few days later, the ship was in a terrible storm and then the sailor was seen on his knees praying in a state of terror, while the clergyman, who knew that for him dying was but going home was calm and was comforting others. An electrician would not think a man brave who took hold of a live wire with his bare hands. He would think him ignorant. So the man who defies God does not show his courage, but his ignorance.

"HE CUT IT WITH THE PENKNIFE AND CAST IT INTO THE FIRE."

He cut it with the penknife. Probably took, for the purpose, the knife from the girdle of the secretary, that such officers carried to sharpen the feathers or reeds that were used in old times as pens. He wanted to destroy the manuscript which contained the warning. He would have shown more sense by heeding the warning than by destroying it. If a man hired a house, and when he took possession, he received a letter from a friend telling him that the last occupant died of yellow fever and the house had not been disinfected, what would be thought of the man if he tore up the letter and took no notice? Or if a man were setting out to walk across a certain ground, and some one who lived near and knew the country, sent him a note telling him that there was a quicksand on that land, or an open pit, would he be wise or foolish if he tore up the note and went on heedless? The king was in worse danger when Jeremiah's message was read to him, but he cut it with a penknife and burnt it.

Then took Jeremiah another roll. The king did not get rid of the witness against him by burning it, for another manuscript was promptly prepared. A similar result happened when the first English translation of the New Testament was published by Tyndale in 1525. Tonstal, Bishop of London, employed a merchant, named Packington, to buy up the whole edition. Packington purchased every copy he could find, and the Bishop burned them at St. Paul's Cross. In a short time the Bishop learned that the people all over England were reading the New Testament in English. In anger, he sent for Packington and roundly abused him. "How comest thou this?" he asked. "You promised me that you would buy every one of the books." Packington answered, "Truly, my lord, you did, and I bought them, and you, lordship had them, and Tyndale had the money that you paid, wherewith the pestilent fellow did print another lot of more careful and amended order, and these are the books now being read." Packington proved the truth of his assertion by procuring a copy of the second edition, which the Bishop compared with a copy of the first, which had been reserved from the flames. So the people profited by the Bishop's act, as they had a better book, which Tyndale might not have been able to give them if he had not received the Bishop's money.

A Superbly Illustrated and Exceptionally Elegant Book of nearly 500 Large Pages Beautifully Printed from Large Type.

THIS year Mrs. Sangster has prepared a genuine surprise for everyone who may become the fortunate possessor of the book, which is the crowning effort of a long and honored literary career. In The Art of Home Making, she has in a kindly, yet practical manner, brought true home happiness within the reach of the humblest reader, and the many thousands who have already learned to love Margaret Sangster, will love her still more when they have finished reading the work to which this warm-hearted, genial authoress has given months of patient, careful, and prayerful toil, weaving chapter after chapter into a grand, noble, enduring monument to her undying interest in the welfare of the plain people, who constitute the rank and file of this, the greatest, happiest and most prosperous country in the world.

It is a glorious privilege to contribute to the happiness of our fellow beings, and no one enjoys this privilege more keenly than does Mrs. Sangster, and if those who may secure this work and derive benefit from its perusal will write Mrs. Sangster a few words of encouragement, they in turn will afford her intense gratification, and contribute very largely toward making this good, true-hearted woman inexpressibly happy.

If our friends who may desire either one or both of these books (the two together are sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year—52 times—on receipt of $3.00), will kindly send us a postal to that effect we will gladly reserve them until it may prove convenient to send the money, and thus prevent disappointment. THE author of Around the World with Eyes Wide Open, has been exceedingly happy in the choice of a title. Dr. Tupper, in the preparation of this superb work, has exercised remarkable skill, both from a literary and an artistic standpoint. Vivid and graphic in style, simple but choice in language, exceedingly rich and profuse in illustration, he has produced a volume which will bring joy to the heart of every member of the family and contribute instructive entertainment all the year round. Never was a more attractive book on travel given to the world even at ten times the price. In its pages we find the world as it is to-day, pictorialized and described, with all the quaint customs in vogue in countries strange and distant; the costumes worn in the Orient and in the Occident; the various modes of travel in operation the world over; and a thousand and one things that will interest, amuse and instruct old and young, rich and poor. CHAPTER 1.

IN the [a]beginning [b]God created the heaven and the earth.
2 And the earth was [c]waste and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep: [d]and the spirit of God [1]moved upon the face of the waters.
3 [e]And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.
4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness.
5 And God called the light [f]Day, and the darkness he called Night. And there was evening and there was morning, one day.
6 ¶And God said, [g]Let there be a [2]firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.
7 And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were [h]above the firmament: and it was so.
8 And God called the firmament Heaven. And there was evening and there was morning, a second day.
9 ¶And God said, [i]Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.
10 And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good.
11 And God said, [j]Let the earth put forth grass, herb yielding seed, and fruit tree bearing fruit [k]after its kind, wherein is the seed thereof, upon the earth: and it was so.
12 And the earth brought forth grass, herb yielding seed after its kind, and tree bearing fruit, wherein is the seed thereof, after its kind: and God saw that it was good.
13 And there was evening and there was morning, a third day.
14 ¶And God said, [l]Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years:

The good Samaritan. S. LUKE 10. The good Samaritan.

25 ¶ And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?
26 He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou?
27 And he answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.
28 And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

"A certain Samaritan . . . saw him."—Luke x. 33.

29 But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?
30 And Jesus answering, said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.
31 And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.
32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.
33 But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him,
34 And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn,

EXACT SIZE OF TYPE IN ART BIBLE

The large type makes this Bible acceptable to persons of all ages, and the 852 Beautiful Pictures which it contains, elucidate the text more than references and an extensive commentary could do, and invest the Holy Scriptures with new life to old and young. To many, this Bible will prove a New Book, with its numerous Attractive Pictures to illustrate Scenes and explain Orientalisms which heretofore were but imperfectly understood.

As a Family Bible it satisfactorily meets all the requirements; and the Sunday School Teacher will find it of incalculable assistance in interesting and enlightening the scholars and holding their attention.

Large Type, Beautiful Print...

Our readers will please bear in mind that Library No. 1, of which nearly 65,000 were sold, is out of stock and out of print, and is therefore no longer advertised in these pages.

MRS. Harriet Prescott Spofford has given to the world under the title of "Stepping-Stones to Happiness" a magnificent volume which tens of thousands will hail with sincere delight.

If you are Seeking Happiness, and have Not Yet Found It, get Mrs. Spofford's book and read it carefully—read every word—and you will be surprised how helpful it will prove to you in successfully prosecuting your search. You may be near it now; indeed, Happiness may be at your very side, and yet, without the priceless assistance which this remarkable book offers, you may unwittingly turn from it and reach out in another direction, only to meet with disappointment and chagrin. Mrs. Spofford has made this subject a matter of Life-long Study, and with graceful pen she tells for the benefit of others where Happiness may be found, and how life may be filled with love and sweetness and made one grand, endless song of rejoicing.

* * * *

Mrs. Spofford is one of America's Greatest Authors. She has a heart that beats in Generous Sympathy with all that is good, and pure, and noble, and true; and "Stepping-Stones to Happiness" is unquestionably one of her Brightest productions. It is one of the few books that prove equally acceptable to husband and wife, parent and child; and every life brought under its benign influence will be the Richer, the better, the Brighter, the sunnier, and the Sweeter. By all means get this most excellent book, and read it aloud when all the household is gathered around the evening lamp.

* * * *

The topics treated in "Stepping-Stones to Happiness" are of surpassing interest to every one in earnest quest of that inestimable jewel. While Wealth may, in a large measure, Contribute to Happiness, fortunately, it is Not an Essential condition, and the Poorest of the poor may, with the aid of such a faithful guide as Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's great book, Attain to a larger measure of Happiness than many a wealthy person may be able to achieve without it.

FIVE THOUSAND WON TO CHRIST.

Evangelist D. L. Moody Records the Glorious Result of the Army and Navy Christian Commission's Work in the Spanish-American War.

FOR years we have been asking the question: How are we to reach young men? The past summer has afforded a practical solution of the problem. April found our nation giving its choicest young men in response to the President's summons for volunteers to free a neighboring land from tyranny and oppression. Two forces were in evidence in the camps. The one, demoralizing in character, pandered to all the evil passions and appetites of young men. Canteens were instituted in the camps; gamblers and vile company sought to degrade the soldiers.

Opposed to these degrading influences was the work of the Army and Navy Christian Commission. Its method of work was fourfold: First. The preaching of the simple Gospel, by well-known ministers and evangelists. Second. The erection of tents, furnished with comfortable seats, where magazines, papers, writing materials, and an abundance of good icewater were furnished for the use of the soldiers. Third. The free distribution of Bibles, Testaments, hymn books, and other good reading matter. Fourth. The visitation of the sick and wounded in the hospitals.

The work was inaugurated at the beginning of the war by sending Major-General O. O. Howard (retired), and Major D. W. Whittle, both veteran officers of the Civil War; also Rev. A. C. Dixon and H. Burke, to Tampa, Fla. Here Gospel meetings were begun, as our readers know, and were very largely attended by officers and soldiers. From the first the work received the heartiest endorsement of President McKinley, Secretary Alger, and such officers as Generals Miles and Shafter and Colonel Roosevelt. The crowded attendance often exceeded the accommodations of the tents; and, in every way, the soldiers expressed their grateful appreciation of the interest which had been shown by the Commission in their highest welfare.

Special interest was attached to the work of General O. O. Howard at the Tampa camps. It was here that General Howard was converted, while serving as a young lieutenant in the army, before the Civil War. As he related the circumstances of his conversion, and urged his hearers to enlist in the service of the Master, there were many of his old associates who were deeply moved, as well as the many young men whom he addressd.

The Forces in the Field.

The success with which the meetings opened encouraged the Commission to immediately extend their work, and two weeks later similar efforts were put forth in other camps. Rev. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago; Dr. L. W. Munhall, of Germantown; Ferdinand Schiverea, of Long Island; Dr. H. M. Wharton, of Baltimore; Rev. A. J. Smith, of Savannah; Rev. Dr. Tupper, of Montclair, N. J.; Ira D. Sankey, of Brooklyn, and other well known men preached and sang the Gospel in the camps at Jacksonville, Chickamauga, Mobile, and elsewhere. The interest that was awakened in these places was even greater than that at first experienced. Later, the number of workers was increased, until over forty evangelists and singers had been enlisted in the work.

The regular services held by the evangelists were supplemented by the distribution of large quantities of Testaments, colportage books, specially selected with a view to their suitableness for young men, and hymn books. These were greatly appreciated and widely read. The regular chaplains heartily accorded their support, and, in many instances, welcomed the assistance of the agents of the Commission in their work. In many regiments there were no chaplains, and in others their duties were in excess of the strength of any one man. In such cases as these, the services of the Commission were especially welcomed.

But the principal work of the Commission was the presentation of the Gospel. Great care was exercised in securing the services of well-known and experienced preachers. The soldiers, at first carried away by enthusiasm, soon became wearied by the monotony of camp life, and found plenty of time for meditation. Soon the presence of fever in the camps brought to their attention the graver side of war; and as their companions were taken to hospitals, or carried to soldiers' graves, many of them, who had been thoughtless and careless before, for the first time in their lives became seriously inclined. Or, as was the case in many instances, bad news from the home circle, the sickness of a parent, or the death of a wife or child, whom they should never see again, prepared their hearts for the message of that One who came "to heal the broken-hearted . . . and to set at liberty them that are bruised."

CONVALESCENT SOLDIERS AT CAMP JEWETT (OUR CHILDREN'S HOME AT MONT-LAWN).

For weeks past, through the courtesy of Major Jewett, the owner of the property, Mont-Lawn has sheltered numbers of invalid soldiers, the average being from thirty to forty. Many have returned to their regiments or gone home, fully restored. The Women's National War Relief Association, of which Miss Helen Gould is an active member, has the work in charge. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD having placed its home equipment at the disposal of the organization for that purpose.

I do not believe in measuring the work of God by man's arithmetic. Mere numbers often exaggerate a work, or more often appear to belittle it. But in these cases in the army there is good reason to believe that the work has been real and deep. With a view to aiding the chaplains in following up the evangelistic work of the Commission, those professing conversion were asked to sign this card:

> I hereby declare my acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour and my purpose, by God's help, to live a Christian life.
> Name . . . . . .
> Co. and Regt . . . . . .
> Home Address . . . . . .

Five Hundred Saved in a Day.

In some services, men would rise for prayers by the score, thereby expressing a desire to become Christians. On several occasions, over 100 soldiers took this stand. On a certain Sunday at Chickamauga, in the services held that day, over 500 young men professed conversion.

A special phase of the work of the Commission has been the visiting of the sick in the hospitals. In many instances, regiments would be moved from camps where many of the men were detained in hospitals. In such cases the men were left without a chaplain, and the agents of the Commission often reported their most encouraging work in the wards of division hospitals.

Still Larger Fields Now Open.

With the cessation of actual warfare, the Commission has extended its work to the troops stationed in garrison duty at Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines. Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea is about to go to Cuba to carry on Gospel meetings among American soldiers stationed there, and Mr. F. B. Smith is continuing the work in the camps in the United States. As funds are received to still further prosecute the work, we hope to send efficient workers to the Philippines and Porto Rico. What has been accomplished thus far has been most gratifying; but the coming winter months in our army camps, both at home and abroad, offer the greatest opportunity of reaching young men that this generation has ever seen.

And what of those who have become Christians during the scenes and surroundings of camp life? On returning to their homes and old familiar surroundings, will they not return to their old lives? This is a question which must be answered by the Church. It is certainly a fact that many useful and efficient members of the Church today are the fruits of a similar effort during the war of '61–64. It is estimated that over 5,000 young men in the army have become Christians or been reclaimed from a backslidden condition. Think what this army of young converts will mean to our nation, if our churches will follow them up and enlist their services in church work. Has this work paid? To carry on this work, sending over forty evangelists to the camps and meeting their expenses, distributing 80,000 colportage books, large quantities of Testaments and 60,000 hymn books, the Evangelistic Department of the Commission has already expended over $20,000. This sum has been contributed by the Christian public. Have the results seemed to warrant this outlay? I am told that the cost of discharging one of the great guns upon our war vessels amounts to several hundred dollars. Surely, if the United States can afford to expend the millions of dollars in the destruction of lives, the Church of Christ should be able to expend more than $20,000 in seeking to save the eternal souls of many of our most promising young men by leading them to Christ. And now that such an effectual way has been afforded for reaching the young men of our land, may the Church of Christ follow up the work by caring for them and using them to reach the hundreds of thousands of other young men of our cities!

The Bible that Saved a Life.

It Stopped a Mauser Bullet at the Battle of El Caney, Cuba.

FROM one of our readers (Mr. Louis H. Deitz, 714 Seventh street, S. W., Washington, D. C.), THE CHRISTIAN HERALD lately received a letter, accompanied by a very remarkable package. On opening the package it was found to contain a small Bible, which was partially perforated by a conical rifle ball. This strangely mutilated Bible was picked up on the battle-field of El Caney, near Santiago, in Cuba, where it had doubtless fallen from the pocket of some American soldier. As will be remembered, our "Boys in Blue" had a hard experience at El Caney, and many of them fell before the long-range Mauser rifles of the Spaniards, who used smokeless powder, preventing the location of their marksmen being discovered by our men. This particular Bible, which is shown in the photograph on this page, was doubtless carried in the pocket of some soldier's military coat or tunic, who, while kneeling or slowly advancing, was struck by the unseen foe. The angle at which the bullet penetrated the book proves that the man must have been in a recumbent position, and probably watching the enemy from the trenches. Its presence in the pocket of his tunic saved his life, for the ball would otherwise have entered his body. Mr. Deitz writes us that the Bible was found on the battle-field by his son, Joseph W. Deitz, a private of Co. N, 1st D.C.Vol. The son, knowing how his father loved the Word of God, brought the little Bible, shattered as it was, home to him as a relic of the battle, when he returned from Cuba. Mr. Deitz in his letter states that among the soldiers it is said that "a bullet does not kill the man who carries the Word of God with him."

THE BULLET-PIERCED BIBLE.

It is interesting to know that the ball penetrated the first part of the Bible and stopped in the book of Job, the shining point of the bullet resting harmlessly against the seventh and eighth verses of the thirty-fifth chapter, which read: "If thou be righteous, what gavest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand? Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man."

It would almost seem as though some Divine lesson were to be gathered from this verse, for it certainly intimates that he who puts his trust in the Lord, and lives aright, need fear no foe. This has been true from the beginning and is equally true today. God is the shield and buckler of those that trust Him. Gen. 15:1; Psa. 33:20; 84:11; 144:2; Prov. 30:5; Eph. 6:16.

Who was the soldier who carried this little Bible and lost it on the battle-field, after it had shielded him from death? It may be that the soldier who carried it is gone with the "silent majority," but if he be alive, and this should reach his eye, he will know what became of the precious little Book that saved his life at El Caney.

CHAPTER I.

Hildreth's Sacred Trust.

IN one of the fairest of the West Indian Islands a simple but elegant villa lifted its gabled roofs amidst a bewildering wealth of tropical beauty. Brilliant birds flitted among the foliage, gold and silver fishes darted to and fro in the large stone basin of a fountain which threw its glittering spray over the lawn in front of the house, and on the vine-shaded veranda hammocks hung temptingly, and low wicker chairs invited to repose.

Behind the jalousies of the library, the owner of the villa sat at a desk busily writing. He was a slight, delicate-looking man, with an expression of careless good humor upon his face, and an easy air of assurance according with the interior of the room, which bespoke a cultured taste and the ability to gratify it. Books were everywhere; rare bits of china, curios, and delicately-tinted shells lay in picturesque confusion upon tables and wall-brackets of native woods. Soft silken draperies fell from the windows and partially screened from view a large alcove, where microscopes of different sizes stood upon cabinets, whose shelves were filled with a miscellaneous collection of rare plants, and beautiful insects, specimens from the agate forests of Arizona, petrified remains from the "Bad Lands" of Dakota, feathery fronded seaweed, skeletons of birds and strange wild creatures, and all the countless curiosities in which naturalists delight.

Lenox Hildreth, forced to flee when a young man from the rigors of the New England climate, by reason of an inherited tendency to pulmonary disease, had chosen Barbadoes as his adopted country, and had never since revisited the land of his birth. From the first, fortune had smiled upon him, and when, some time after his marriage with the daughter of a wealthy planter, she had come into possession of all her father's estates, he had built the house which for fifteen years he had called home. When Evadne, their only daughter, was a little maiden of six, his wife had died, and for nine years father and child had been all the world to each other.

He finished writing at last with a sigh of relief, and, folding the letter, together with one addressed to Evadne, he enclosed both in a large envelope, which he sealed and directed to Judge Hildreth, Marlborough, Mass. Then he leaned back in his chair, and clasping his hands behind his head, looked fixedly at the picture of his fair young wife, which hung above his desk.

"A bad job well done, Louise, or a good one. Our little lass isn't very well adapted to making her way among strangers; and the Bohemianism of this life is a poor preparation for the heavy respectability of a New England existence. Lawrence is a good fellow, but that wife of his always put me in mind of iced soda water, sparkling and cold." He sighed heavily. "Poor little Vad! It is a dreary outlook, but it seems my one resource. Lawrence is the only relative I have in the world.

"After all I may be fighting windmills, and years hence may laugh at this morning's work as an example of the folly of yielding to unnecessary alarm. Danvers warns me that the end may be near, but perhaps he is getting childish. All physicians get to be old fogies, I fancy—a natural sequence to a life spent in hunting down germs, I suppose. They grow to imagine them where none exist."

"Evadne," he exclaimed impetuously, as a slight girlish figure came towards him, "never say a single word that you do not mean, nor express a sensation that you have not felt. It is the people who neglect this rule who play havoc with themselves and the world."

"Why, dearest, you frighten me!" and the girl slipped her hand through his arm with her father's low sweet laugh. "I never saw you look so solemn before."

"Hypocrisy, Vad, is the meanest thing on earth! The pious people at the church yonder call me an unbeliever, but they've got themselves to thank for it. I may be a good-for-nothing, but at least I will not preach what I do not practise."

"You are as good as gold, dearest. I won't have you say such horrid things! And you don't need to preach anything. I am sure no one in all the world could be happier than we."

Her father put his hand under her chin and lifting her face toward his, looked long and earnestly at the pure brow, about which the brown hair clustered in natural curls, the clear-cut nose, the laughing lips parted over a row of pearls, and the wonderful deep grey eyes.

"Are you happy, little one?" he asked wistfully. "Are you sure about that?"

"Happy!" The girl echoed the word with an incredulous smile. "Why, dearest; what has come to you? You never needed to ask me such a question before! Don't you know there is n't a girl in Barbadoes who has been so thoroughly spoilt, and has found the spoiling so sweet?

He smiled and laid his finger caressingly on the dimpled chin.

"Dear little bird!" he said tenderly, "but when this dimple captivates the heart of some one, Vad, you will fly away and leave the poor father in the empty nest."

"You know better!" she exclaimed passionately. "You know I wouldn't leave you for all the 'some ones' in the world."

Her father caught her close.

"Poor little lass!" he said with a sigh. The girl lifted her head and looked at him anxiously.

"Dearest, what is the matter? I am sure you are not well! You have been sitting too long at that tiresome writing."

"Yes, that is it, darling," he said with a sudden change of tone. "Writing always does give me the blues. I think the man who invented the art should have been put in a pillory for the rest of his natural life. Blow your whistle for Sam to bring the horses, and we will go for a ride along the beach."

Evadne lifted the golden whistle, which hung from her girdle, and blew the call, which the well trained servant understood.

"Fi, dearest," she said, "if there were no writing, there would be no books, and what would become of our beautiful evenings then? But I am glad you do not have to write much, since it tires you so. What has it all been about, dear? Am I never to know?"

"Some day, perhaps, little Vad."

CHAPTER II.

A Solemn Injunction.

A month full of happy days had flown by when Evadne and her father returned one morning from a long tramp in search of specimens. A delightful afternoon had followed, he in a hammock, she on a low seat beside him, arranging, classifying and preparing their morning's spoil for the microscope. Suddenly she turned towards him with a troubled face.

"Dearest, how pale you look! Are you very tired?"

"It is only the heat," he answered lightly. "We had a pretty stiff walk this morning, you know."

"And I carried you on and on!" she cried reproachfully. "I was so anxious to find this particular crab. Isn't he a pretty fellow?" and she lifted the box that her father might watch the tiny creature's play. "I shall go at once and make you an orange sherbet."

He lay very still after she had left him, looking dreamily through the vines at the silver spray of the fountain. The air had grown oppressively sultry. No breath of wind stirred the heavily drooping leaves—no sound except the rhythmic splash of the fountain and the soft lapping of the waves upon the beach. He closed his eyes while their ceaseless monotone seemed to beat upon his brain:

"Forever! Forever! Forever!"

A spasm of pain crossed his face as Evadne's voice woke the echoes with a merry song. "Poor little lass!" he murmured. Then he smiled as she came towards him, quaffed off the beverage she had prepared with loving skill, and called her the best cook in all the Indies.

"Has it refreshed you, dearest?" she asked anxiously.

"Immensely! Now you shall read me some of Lalla Rookh, and after dinner I will set about making a Mecca for your crab."

Evadne stroked the dainty claws.

"Poor little chap! So you are a pilgrim like the rest of us. I wish we did not have to go on and on, dearest!," she exclaimed passionately. "Why cannot we stand still and enjoy?"

"It would grow monotonous, little Vad. Progress is the law of all being, and seventy years of life are generally enough for the majority. You would not like to live to be an old lady of 250? Think how tired you would be!"

She laid her cheek against his upon the pillow.

"I should never grow tired—with you!"

The evening drew on hot and breathless. Low growls of distant thunder were heard at intervals and in the eastern sky the lightning played.

Evadne watched it, sitting on the top step of the veranda, her white muslin dress in happy contrast with the deep green of the vines which clustered thickly about the pillar against which she leaned. On the step below her a young man sat. He, too, was clad in white, and the rich crimson of the silken scarf which he wore about his waist enhanced his Spanish beauty. A zither lay across his knee which his hands wandered over skilfully as he made the air tremble with dreamy music. Mr. Hildreth paced slowly up and down the veranda behind them.

"What is the news from the great world, Geoff?" he asked. "I saw a troopship signalled this morning. Have you been on board yet?"

"No, sir; I have been looking over the plantation with my father all day and only got home in time for dinner. But the ship only brought a small detachment, I believe. She will carry away a larger one—the garrison here is to be reduced."

"Yes, it is a mistake, I think. Will Drewson have to go? He has been on this station longer than any of the others."

"Yes, his company has marching orders for Malta. He told me last night he was coming to take his leave of you this week."

"Our nice Captain Drewson going away!" Evadne exclaimed aghast. "Why, he is one of our oldest friends!"

"The law of progression, Vad darling."

"How I hate it!" she cried, while her lips trembled. "Why can't we just live on in the old happy way? You will be going next, Geoff, and the Hamiltons, and the Van de Vorts. Does nothing last?"

Her voice hushed itself into silence and again Lenox Hildreth heard the soft waves singing, "Forever—Forever—Forever."

"Oh, yes, Evadne," Geoffrey said with a laugh. "We are very lasting. It is only the unfortunate people under military rule who prove unreliable. Let me sing you my latest song to cheer your spirits. I only learnt it last week."

He struck a few chords and was beginning his song when a groan from Mr. Hildreth startled him. Evadne passed him like a flash of light and flew to her father's side. He was leaning heavily against a pillar with his handkerchief—already showing crimson stains—pressed tightly against his lips.

EVADNE PASSED HIM LIKE A FLASH, AND FLEW TO HER FATHER'S SIDE.

They laid him gently down and summoned help; after that all was like a horrible dream to Evadne. She was dimly conscious that friends came with ready offers of assistance and that Barbadoes' best physicians were unremitting in their efforts to stop the hemorrhage, while she stood, like a statue, beside her father's bed. She was absolutely still. When at last the hemorrhage was checked, the exhaustion was terrible. Evadne longed to throw herself beside him and pillow the dear head upon her bosom, but Dr. Danvers had whispered:

"A sudden sound may start the hemorrhage—the slightest shock is sure to."

The day passed and another night drew on. One of the physicians was constantly in attendance, for the hemorrhage returned at intervals. Just as the rose-tinted dawn looked shyly through the windows her father spoke, and Evadne bent her head to catch the faint tones of the voice which sounded so far away.

"Vad, darling, I have made an awful mistake. I thought everything a sham—I know better now—Make it the business of your life, little Vad, to find—Jesus Christ."

Again the red stream stained his lips and Dr. Danvers came swiftly forward, but Lenox Hildreth was forever beyond all need of human care.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

IN THE GIRL-QUEEN'S REALM.

The Home-Lovers—In a Palace Window—Farmers, Fishermen and Skaters.

WHEN little Wilhelmina, now Queen of Holland, was a chubby-faced child, strewing rattles and quaint Dutch dolls through the gloomy palace at Amsterdam, she was the special pet of William III. She often tipped at his heels as he entered the Audience Chamber, into which she ran with the courage of childhood. In his private sitting-room she was his favorite companion, and her delight was to perch on one of the windows, overlooking Amsterdam's busiest square, and wave her hand to her future subjects, who fell into the habit of watching that window for the sweet face, which they always loyally saluted.

Later, when she was a somewhat larger girl, they heard that she was spending much time on the little farm at Soestdijk, becoming wise in agricultural matters, expert in gardening and dairy work, and that she had a little kitchen in which she cooked Dutch dishes for her ladies-in-waiting to eat; and the Hollanders were delighted, for she promised to be a little queen after their own hearts. They felt that her education would be incomplete unless besides polite literature and political lore she acquired a personal knowledge of housewifery, that art so dear to Dutch maids and matrons, and which plays such a prominent part in the national life of that country. "Home" means much to the Hollander, as it does to the English and to ourselves. Housewifery, whether her home be a modern dwelling in Rotterdam, Amsterdam or the Hague, or an humble cottage on the dunes, is the Dutchwoman's delight. Her floors and windows shine, her linen glistens, her milk, butter and cheese are world-famed. Frisian butter is eagerly sought for by London housekeepers, and everyone knows the excellence of the cheeses from the dairies of Edam and Alkmaar. Holland has been called the "Paradise of Cows;" everywhere one sees sleek black-and-white cattle standing knee-deep in rich herbage. On the thresholds of the tidy houses with their blue and yellow blinds one can see thrifty wives polishing great copper milk jugs. It is even said that the Holland wives are so cleanly that they scrub the very cobblestones of the street. The same intense love of order and neatness is carried into the care of their flower and fruit gardens, which are models of their kind.

One of the great events of the year at Amsterdam is the arrival of the herrings, and a premium is awarded to the first boat landing a load. The close-caulked fishing smacks that crowd the docks are an interesting study, and the sturdy, fishermen of the Zuyder Zee have thrilling tales to tell of the perils of the sea. In these islands a man is considered able to marry when he can catch enough fish to support a wife. In the neighborhood of Zaandam wealth is reckoned according to the number of windmills possessed and a maiden's dowry is paid in windmills. In Friesland, all other things being equal, the swiftest and most graceful of the skaters wins the village belle.

Skating is the national sport and there are few who can glide along the icy surface more swiftly or prettily than the young Queen herself. In fact Wilhelmina may be said to possess a variety of accomplishments: She speaks French, German, English and her own mother tongue; she paints, plays, sings, sketches, cooks like a skilled matron, makes her own gowns and is her own hair-dresser. She is very fond of out door life, this gentle young Queen, and rides a horse or tricycle, and rows and swims like a true athlete. Her garden, tended by her own hands, is the picture of neatness, and her dogs and ponies know her step, and greet her with every sign of gladness. She is courageous and self-reliant and her education has been broad and liberal, as became the prospective monarch of nearly 40,000,000 subjects, including 5,000,000 Hollanders, for it is to be remembered that she is ruler of Java and other East India colonies with 20,000,000 souls.

Holland has sometimes shown its love for Wilhelmina in an amusing fashion. At a great national festival, some years ago, everybody laughed to find how much cake-baking and fritter-frying was going on, and that nearly every booth had made extensive provisions for childish appetite and entertainment. Never, at any national festival, before or since, had young Holland such a delectable time! The Dutch always showed much pleasure at the royal child's democratic ways, at her fondness for playing with street children, for stopping to chat with women who sit in the sun, knitting lace or selling shrimps and sea-weed.

It is said that Wilhelmina is to marry Prince William of Weid, and that it is a love match. The world will wish her a happy reign in the realm of her husband's heart and home.

With honest heart and childlike faith
That God will do the rest.

Doing Good for His Sake.

"How shall I teach my child to do right for right's sake?" ask many parents, who realize that right done from any other motive is mere eye-service. Before a child is able to appreciate the arguments of reason, he can be led almost any way by the influence of love and example. "For my child's sake," is the only parental motto, says Patterson Du Bois, that will bring the child to adopt, "For my parents' sake" as his motto. The surest way to have a parent first in the eyes of the child, is for the child to be first in the eyes of the parent. Any complicated issue with the child will easily be simplified, regarding it from this point of view. The parent and the child are to meet at this point in a joint effort on the part of both to do God's right, and not on the part of either for mere supremacy or mastery. As soon as he can understand anything, teach your child that the greatest good you can desire for him, is that he shall do right. To ask your child to do the right thing, because you will give him this or that, is putting the lower motive in the place of the higher, and what he does then is not being done at all because it is right, but because you will give him something. He should feel that you will give him all that he needs, or that will make him happy any way; and that of all the good things you can give him, the most excellent is the teaching him to be good for goodness' sake.

THE FATHER'S GIFTS.

I SIT within my room, and joy to find
That thou, who always lov'st, art with me here,
That I am never left by thee behind,
But by thyself thou keep'st me ever near:
The fire burns brighter when with thee I look,
And seems a kinder servant sent to me;
With gladder heart I read thy Holy Book,
Because thou art the eyes with which I see;
This aged chair, that table, watch and door
Around in ready service ever wait;
Nor can I ask of thee a menial more,
To fill the measure of my large estate,
For thou thyself, with all a Father's care,
Where'er I turn art with me ever there.

Sisterly Helpfulness.

This is the time of the year for fireside fun. The season for roasting apples and chestnuts, popping corn, telling stories—with everybody sitting on the rug in front of the blazing fire—is at hand. Once upon a time, there was a young girl, who did lots of missionary work, while sitting in a company of hilarious youngsters, before ruddy, crackling hickory logs. Such stories as "Sissy" could tell! Always ready "to help a fellow get his lessons," to give an opinion, and perhaps a helping stitch or two on the latest costume for dolly. When mother was sick once, and it was feared mother would not get well any more, it was Sissy who went around and heard all the prayers and tucked everybody in bed.

When the boys were grown and away from home, they testified to the fact that the memory of Sissy's kind counsels, of her sweet, loving ways, kept them many a time out of harm. And, at last, when they were husbands and fathers, their wives and children were happier and better just because of the lasting influence of the dear old days, when Sissy made fire side fun so delightful and instructive

A JAVANESE SUBJECT.—THE HERRING FLEET ON A GALA DAY.

THE LIGHTHOUSE.... ....OF THE SLUMS.

A Typical Gospel Service in the Old Bowery Mission Graphically Described—Redeemed Men Testifying for Christ—Hundreds of Hands Uplifted for Special Prayer and for Forgiveness.

A FEW weeks ago, the nineteenth anniversary of the Bowery Mission was celebrated by a large and enthusiastic gathering in the beautiful hall of the Mission. This historic thoroughfare begins at Chatham Square and extends considerably over a mile uptown to Cooper Union, from which run Third and Fourth avenues. Lines of street cars go its entire length, and two lines of elevated railroad continuously thunder up and down the great, wide highway.

Every drunkard and every criminal, who comes to New York City, usually finds the way to the Bowery. Down at 55 Bowery is the Mission. As soon as the doors are opened, a great crowd, which has been moving to and fro along the sidewalk from morning until far past midnight, begins to come into this meeting in the heart of the slums of Greater New York.

On these benches, with that ragged, unkempt throng, sits a man, a graduate from college, once handsome and bright, but now covered with rags and vermin, and his face broken out with disease. Yet there is something about his air that shows that he has been tenderly reared, and to-day some loved mother may be wondering where her boy is. How glad she would be to know that he is in the Bowery Mission, where kind eyes are watching, and warm hearts are trying to bring him to Christ!

There is a man farther along in crime and sin. He has come in half drunk to take a quiet sleep, but he is awakened by the singing, and is apparently interested. Each one of these men has a personal history. All over this land homes are represented here—vacant homes, sorrowing homes. How many thousands of prayers are covered by these precious moth-eaten boys coming into the Bowery Mission!

Who is that gentleman on the platform—that kindly looking man who takes hold as though he knows just what he is doing, and understands exactly the character of the people before him? He is John H. Wyburn, the Superintendent. He, too, has a history, and it is one of the most wonderful written laws of rescue work that has been conducted since it must have sprung from it. It is one of the glorious principles of salvation that God can turn even the knowledge that has been acquired in the devil's service to account in saving souls after the man himself has been redeemed. Mr. Wyburn has drunk deep of the bitter cup. He came into old Water Street Mission, ten years ago, a homeless, dying drunkard. There he learned that Jesus Christ could save the drunkard, and he gave Him his heart. From that moment, he has been bending every energy to save the lost. He takes up a hymn book and announces a hymn. The boys all find the place, and the organ peals forth its melody, and every one joins in. How they sing! They roll out the glorious rescue songs on the Bowery. The passer-by stops to listen. The poor, frail girl, as she strolls along, casting furtive glances from right to left—she stops and listens to the song:

> There is a fountain filled with blood
> Drawn from Immanuel's veins.

What is this memory it must bring to her? She wipes away a tear from her eye, and then, as if ashamed of her emotion, hurries on, and is lost in the throng. After a few hymns are sung, the leader says: "Now, we are going to unite in prayer. Let every head be reverently bowed, and you who know Jesus, oh! pray to-night that the Holy Spirit may overtake some dear hearts in this room, and bring them to repentance." A few minutes are spent, and three or four lift up their hearts—converts of the Mission, for here in the Bowery the workers are the converts, picked up from the street. They know just how to feel for those who are near them. One after another lifts up his heart to God in simple, earnest petition.

Then the Superintendent takes up the Book of books, opens it, and reads the Scripture lesson for the evening. This occupies fifteen to twenty minutes, with what remarks he may make on the lesson. Another hymn is hung, and then he says: "Now, brethren, we are going to spend a while in testifying for Jesus. Let those who can witness for God stand up and tell what they know about Jesus." Meanwhile, a lady dressed in black has come in. She has a kindly face, which everybody knows, and everybody bows to her and smiles as she passes up the aisle. She, too, has a loving nod for every one she sees, and she seats herself on the platform beside the leader. This is Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, commonly and lovingly called "the Mother of the Bowery." Ah, what loving arms and what a big heart she must have to be such a mother, and to take in that great, motherless crowd! One after another arises, and the first man says with faltering lips:

"I came in here dying from drink. A year and six months and two nights ago, I came into this place, drunk, and literally dying. I walked the streets for many nights; been shoved backwards and forwards by the police; nothing to eat; clothing sold for whiskey—oh, what a condition I was in! I really came in here to get a rest. I saw a warm welcome and vacant seats, and I came in thinking I would sit down, and, for a time, at least, I would have rest. The singing attracted my attention, and brethren, Jesus must have got hold of my heart. The testimonies interested me and gave me hope that I, too, could be saved, and I knelt down when the invitation was given, and in the best way I knew how, gave God my heart. I have not wanted to drink from that day to this. I have got work now. I am not a homeless man now. I love people, and they love me. But, best of all, I love Jesus, and the appetite has been removed that cursed my life so many years, and I do not want rum now."

Another man says: "Twenty-four hours ago, I gave my heart to God. Pray for me."

And so the testimonies go on. We could fill columns and columns with the testimonies of one night's service.

Then Mrs. Bird rises to speak. It is no longer difficult to understand her power over the boys that she waits on so tenderly. She has a work of her own here on Sabbath day that lasts from about ten o'clock to two—a long meeting; and sometimes she is the only woman in the house. At noon she gives them a good, substantial lunch, sandwiches and coffee, and by that means many a poor fellow has learned to love the Saviour who otherwise could never have been reached.

Then the Superintendent rises and all the house becomes still.

"Men, listen to me," he says. "We are going to pray now, and I want you, men, to gather around me here, as many as can; as many as feel as though they need Jesus to help them, come up here, and he will save you. You need not be afraid to come. It is the greatest step you ever took, and Jesus will hear your prayer. I was a drunkard—he heard my prayer. Jesus met me that night, and I have not wanted a drink in over ten years. And he will save you as he saved me. Won't you come? Who will come?"

One after another rises and comes. Then a hymn is sung, such as your father or your mother heard in the old church in the country, and it rings out with glorious inspiration and invitation. One after another comes out into the aisle, and walks up, and kneels down at the precious mercy seat of the Bowery Mission.

Then the scene becomes very affecting. There is one man who, requested to pray, bursts into tears, and says: "Oh, God, have mercy on me, a sinner!" "Amen!" says the loving Superintendent. "God hear that prayer!" Some cannot pray until the prayer is put in their mouths. Others say: "I once knew Jesus, years ago, as a prosperous, happy man, but I have fallen away. Do you think he will save me?" "Yes, he will; ask him." And he, too, is encouraged to cast his all on Jesus then and there. And so it goes on, one after another, until all have prayed.

Then they are asked to take their seats, and the Superintendent kindly sits down, and before the whole audience, asks them a few simple questions about their determination, and tries to encourage them, and quotes a verse or two of Scripture. He then asks them to stand up and tell what they intend to do, and he finally gets them all on their feet, and right there resolutions are made by the help of God which last through eternity.

Reader, this is a scene in the Bowery Mission as faithfully as we can picture it, but if you come to New York, come and see it for yourselves, for no tongue can tell the interest that is felt in saving immortal souls.

S. H. HADLEY.

About Catarrh

A Constitutional Disease Requires a Constitutional Remedy.

Catarrh in the head is the result of a cold or succession of colds combined with impure blood. It is a dangerous ailment, as it may lead directly to consumption. It consists of inflammation of the mucous membrane in the nasal passages. There is a disagreeable discharge from the nose and pain in the head. Catarrh is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by purifying the blood, soothes and rebuilds the delicate tissues. Thousands of cures by this medicine after all so-called catarrh cures had failed, attest its wonderful power over this disease.

THE HAPPINESS OF FALLING IN LOVE.

Amelia E. Barr Tells of the "Enchanted Land" and Its Tender Charm and Fascinating Romance—Pure Love an Ennobling Passion.

OF all the ways to happiness that are purely and emphatically personal, falling in love is the most certain and most captivating. It comes with a perfect surprise; it is a sudden charm without warning. Once in a life time, it is safe to say, every mortal has this experience; for Nature—who is no blunderer—gradually introduces the boy and girl into active, adult life by this very door. In the depths of this delicious foolishness, the boyish heart grows to the measure of manhood; bats, and boats, and "fellows" are forever deposed, and some lovely girl reigns in their stead.

To boys this first falling in love is far more of an event than it is to girls; the latter have become familiar with the routine of love-making before they themselves are seriously in love. They have sung about it, they have read Moore and Tennyson. They have very likely been the confidants of their elder sisters or of some advanced schoolmate. Into their dreamy life the coming event has long cast gleams of heightened glory. They are waiting for their lover; they are even inclined to be critical about him; but the first love of a boy is generally a surprise—he is taken unawares and surrenders at discretion.

THIS IS NOT an event to be deplored, however unpractical it may seem. In an age judging everything by the unconditional and the positive, it is well for youth to have this little bit of glamour; for half the charm of love-making lies in its defiance of all that is reasonable; it asserts the incredible and believes the impossible. There will be plenty in after life to make all sceptical, therefore it is a good talisman to faith in general that in the very outset of it we should believe in such a wonderful thing as first love. Tertullian held some portions of his faith simply "because they were impossible." Falling in love demands from us an equal credulity. It is so real, yet so undefinable that it may well temper with romance, and trust in the hard and practical future. Having felt and known this mystical, marvelous experience, it is not difficult thereafter to believe in great sacrifices and great possibilities simply because to every-day common sense they appear impossible, impracticable. Yes, indeed, falling in love is a happy and ennobling event for any man or woman to begin life with; they will be the better ever afterwards for believing that no one ever loved before them, and that no one who comes after them will ever love as they have loved.

It is said that this extreme passion is not suitable to our state of high civilization, that like King Cophetua it belonged to an age when love really Ruled the court, the camp, the grove.

And that in this day King Cophetua would act pretty much as the judge did with regard to Maud Muller. Many wise people ask how love can be the be-all and the end-all of life with us, when steam, electricity, railway shares, big bonanzas, cotton, corn, literature, politics, art, dry-goods, and a thousand other interests share our thoughts and affections. And it must be acknowledged that we see the evidence of this change of sentiment wherever we turn. Lovers are now more given to considering how to make matrimony as pleasant as love-making than to writing sonnets to their mistress's beauty. The very devotion of ancient times would now be tedious, its long protestations would weary the most sentimental, and if a lover of 1899 should try one of Amadis' never ending speeches or one of Herrick's exquisitely deferential poems to his lady, she would be very apt to say, "don't be tiresome, darling. Let us go out and hear some music, and eat ice cream."

IS LOVE then in a state of decay? By no means. Love has merely accommodated itself to the spirit of the age, and this spirit demands that the lives of men and women should be more influenced by marriage than by love-making. Lovers interest us now as possible husbands and wives, and fathers and mothers of the Republic. Lord Lytton points out this fact as forcibly exemplified in our national dramas. Every one feels a love scene to be fatiguing, but a matrimonial difference has the sympathy of the whole audience, and it sheds its pleasantest tears over their reconciliation. For few persons in any audience have ever made or ever will make love as the poets do, but the majority either have had or will have quarrels and reconciliations with their wives or husbands.

* * *

IN OTHER RESPECTS we ignore the inflation of the old love-making. "Our fate," "our destiny," resolves itself into the simplest and most natural events, a chat together on a rainy afternoon, a walk home in the moonlight, pleasant contiguity for a season, and such every day agents decide our love affairs. And yet below all this lies that inexplicable something which places this bit of our lives beyond our wisest thoughts. We can't do as we will, fall in love to order; and our reasoning on the subject ends in the conviction that under certain conditions, beyond our definition, we may all have to say,

Something there is moves me to love, and I
Do know I love, but know not how, nor why.

The motives and influences that go to make up so highly complex an emotion as love are beyond even indication, though the subject has been a tempting one to most philosophical writers. Even Compte descends from the positive and the unconditioned to deify this charmingly erratic principle. Michelet, after forty volumes of history, rested and restored himself by penning a book about love. The pale, religious Pascal, terrified at the vastness of his own questions, comforted himself by an analysis of love. Herbert Spencer has gone con amore into the same subject. But love laughs at philosophy and delights in making fools of the wise for its sake. It is easy to construct a theory, but the first touch of a white hand may demolish it; easy to make resolutions, but the first glance of a pair of bright eyes may send them packing. It is easy for men to be philosophers when they are not lovers, but when once they fall in love there is then no difference between the fool and the greatest philosopher.

NO DOUBT THERE is a method in this madness, and some wise man may yet come to rescue this bit of outlying existence from what seems to be caprice, but as yet no one has brought love within the calculation of chances. It is just as impossible to-day as it was in the days of Jacob to predict who a man or a woman will fall in love with. About things in general we say "like attracts like," but in love it is a fact that it "attracts unlike" also. The scholar marries the foolish beauty, the beauty marries an ugly man and admires him. Poverty intensifies itself by marrying poverty, plenty grows plethoric by marrying wealth. But who can tell how far love is to blame for these and many other strange attractions? Possibly they may be explained by the presumption that a great deal of what passes for love is only reflected self-love. Thus beautiful women are often married as the most decorous way of gratifying male vanity. It is told of the Duc de Guise, that after a long courtship, he prevailed on a celebrated beauty to marry him. The lady observing him very restless, asked what ailed him. "Ah, Madame," answered the lover, "I ought to have been off long ago to communicate my good fortune to all my friends!"

TO FALL IN LOVE! It is a great happiness, and we should not hurry our sojourn in this enchanted land, for in the atmosphere of love-making many fine feelings blossom that never would have birth under any other conditions. If lovers are really in earnest they gain far more than they lose by a reasonable delay. There is time in it for the reading and writing of love letters, one of the sweetest experiences of life, and thus both tongue and pen grow familiar with affectionate and noble sentiments and expressions.

To fall in love! It is the most remarkable thing in life! We fall in love and the world is made anew. We are amazed to think that we ever worried about bills; that we were ever bored by uncongenial people and duties. Life had been a hot, thirsty desert, and our way through it a rut of hard necessity; and lo! suddenly the palm tuft soars before us, and we hear the plash of falling waters. We had not expected to meet any one, but the moment had come, we met, and from heart to heart a bond of sympathy flew, and we who had been two became one.

TO FALL IN LOVE! What a happiness to become a partner in the most heavenly emotion we can know on earth! See what love can conquer! Love can prevail over selfishness! It has the victory over pain and weariness! It makes poverty happy; it makes wealth generous! It has in it the glory of the celestial and the hopes of eternity! It does not grow old; those people are to be pitied who think so. Nothing in life is more lovely than the lovers of half a century. What delicacies of feeling are in their hearts! They have a thousand secret ardors, born of their joys and sorrows, and of the beautiful tears of a strong affection. They may not talk about their love, but their pleasure in each other is like the relation of the heavenly bodies which, though silent, lose none of their attractive powers. The sun does not talk to the earth, but it attracts it.

Finally, God is love! We build our faith on that! Our earthly love—if it be pure and true—is the reflection of His divine love. He wills that we love one another: and

God be thanked! the meanest of his creatures
Boasts two soul sides; one to face the world with,
One to show a woman when he loves her.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Cordial Invitation—About Profanity—Consideration for Old Folks—Neglectful Fiances.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL is everybody's corner of the paper, and everybody has a perfect right to draw up a chair in front of the fire, join the circle, and speak right out in meeting. The council is largely occupied with the views and problems and puzzles of women, but it is a great mistake to suppose that they monopolize it. Fathers, husbands and brothers are welcome when they have a word to say, and some of the wisest and truest words ever spoken here, come from their lips. All sorts of domestic perplexities, baffling to the individual, are confidently brought to the common attention; and among us, it is hard if we loving friends cannot give one another a lift, cannot help and strengthen one another on the journey of life. That life is a journey, and that its ultimate end is the Father's house is the belief of those who call Jesus Christ their Master and Friend, and of such are the great majority, we trust, of our dear Friends in Council.

YOUR observation, dear Mrs. C. S. Baker, about the increase of profanity among the young is very just, but I am not sure that the remedy you favor—that of prompt and severe punishment in the home, if the offender is a child; of arrest and fine if he be a man out in society—is the best in the circumstances. A hundred years ago swearing and drinking were both more general than now, the only reservation then made about the former evil custom, by many men, being that no gentleman would use an oath when ladies were present. No true gentleman uses an oath in conversation now, or fills out his language with profane and blasphemous words and phrases, whether or not women are in the company. A gentleman of our period does not swear.

Young ladies can influence the men of their set far more than they imagine. If they show their disapproval of profanity by look and manner, and are slow to pardon any lapse on the part of their friends, purity of speech will become the rule around them. I wish the dear girls of this land knew how strong is their sceptre, how wide its sway, how much they can do for Jesus, by simply showing their loyalty in everyday life, and working ever in His name.

ABOUT OLD people, dear Madame K., we are too apt to be inconsiderate. It made my heart ache to hear of the poor old grandfather who is so much in the way, who isn't wanted at Samuel's house, because Samuel's daughters are gay girls who must have a good time, and do not want an old gentleman puttering around; who cannot stay at Joseph's where Joseph's wife won't have him; who is made to feel, wherever he goes, that he is an encumbrance and a burden. Poor old man! Yet you tell me that in his day he was very prosperous, that he gave his children a good education, and set them well forward on the road to success, that he once kept his carriage and horses and had his liveried coachman to drive them. You feel that if he had not lost his money, his children would treat him better. Possibly they would. They are behaving most unkindly, and the day may come when even their own children will treat them with similar contempt and contumely.

The Bible says, "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head," and "Honor thy father and mother."

In my opinion the presence of an aged man or woman in the house is a benediction. The younger people should not leave the old outside of the good times. They should have a share in whatever is going on, and their counsel should be received with respect. "Over the hills to the poorhouse," or "over the streets to an old ladies', or an old men's home," is a burning shame and disgrace, if the sons and daughters of the old people are living and able to care for them. Homes and asylums and public charities are provisions only for those whose kindred are gone to the other land, or who are themselves in deep poverty. The just person looks out for his kith and kin, especially when they are old.

TO PRAY about temporal affairs, my friend, Laura E. G., is certainly warranted by our Lord, who Himself told us to say "Give us this day our daily bread." I am sorry you have felt any doubt on the subject. In one of Rev. F. B. Meyer's books, he tells a sweet little story about an old man who found himself alone, without a coin in his pocket, in the great city of York, England, where he had a daughter, whom he could not find. The old man went to the beautiful cathedral, York Minster, and just sat there all day, for he said, "surely the best place for me to find my Father's bread, will be in my Father's house." And his faith was justified; so yours will be. I advise you to carry your worries and cares to the foot of the throne. Your Father knoweth your need of food and raiment, of work to do, and of wages paid for it. More, he knoweth before you ask, yet he likes to be asked, and he has said, "Ask and ye shall receive."

THE MAN, engaged to a young woman, who shows no preference for her society, and neglects her to pay attention to other young ladies, insisting that she should understand him as belonging to her, and resenting her very natural sensitiveness on being left out and treated coldly, is certainly anxious to be freed from his bonds. A young woman who respects herself can have no choice except to return the ring and break the engagement. A negligent lover, Kitty Lorraine, will prove an unkind husband, and you are fortunate in finding him out before it is altogether too late.

OUR PROTEGEES IN INDIA.

phan Children Saved by Our Readers from Starvation are Becoming Christians.

THE wonderful contrast in the two pictures on this page is an object lesson for our readers, whose noble generosity to the people of India, last year, is now bring- forth blessed fruit. They e two photographs, which ve been sent us by Miss sther B. Fowler, the nerican Board's ssionary, at Shola- r. The upper one of two orphan chil- en as they appeared nen she received em into her mission. nost naked, and with dies showing how rfully they had suf- ed from hunger. ne lower picture is of the me two children after they d been under Miss Fowl- s care for a few months. Their smiling es and rounded forms show what a ange had come in their lives.

A letter recently received from Miss owler describes the intelligence and eetness of disposition all her orphans ow, and she asks that her most sincere anks be conveyed to our readers for en- ling her to save these little creatures m death and train them up for Christ. Rev. J. E. Clough, Baptist missionary Ongole, in South India, tells a similar ry. "As a matter of fact," he writes, ere are from five hundred to a thou- nd orphans within the bounds of my ssion field, and I can at present commodate only one hundred in our ools at Ongole." He is trying to build orphanage which would hold five hun- d orphans, and he estimates that he ld support and educate them on the rage at fifteen dollars a year, if such a lding could be erected. His gratitude the readers of this journal for the ney he is receiving is pathetic. Small is the effort compared with the great d, he acknowledges that without such even that would not have been possible. Pundita Ramabai also begs that her nks may be given to the readers of E CHRISTIAN HERALD for their help. r orphans are chiefly young widows o are the victims of the deplorable Hin- custom of child-marriage. Under mabai's care they are accepting Christ, l nearly all the elder ones have already asked for and received Christian baptism. All through India this work is going on. The missionaries in writing to Dr. Klopsch declare that the money sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by its readers, is doing a work for India that will bring forth fruit through many generations. The orphans whom they received into their stations and are supporting with the money contributed by our readers, are learning to love Christ and are gaining a knowledge of Christianity which they will never forget. Many of them will become teachers of the Christian faith, and all of them as they marry or enter into business life, will carry with them into the villages of India the beneficent influence they acquired in the mission stations. Thus generations yet to come will have reason to bless the compassion of Christians in this land, when they hear the Gospel of Christ from the lips of fathers and mothers who in their childhood received from the American people, not only the bread that perisheth, but the bread of which if a man eat he shall live forever.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

Self-Righteousness a Hindrance.

AN Indian and white man were convicted under the same sermon. The Indian was almost immediately converted, but the white man was under conviction weeks before coming into the light. Some time after his conversion he met the Indian, and addressed him thus: "How is it that you were converted so soon, and I was in darkness so long, when we were convicted at the same time?" The Indian said: "There comes along a rich prince who proposes to give you a new coat. You look at your coat and say: 'I don't know, my coat pretty good; I think it will do a little longer.' He then offers me a new coat. I look at my old blanket; it is good for nothing, and I fling it right away, and accept the new coat. Just so in regard to religion; you looked for a long time at your self-righteousness, and thought it was good enough; but poor Indian had none, and that is the reason I accepted so quickly."

The Missing Keystone.

. . A NEW bridge had to be built across a deep ravine in the mountains, through which, during winter and wet seasons, a large stream of water rushed. In summer and in dry seasons there was no water in it. After it was contracted for, a very convenient drought set in, much to the delight of the contractor and his men. It took many weeks to build, but at length, at six o'clock one evening, it was all finished except the key-stone. That night the contractor said to his men: "Men, work overtime to-night, and get in the key-stone; we don't know when the storm may come." The men replied: "No, there's not the shadow of a cloud in the sky; to-morrow will be fine," and they flung down their tools, and left. The contractor went home with the burden of a heavy foreboding of disaster lying on his heart. At five o'clock next morning the wind rose, the clouds gathered dark and thick, and before six o'clock a water-spout broke on the mountain-top. The ravine was flooded with water, which washed away the wooden supports of the bridge, and it fell, all for want of a key-stone. Have you put Christ as the key-stone into your life? or are you depending on insufficient supports, which will be washed away when the storm of death assails you?

Not Worth Repairing.

. . IN THE course of one of his addresses, Dr. George F. Pentecost, said: "When I was a boy, there was an old negro woman at a meeting I attended, giving her experience. After she had concluded, an old man stood up and asked: 'Well, has the Lord cleans'd your heart?' 'No,' she answered. 'What! do you mean to say that you are not converted, do you not love the brethren?' 'Yes, I love the brethren.' 'What do you mean, then, by saying that the Lord has not cleansed your heart?' 'Brother Johnstone,' said the negress, 'The Lord and I have been working on the old heart for forty years and more, and we could make 'nothing of it,' so He just threw it away altogether, and gave me a new one.'"

She Found Her Spectacles.

. . THIS bull's eye lantern may be used as an illustration of how persons may have the best of light and fail to use it. See, I have shut it up, and no ray of light comes from it. I am told that, when the Bible Society first started, its agents were very diligent in calling round to see whether householders had Bibles or not. One of them called upon an aged person and said, "Please, madam, have you a Bible?" The excellent lady was astonished, not to say indignant, that persons should dare to come around, insulting respectable Christian people and asking them whether they had a Bible. Of course she had a Bible. She would let the visitor see it with his own eyes, and then he would not think her a heathen any longer. "Mary, go upstairs and fetch the Bible from off the bureau, and let the gentleman see the family Bible which my father left me." The volume was brought down, and laid upon the table; and when it was put on its back, it opened itself naturally at a certain place. "Ah!" said the venerable lady, "well, after all, I think there is a Providence in your coming; for here are my spectacles which I lost years ago, and I could not imagine where they were." If she had not possessed a Bible, she would have thought herself a heathen, but, having a Bible and never reading it, she thought herself an exemplary Christian. Bibles which are never read are like lanterns which are never turned on. How shall we answer for our neglect at the last great day?

Useful Expository Notes.

. . ONE of John Wesley's associates, named Samuel Bradburn, was much esteemed as a good preacher and an excellent man. At a time when he was in straitened circumstances, Wesley sent him five one pound notes, with this letter:

"DEAR SAMMY:—Trust in the Lord and do good: so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Yours affectionately, JOHN WESLEY."

The reply was equally happy:

"REV. AND DEAR SIR:—I have often been struck with the beauty of the passage of Scripture quoted in your letter, but I must confess that I never saw such useful expository notes upon it before. I am, reverend and dear sir, your obedient and grateful servant. S. BRADBURN."

A Mother's Bible Blessed to Her Sons.

. . A minister went into a house and saw a Bible on the stand, and said: "What a pity that this Bible should be so torn! You do not seem to take much care of it: half the leaves are gone." Said the man: "This was my mother's Bible, and my brother John wanted it, and I wanted it, and we could not agree about the matter, and so we each took a half. My half has been blessed to my soul, and his half has been blessed to his soul." That is the only way that I can think of in which the Word of God may be rightfully cut.

Mr. Moody's Straw Ride.

ow he Taught a Band of College Girls a Lesson in Christian Kindness.

EW people appear to know of any but the philanthropic or evangelical side of Dwight L. Moody's life, and is a pleasure to recall him in some of is play-times in old Northfield, twelve more years ago. We were four girls, ho were spending a fortnight in the arming summer-home of a minister, and e were delighted when, one day, Mr. oody dropped in for his usual morning's at, to hear him say, "Girls, do you want go on a straw-ride up to the mountins, over corduroy roads?" We assented eartily. "Well, then," Mr. Moody conued, "you be ready along about seven is evening, and I'll come down with the team and some of my girls, and I'll ow you what it is to straw-ride over assachusetts' corduroy roads."

Now, the nature of corduroy roads was mething unknown to us, and we little ew for what we were bargaining. As romised, just at sun-set time, Mr. Moody me driving a pair of large, well-fed, aught horses hitched to a hay-wagon, ith four or five girls inside, snugly settled the hay. A very few moments found likewise ensconced, and we promptly arted off at a smart pace with a song, hich was followed by many another of e college order. Miles and miles were iftly traversed, the sun sank and set, e twilight shadows cast a fantastic auty over the landscape, which became oader and more extended at each open- g in the wooded road. Still we sang on rough almost the entire list of college ngs, duly encouraged by our genial host d driver. All at once we felt that sing- g was a great effort of mind and body, d we seemed to be traveling in a terribly certain and bumpy fashion, and when last the singing became feebly weak d forced, Mr. Moody suddenly burst t into hearty laughter and said, "Keep ht on singing; don't let a genuine ountain corduroy road discourage you." at we had to acknowledge our vocal wers defeated, and content ourselves th "Oh, my!" interspersed with loud als of laughter. It seemed as though at road extended for an unending disnce, but in reality it was only two or three les long, and we bore it with a grace rthy of a greater experience. Mr. oody, on his spring perch as driver, rtainly had an advantage over us, who re bumped and tossed about.

Once more on a smooth country road, drew rein, and we gladly rested, duly pressed by the stillness of the mounns and valleys flooded in the mellow ht of an August moon. The silence s broken with onward travel and we re again singing our songs, followed by ny a good story from our host, and a quest to sing the "Suwanee River." All once Mr. Moody broke in with, "Can u see to read by this light? Try if you n, I've brought these hymn-books along r I want you to sing for a poor sick man up in the next farm-house. She's en bed-ridden for six or seven years and ver hears a song or scarcely sees a new e, shut up 'way off here in the mounns. Now I'm going to drive close up side her window, and I want you all to g 'Nearer My God to Thee' for her."

We could not see the face, but knew a ed, wasted form was lying—a sufferer inside the open window, and who could l to fee. the hymn we sang in the solemn llness of the night.? Mr. Moody then de us sing "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and in spite of all the merriment of ten minutes before, we found ourselves singing in genuine sympathy, now, that grand, old hymn. Mr. Moody then called out a few words of greeting and explanation to the invalid, and a female voice expressed its thanks, and we started onward toward home.

Songs did not come so easily to our lips after that, and for a while each was busy with thoughts, both sad and glad. In the twilight distance we espied something or some one sitting on a rail fence. Coming nearer, we discovered it to be a lonely man perched there like a veritable Rip Van Winkle, or like a wandering minstrel, "a thing of rags and tatters." Mr. Moody greeted him with a pleasant "Good-evening, let me see, who are you?" The man drawled out a like greeting and gave his name, which the writer has long since forgotten. Mr. Moody inquired into his welfare, where did he live, and had he any family or friends. The man said, "My wife is gone, but my two gals keep my home. There they air, sittin' on the door-sill over yonder," and he nodded his head, at the same time pointing with his thumb over his shoulder across the road. There, among the trees, we discerned in the uncertain light a log-hut, and two scantily-clad girls sitting in the doorway.

They had a kindly greeting from Mr. Moody, who asked if they had ever been to school, and learned that they had not, and indeed their crude manner and wild surroundings told as much. All their spare time, they said, was spent in weaving coarse wicker baskets for the market, the pay for which seemed to us too meagre to strive for, and home for them seemed to suggest little but an aimless existence from day to day. With a warm hand-shake from Mr. Moody, we drove on.

The drive homeward was accompanied by a softer, more serious strain of song, for each must have felt we had been led and guided by that great man of God in a lesson of "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you," which is the accompaniment of each of his love-giving days. Eleven o'clock found us again driving through the broad main street of Northfield. I doubt not each one remembers with a wistfulness of pleasure, the corduroy straw-ride with Mr. Moody.

Four or five years after, I learned that Mr. Moody had seen those lonely mountain people again, and had taken the girls into his fatherly heart and care, and given them an education at his Seminary for Girls, in good old Northfield.

FOR YOU..

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common sense way, that is by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of the stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Miss Sarah J., Detroit, Mich. Is it the invariable custom to use a plain gold band as a wedding-ring or has it ever been customary to use any other sort of ring?

Recognized authorities on etiquette say that the wedding-ring never changes. Beyond the question of the width or narrowness of the gold band, there is certainly very little variation from generation to generation. Just now, the wedding ring is much narrower than at any time in recent years.

Minnie F. J., Elm Grove, Ky. What color is the French flag, the Russian flag, the German flag, the Austro-Hungarian flag, the Italian flag, the Netherlands flag?

French flag—Tri-color, blue, white and red, in three perpendicular stripes. Russia has three flags, viz.: 1. Man-of-war flag, white ground, diagonally crossed with blue. 2. Merchant flag, three horizontal stripes of white, blue and red. 3. Russian standard (royal flag), yellow ground, with Russian coat-of-arms (black eagle, with two crowned heads) in centre. The German standard flag has a black Maltese cross extending to each of the four edges of the flag, with royal coat-of-arms in centre, and all on a ground of pale yellow; coat-of-arms is a spread eagle. The German merchant flag has three horizontal bars of black, white and red. Austro-Hungarian standard has three horizontal bars of red, white and red, with shield (on yellow ground and divided into three horizontal bars of red, white and red, and surmounted by a crown), to the left centre. The merchant flag has three horizontal bars, viz., (1) red, (2) white, (3) half red and half green; has two shields, surmounted by crowns, one on the left centre, and one on the right centre. Italian flag has three bars of green, white (centre) and red; on the white (centre) bar is a shield, with white cross in the centre on a red ground, and all framed in blue; this is surmounted by a crown. The merchant flag has three plain, perpendicular bars of green, white (centre) and red. Netherlands flag has three horizontal bars of red, white (centre) and blue. In the centre of the white bar is the royal coat-of-arms—two crowned lions standing on their hind feet, and holding crown-surmounted shield in fore paws. This shield is blue, with lion rampant in relief.

C. C. W., Hope Ark. 1. What crime did Dreyfus commit? 2. Why did President Cleveland in his first administration dismiss Sackville West, the British Minister?

1 It was claimed that he betrayed French military secrets to an unfriendly foreign power. 2. Because he wrote a letter to an Englishman in Canada, which afterward got into print and which contained criticisms of the Administration that were regarded as objectionable and undiplomatic in the last degree.

Constant Reader, Shelbyville, Ind. 1. If a person consecrates one-tenth of his income to the Lord, would it be right to use any of it in supporting needy relatives who have a claim on him? 2. How was it possible for Ananias to be buried (Acts 5: 7), without his wife knowing of it? 3. When Christ prayed that the cup might pass from him (Matt. 26: 39), was he not aware that it had been ordained from the foundation of the world?

1 There is no law compelling you to consecrate a tenth. It is a voluntary act on your part, and, therefore, you are at liberty to use it as your conscience dictates. Your conscience must tell you whether in giving it to your relatives, you are giving it to the Lord. It certainly would not be right to leave your relatives, who, as we understand from your letter, are dependent, to starve. Whether you could do your duty to them and still, by self-denial, be able to devote the tenth to objects about which you have no doubt, is a matter of which you alone can judge. 2. The burial appears to have taken place immediately after death, as was the custom of the country. If Sapphira was in another part of the city, she would not be likely to hear of it. If it had taken place in our day, the coroner would have had something to say before burial, but there was no such officer then. 3. In that hour of agony Christ's human nature appears to have tried to usurp power over his divine nature which knew all things. Knowing that all things were possible to God, he offered the prayer, but with the condition that it should be granted only if it was his Father's will.

Mrs. A. P. Norwood, Bucaramanga, Colombia, South America, writes:

It is refreshing and inspiring reading that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gives us in the many accounts of homes for children, industrial missions and other institutions for elevating and relieving the poor and depraved. Our hearts are saddened by the thought of the utter lack of any such institutions in these Roman Catholic countries. Hospitals, homes for convalescents, and for delicate, half-starved children are sadly needed here, on account of the great number of very poor. Colombia and Venezuela are countries ruined by repeated revolutions, and the poverty and distress can hardly be described. Missionaries are embarrassed and distressed by inability to respond to all the calls made upon them. At Bogota, several physicians offered to practise free in a Protestant hospital, if one should be built. At Barranquilla, Misses Hunter and Smith are anxious to establish a house of refuge for poor girls. In Caracas, Venezuela, Rev. Gerard A. Bailly, dreams of a training school for boys; and here, in Bucaramanga, our hearts ache to see a mission organized on the plan of an institutional church.

H. W. H., Homer, N. Y. Please give correct pronunciation of Roosevelt.

Ros-e-velt, first o and e long, last e short. The division into three syllables should not be very pronounced.

Inquirer, Providence, R. I. Is the efficacy of the Atonement limited to those who accept it, or did Christ's death atone for the sins of the whole world?

The subject has been discussed for generations, and with no practical benefit. It brings up the old and pointless question of foreordination, which is better left alone. It is sufficient for us to know that whosoever avails himself of the offer of salvation through Christ will be saved. If the ruler of a rebellious people proclaimed amnesty to all who laid down their arms, it would apply to all who complied with the conditions, but those who did not comply would have no part in the amnesty. The limit would not be in the offer, but in the disposition of the people.

S. E. C., New Haven, Conn. What is the meaning of the statement in Isaiah 45: 7, that God creates evil? Are not his works altogether good?

The context explains the prophet's meaning. It is that the things which afflict us are sent by God for our discipline and spiritual improvement. As Job said, "Shall we receive good at the hands of God and shall we not receive evil?" It is easy to believe that God made the light, but there come times in our lives when we have to exercise faith and believe that God made the darkness, too.

T. J., Akron, O. 1. What proportion of the population of Utah is receiving the Gospel? 2. What is the proportion of Mormon to that of Christian population? 3. Is it true that the Mormon propaganda is far more active than that of the Christian churches?

1. 241 post-office places (villages and hamlets), in Utah are without the Gospel, while only 69 places can point to any form of Christian work now being carried on. 2. Two-thirds larger. 3. Yes, it is exceedingly active. It is said that nearly 2,000 Mormon emissaries are now at work outside of Utah, 1,000 being in the United States alone. The Mormon Church has secured a substantial foothold in Arizona, Colorado, Nevada and other States.

Student, Hartford, Conn. When was the Christian era fixed? Is there is any reliable system of Bible chronology?

There were several eras in use for five centuries after Christ. It was not until the sixth century that the use of our present system became general. It was calculated by Dionysius Exiguus, but it is now generally admitted that it is erroneous. The date of the death of Herod, who slaughtered the children soon after the birth of Christ, is known from secular sources, and this proves that Christ must have been born about five years before our era. There is no reliable system of Bible chronology. All dates earlier than the accession of Solomon are in doubt.

A. I. G., Buffalo, N. Y. The editor should correct the answer recently given as to the beginning of the twentieth century. This century closes when it is one hundred years old, and it will be that when the year 1900 dawns, Dec. 31, 1899, and not Dec. 31, 1900.

There is no need for correction. You can easily see that the year 1900 is needed to complete the nineteenth century. As one century is composed of 100 years, nineteen centuries would require 1900 full years, ending with midnight of Dec. 31, 1900, and therefore the twentieth century must begin Jan. 1, 1901. Eighteen hundred and ninety-nine years do not constitute nineteen centuries, or nineteen times one hundred years.

Mr. Frederick T. Drake, Stoneham, Mass., writes:

In only one sense is Dr. Baker "late." He is "late" pastor of Maverick Church, East Boston, having recently accepted a call to become pastor of Williston Church, Portland, Me. Last Sunday he preached at the Stoneham (Mass.) Congregational Church.

"David," Avon, N. Y. How can one obtain a new heart, whose pleasure in a grievous sin is greater than his desire for reform?

His one resource is prayer and a constant striving against indulgence in the sin. God is able to give a new heart, and when a man is sincerely desirous of obtaining that blessing there is no doubt of its being granted to him. God is more ready to bless us than we are to seek his blessing. But he does not confer his gifts unless they are sincerely sought. And there must be proof of sincerity by co-operation. If a man prayed that he might reach the top of a mountain, God would not take him bodily there, but he would give him the strength to climb. If you read the description of the condition of a man struggling against sin in Romans 7, you will see that victory is obtained through the power that Christ gives. This power is freely granted to all who seek it, and through it any one may overcome evil.

S. O. M., Yonkers, N. Y. What custom is referred to by Paul (1. Cor. 15: 29), as baptizing for the dead?

The passage is mysterious, and no satisfactory explanation has been found for it. It may be that the Apostle's thoughts were concentrated on the argument he was bringing us to the resurrection, and that his allusion to this peculiar baptism was incidental. It is as if he said, "Even those people who are baptized for the dead show that they believe in a resurrection, otherwise what benefit would they expect?" He does not endorse the practice. It may be that the Corinthian church, which was far from a model church, contained people who thought that if they were baptized in the name of some friend who had died without baptism, such friend would be benefited. Another explanation is based on a change of punctuation. It is suggested that the passage should read, "What shall they do who are baptized? For the dead if the dead rise not." This would imply that those who are baptized in Christ's name are baptized for the dead if he did not rise.

J. E. B., Huntsville, N. Y. How can it be true, as stated (James 2: 10), that a man who has offended in one point is guilty of all?

He can no longer stand before God on the ground of innocence. Having broken one law, he must take his stand with lawbreakers. He is in need of mercy, and can no more appeal to God for justice than can the man who has broken all the commandments. There is not, of course, the same degree of culpability, but his position before God is that of a sinner in need of pardon, as it would be if he were a sinner of deeper dye.

Despairing, St. Augustine, Fla. If one is continually depressed by the thoughts of sins committed in the past, is it a sign that God has not forgiven them?

Not necessarily. It may be, and probably is, rather a sign of weak faith. But usually it is a sign of a very proper sense of the heinousness of sin. Though God forgives a man he is sometimes not able to forgive himself. But even in that case, his faith should lead him to rejoice that a sinner so bad as he feels himself to have been, is pardoned. He ought not to doubt the pledge God has given, that the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin. A man's sins are not pardoned because of his feelings, but because he has accepted the pardon God offers to all who come to him through Christ. He expects men to take him at his word.

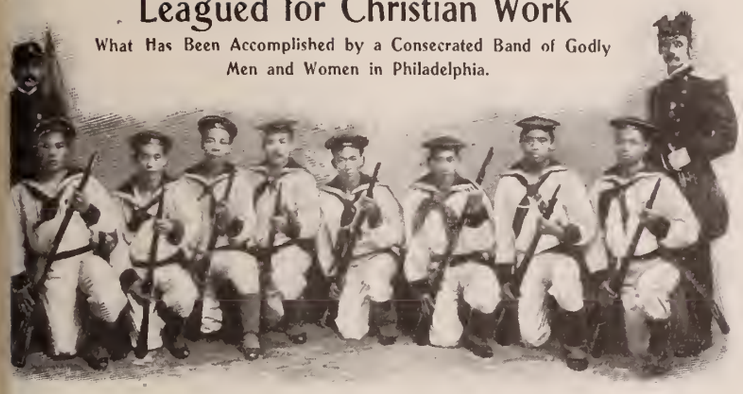
A CORNER OF THE SHOE BAZAAR IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

To the visitor in the Turkish capital, the bazaars are a never-failing source of wonder and delight. The Tcharchi (as the merchants' quarter is called), is a cluster of streets, of such extent and number as to resemble a small, covered town, the roof supported by arches of solid masonry. Each avenue is devoted to some particular branch of trade or commerce. In the Bezenstein are the jewelers (almost all Armenians); then there are the money-changers (mostly Armenians and Jews); the armorers, the silk merchants, and others. The shoe bazaar, proper, is a rather bright-looking place, with its piles and rows of shoes of different colors. It is the law in Turkey that each nationality be shod with its own particular color—the Moslem, with bright yellow morocco; the Armenian, crimson; the Jew, purple; the Greek, black. The most attractive feature of this bazaar is the velvet and gold embroidered slippers worn by the ladies. Oriental workmanship of this class is greatly admired.

Leagued for Christian Work

What Has Been Accomplished by a Consecrated Band of Godly Men and Women in Philadelphia.



NAVAL RESERVE CORPS ORGANIZED BY PHILADELPHIA MISSION CHINESE.

PHILADELPHIA has its slums as well as New York, and in these dark places, where sin keeps its court, consecrated men and women have long labored lingly and earnestly in the endeavor to n souls to Christ. Four years ago, the esbyterian Social Union of the Quaker ty raised the vital question, "As Chris- ns and good citizens, what ought we to to aid in the reformation of the mor- dark sections of our city?" An Out- k Committee was appointed to investi- e, and, under the leadership of its airman, Mr. George Griffiths, it made horough and conscientious inspection the "dark side" of the city, d discovered many quarters which there was the sorest d for the united efforts of d's people in the work of ial reformation. Upon the ommendation of the com- tee, a Christian League was anized, which included in its mbership representatives of the evangelical churches.

Rev. George D. Baker, D.D., tor of the First Presbyterian urch, was elected President. e Vice-Presidents are Rev. rus D. Foss, D.D., Bishop E. Church; Rev. O. W. itaker, D. D., Rev. H. L. yland, D.D. (Baptist); Rev. M. Baum, D.D., pastor of S. Matthew's Lutheran urch, and Rev. C. H. Rich- s, D.D., of the Central Con- gational Church. The rd of Directors, composed lergy and laymen, represents teen denominations. The ague's headquarters are cor- of Chestnut and Seventh eets, Philadelphia.

Among the various objects he League are: co-operation h all Christians in the work norally purifying the slums, ing the civil authorities in matters affecting the moral physical welfare of the , putting Christian workers he field, providing homes in country for city children who are rounded by evil influences, supporting bath observance, opposing the liquor ffic, taking such other measures for moral and spiritual benefit of the city night be deemed necessary.

Right nobly has the League redeemed promises. The slums have been vis- and evangelized, and many of the st places have been so thoroughly nsformed that they would now be diffi- of recognition. Writing on this phase he work of the League, Rev. Charles Bond, one of its most enthusiastic sup- ters, says:

> ne entire district, which was notorious the rld over, has been thoroughly reclaimed and emed. The work was done quietly, with- the flare of trumpets, by the chairman of executive committee, accompanied and sted by a few others, and with the ready peration of the civil authorities and the ng backing of the Christian community. he Christian League moved forward into ther district, which is but a few steps from dependence Hall, and close to the social and ness centres of the city. Here were found ditions which were appalling, for whites and ks had settled the question of equality in by mingling indiscriminately and holding r own, in defiance of law and Gospel. In e respects, this was a more difficult and dangerous field of operation, and even at the present writing the efforts of the League are being renewed with increased vigor. Many of the houses here are in such a state that it is impossible to induce respectable tenants to occupy them, and this suggests another important feature. The League promptly notified a number of owners and agents with good results, for within a few months, in the district known as the "Coast," wonderful changes had been made. Quiet and order took the place of lawlessness, and consternation followed defiance. "Old things had passed away," and all was new. For many months it has not been necessary to inspect this neighborhood, so complete has been the transformation.

"CHOY," A CHINESE GIRL RESCUED FROM SLAVERY.

WORKERS OF THE PHILADELPHIA CHRISTIAN LEAGUE.

CHAIRMAN GEORGE GRIFFITHS.

But the League does not confine its efforts to the slums, by any means. In November 1896, it established a Chinese Mission School in that section of Philadelphia called Chinatown and a most excellent work is being accomplished. The Chinamen are instructed in the English language, and religious services are held on Sundays and at other times. A Chinese Young Men's Christian Association started with fourteen members, and now numbers about one hundred. Chinese slavery has been practically abolished in Philadelphia through the influence of the League, and there is now on foot a movement to close the numerous gambling dens, and put a stop to other evils in the Chinese quarter. Rev. Frederic Poole is the missionary in charge. One feature of this branch of the work is the "Yen Nom Low," a Chinese restaurant, where truly Celestial delicacies are served. Concerning the general work of the Chinese Mission, Mr. Poole writes:

> During the comparatively short history of the Mission—a year and a half—eleven young Chinamen have been led to intelligently accept the doctrine of Christ, and on public confession of their faith have been baptized and received into fellowship with the various evangelical churches of the city. Mr. Lee Hong, who from the inauguration of the Association has been its President, is now preparing to qualify himself for the ministry. Sometime ago, several Chinese boys were admitted into the Baldwin Locomotive Works, to learn the trade.
> Several Chinese wives are kept secluded in upper rooms of Philadelphia houses, and their vision of the outside world is limited to what they may see from their closely-curtained apartments. The dull monotony of their lives is enlivened only by the companionship of little Chinese girls brought from home to wait on them. Chinese etiquette prohibits them from appearing on the street and mingling with others. One or two live near to the Mission, and their windows are invariably thrown open while our services are in progress, so that they may listen to the singing. This is practically all they hear of the "Jesus Doctrine," except when some Christian ladies are permitted to enter their rooms.
> Among the baptized converts at the Chinese Mission, who are now heartily identified with its work, are several who will doubtless hereafter become missionaries to their benighted countrymen at home.

REV. G. D. BAKER, PRESIDENT.

TROY'S CHRISTIAN MARTYR.

The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip Pays Tribute to Robert Ross's Memory.

A VERY unusual thing took place in Troy, N. Y., lately. The Presbyterian Chapters of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip were assembled in that city for their biennial convention, and, in the middle of their session, an adjournment was taken, and the entire body of delegates went up the hill to Oakwood Cemetery, where a religious service was held at the grave of Robert Ross, who died four years ago as a martyr to religion and patriotism. The men formed themselves in a circle around the grave and listened to a beautiful selection by a quartette of brothers from the Chapter to which Ross had belonged. His pastor, the Rev. Dr. Sybrandt, of the Oakwood Avenue Presbyterian Church, gave a short account of his life as a business man, a Christian, and a citizen. Another pastor led in prayer, and the circle, joining hands, sang the Brotherhood hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds." The service was concluded with the Benediction, by the Rev. Dr. E. W. Rice, of the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia. A beautiful floral tribute adorned the grave, and the father, mother, and grandmother of the murdered man sat in a carriage by the side of the plot while the exercises were being conducted.

Robert Ross was only twenty-six when he died, but he had acquired a reputation among the business men of Troy for honesty and fair dealing. At the age of twenty he had united with the Oakwood Avenue Church, on confession of faith. When the Brotherhood Chapter was started in that church, he became a member, and was as faithful in the work of bringing young men to Christ as in attending to his daily business. In March, 1894, spring elections were to be held in Troy. There had been a great deal of repeating at the polls in the worst districts, and the young citizens decided to watch and do their civic duty. Robert Ross and his brother William were both assigned to one polling place. The gang of roughs came and began voting over and over again. William Ross protested, and one of the ruffians shot him in the neck. Robert followed the assailant out of the building, but as he ran he fell, and a man named Shea came up to him, and, stooping, placed his pistol at Ross's ear, and drawing the trigger killed him instantly. William recovered, but carries the bullet to this day. There was a public funeral and much public indignation. Now, it happened that the Brotherhood button, with its lettering, "B. A. P.," had been mistaken by the rough element for an A. P. A. badge. At the funeral, the buttons were actually torn out of the coats of the pall-bearers; and had there been any resistance, a riot would have ensued that might have almost ended in a religious war in that city.

A Committee of Public Safety was organized to prosecute the murderers; Shea has been electrocuted; McGough is serving a long term in Dannemora Prison; Lawyer Frank Black, who assisted in the prosecution, became Governor of New York. Robert Ross is still remembered, and will be for many years to come, as the first martyr of the Brotherhood. There has been no cheating at the polls in Troy since that day. Soon after the murder, some public-spirited women of Troy began to raise money for a monument, which they erected at a cost of several thousand dollars. It is a bronze statue of the murdered man, protecting a ballot-box and defending the shield of the State from stain.

The Brotherhood is growing, and has now reached a membership of 14,000 young men, in 447 Chapters and nineteen denominations.

DARK SAYINGS ON A HARP.

Text: Ps. 49: 4:
I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

THE world is full of the inexplicable, the impassable, the unfathomable, the insurmountable. We cannot go three steps in any direction without coming up against a hard wall of mystery, riddles, paradoxes, profundities, labyrinths, problems that we cannot solve, hieroglyphics that we cannot decipher, anagrams we cannot spell out, sphinxes that will not speak. For that reason, David in my text proposed to take up some of these sombre and dark things, and try to set them to sweet music. "I will open my dark sayings on a harp." So I look off upon society and find people in unhappy conjunction of circumstances, and they do not know what it means, and they have a right to ask, Why is this? Why is that? and I think I will be doing a good work by trying to explain some of these strange things and make you more content with your lot, and I shall only be answering questions that have often been asked me, or that we have all asked ourselves, while I try to set these mysteries to music and open my dark sayings on a harp.

Interrogation the first: Why does God take out of this world those who are useful and whom we cannot spare, and leave alive and in good health so many who are only a nuisance to the world? I thought I would begin with the very toughest of all the seeming inscrutables. Many of the most useful men and women die at thirty or forty years of age, while you often find useless people alive at sixty and seventy and eighty. John Careless wrote to Bradford, who was soon to be put to death, saying: "Why doth God suffer me, and such other caterpillars to live, that can do nothing but consume the alms of the church, and take away so many worthy workmen in the Lord's vineyard?" Similar questions are often asked. Here are two men. The one is a noble character and a Christian man: he chooses for a lifetime companion one who has been tenderly reared, and she is worthy of him and he is worthy of her: as merchant, or farmer, or professional man, or mechanic, or artist, he toils to educate and rear his children: he is succeeding but he has not yet established for his family a full competency: he seems indispensable to that household: but one day, before he has paid off the mortgage on his house, he is coming home through a strong northeast wind, and a chill strikes through him, and four days of pneumonia end his earthly career, and the wife and children go into a struggle for shelter and food. His next-door neighbor is a man who, though strong and well, lets his wife support him: he is around at the grocery store, or some general loafing-place, in the evenings, while his wife sews: his boys are imitating his example, and lounge and swagger and swear. All the use that man is in that house is to rave because the coffee is cold when he comes to a late breakfast, or to say cutting things about his wife's looks, when he furnishes nothing for her wardrobe. The best thing that could happen to that family would be that man's funeral: but he declines to die: he lives on and on, and on. So we have all noticed that many of the useful are early cut off, while the parasites have great vital tenacity.

I take up this dark saying on my harp, and give three or four thrums on the string in the way of surmising and hopeful guess. Perhaps the useful man was taken out of the world because he and his family were so constructed that they could not have endured some great prosperity that might have been just ahead, and they altogether might have gone down in the vortex of worldliness which every year swallows up ten thousand households. And so he went while he was humble and consecrated, and they were by the severities of life kept close to Christ and fitted for usefulness here and high seats in heaven, and when they meet at last before the throne they will acknowledge that, though the furnace was hot, it purified them, and prepared them for an eternal career of glory and reward for which no other kind of life could have fitted them. On the other hand the useless man lived on to fifty, or sixty, or seventy years, because all the ease he ever can have, he must have in this world, and you ought not, therefore, begrudge him his earthly longevity. If the good and useful go early, rejoice for them that they have so soon got through with human life, which at best is a struggle. And if the useless and the bad stay, rejoice that they may be out in the world's fresh air a good many years before their final incarceration.

Interrogation the second: Why do good people have so much trouble, sickness, bankruptcy, persecution, the three black vultures sometimes putting their fierce beaks into one set of jangled nerves? I think now of a good friend I once had. He was a consecrated Christian man, an elder in the church, and as polished a Christian gentleman as ever walked Broadway. First his general health gave out and he hobbled around on a cane, an old man at forty. After a while paralysis struck him. Having by poor health been compelled suddenly to quit business, he lost what property he had. Then his beautiful daughter died; then a son became hopelessly demented. Another son, splendid of mind and commanding of presence, resolved that he would take care of his father's household; but under the swoop of yellow fever at Fernandina, Fla., he suddenly expired. So you know good men and women who have had enough troubles, you think, to crush fifty people. No worldly philosophy could take such a trouble and set it to music, or play it on violin or flute, but I dare to open that dark saying on a Gospel harp.

You wonder that very consecrated people have trouble? Did you ever know any very consecrated man or woman who had not had great trouble? Never! It was through their troubles sanctified that they were made very good. If you find anywhere in this city a man who has now, and always has had, perfect health, and never lost a child, and has always been popular, and never had business struggle or misfortune, who is distinguished for goodness, press the button for a telegraph messenger-boy, and send me word, and I will drop everything and go right away to look at him. There never has been a man like that, and never will be. Who are those arrogant, self-conceited creatures who move about without sympathy for others, and who think more of a St. Bernard dog, or an Alderney cow, or a Southdown sheep, or a Berkshire pig than of a man? They never had any trouble, or the trouble was never sanctified. Who are those men who listen with moist eye as you tell them of suffering, and who have a pathos in their voice, and a kindness in their manner, and an excuse or an alleviation for those gone astray? They are the men who have graduated at the Royal Academy of Trouble, and they have the diploma written in wrinkles on their own countenances. My! my! What heartaches they had! What tears they have wept! What injustice they have suffered! The mightiest influence for purification and salvation is trouble. No diamond fit for a crown until it is cut. No wheat fit for bread till it is ground. There are only three things that can break off a chain—a hammer, a file, or a fire; and trouble is all three of them. The greatest writers, orators, and reformers get much of their force from trouble. What gave to Washington Irving that exquisite tenderness and pathos which will make his books favorites while the English language continues to be written and spoken? An early heartbreak, that he never once mentioned, and when, thirty years after the death of Matilda Hoffman, who was to have been his bride, her father picked up a piece of embroidery and said, "That is a piece of poor Matilda's workmanship." Washington Irving sank from hilarity into silence and walked away. Out of that lifetime grief the great author dipped his pen's mightiest reinforcement. "Calvin's Institutes of Religion," than which a more wonderful book was never written by human hand, was begun by the author at twenty-five years of age, because of the persecution by Francis, King of France. Faraday toiled for all time on a salary of eighty pounds a year and candles. As every brick of the wall of Babylon was stamped with the letter N, standing for Nebuchadnezzar, so every part of the temple of Christian achievement is stamped with the letter T, standing for trouble.

When in England a man is honored with knighthood, he is struck with the flat of the sword. But those who have come to knighthood in the kingdom of God were first struck, not with the flat of the sword, but with the keen edge of the cimeter. To build his magnificence of character, Paul could not have spared one lash, one prison, one stoning, one anathema, one poisonous viper from the hand, one shipwreck. What is true of individuals is true of nations. The horrors of the American Revolution gave this country this side of the Mississippi river to independence, and the conflict between England and France gave the most of this country west of the Mississippi to the United States. France owned it, but Napoleon, fearing that England would take it, practically made a present to the United States—for he received only $15,000,000 for Louisiana, Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and the Indian Territory. Out of the fire of the American Revolution came this country east of the Mississippi, out of the European war came that west of the Mississippi river. The British Empire rose to its present overtowering grandeur through gunpowder plot, and Guy Fawkes' conspiracy, and Northampton insurrection, and Walter Raleigh's beheading, and Bacon's bribery, and Cromwell's dissolution of parliament, and the battles of Edge Hill, and the vicissitudes of centuries. So the earth itself, before it could become an appropriate and beautiful residence for the human family, had, according to geology, to be washed by universal deluge, and scorched and made incandescent by universal fires, and pounded by sledge-hammer of icebergs, and wrenched by earthquakes that split continents, and shaken by volcanoes that tossed mountains, and passed through the catastrophes of thousands of years before Paradise became possible, and the groves could shake out their green banners, and the first garden pour its carnage of color between the Gihon and the Hiddekel. Trouble a good thing for the rocks, a good thing for nations, as well as a good thing for individuals. So when you push against me with a sharp interrogation point, Why do the good suffer? I open the dark saying on a harp, and, though I can neither play an organ, or cornet, or hautboy, or bugle, or clarionet, I have taken some lessons on the Gospel harp, and if you would like to hear me I will play you these: "All things work together for good to those who love God." "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." So you will not blame me for opening the dark saying on the Gospel harp—

Your harps, ye trembling saints,
Down from the willows take;
Loud to the praise of love divine
Bid every string awake!

Interrogation third: Why did the good God let sin or trouble come into the world when he might have kept them out? My reply is, He had a good reason. He had reasons that he has never given us. He had reasons which he could no more make us understand in our finite state than the father, starting out on some great and elaborate enterprise, could make the two-year-old child in its armed chair comprehend it. One was to demonstrate what grandeur of character may be achieved on earth by conquering evil. Had there been no evil to conquer and no trouble to console, then this universe would never have known an Abraham, or a Moses, or a Joshua, or an Ezekiel, or a Paul, or a Christ, or a Washington, or a John Milton, or a John Howard; and a million victories which have been gained by the consecrated spirits of all ages would never have been gained. Had there been no battle, there would have been no victory. Nine-tenths of the anthems of heaven would never have been sung. Heaven could never have been a thousandth part of the heaven that it is. I will not say that I am glad that sin and sorrow did enter, but I do say that I am glad that after God has given all his reasons to an assembled universe, he will be more honored than if sin and sorrow had never entered, and that the unfallen celestials will be outdone, and will put down their trumpets to listen, and it will be in heaven when those who have conquered sin and sorrow shall enter, as it would be in a small singing school on earth, if Thalberg and Gottschalk, and Wagner, and Beethoven, and Rheinberger, and Schumann should all at once enter. The immortals that have been chanting ten thousand years before the throne will say, as they close their librettos: "Oh, if we could only sing like that!" But God will say to those who have never fallen, and consequently have not been redeemed, "You must be silent now; you have not the qualification for this anthem." So they sit with closed lips and folded hands, and sinners saved by grace take up the harmony, for the Bible says "no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth."

A great prima donna, who can now do anything with her voice, told me that when she first started in music her teacher in Berlin told her she could be a good singer, but a certain note she could never reach. "And then," she said, "I went to work and studied and practised for years until I did reach it." But the song of the singer redeemed, the Bible says, the exalted harmonists who have never sinned could not reach and never will reach. Would you like to hear me in a very poor way play a snatch of that tune? I can give you only one bar of the music of this Gospel harp: "Unto him that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood and hath made us kings and priests unto God and the Lamb, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen."

But before finally leaving this interrogatory. Why God let sin come into the world? let me say that great battles seem to be nothing but suffering and outrage at the time of their occurrence, yet after they have been a long while past we can see that it was better for them to have been fought, namely, Salamis, Inkermann, Toulouse, Arbela, Agincourt, Trafalgar, Blenheim, Lexington, Sedan. So now that the great battles against sin and suffering are going on we can see mostly that which is deplorable. But twenty thousand years from now, standing in glory, we shall appreciate that heaven is better off than if the battle of this world's sin and suffering had never been projected.

But now I come nearer home and put a dark saying on the Gospel harp, a style of question that is asked a million times every year. Interrogation the fourth. Why do I have it so hard, while others have it so easy? or, Why do I have so much difficulty in getting a livelihood while others go around with a full portemonnaie? or, Why must I wear these plain clothes, while others have to push hard to get their wardrobes closed, so crowded are they with brilliant attire? or, Why should I have to work so hard while others have three hundred and sixty-five holidays every year? They are all practically one question. I answer them by saying, It is because the Lord has his favorites, and he puts extra discipline upon you, and extra trial, because he has for you extra glory, extra enthronement and extra felicities. That is no guess of mine, but a divine say-so: "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." "Well," says some one, "I would rather have a little less in heaven and a little more here. Discount my heavenly robe ten per cent and let me now put it on a fur-lined overcoat; put me in a less gorgeous room of the house of many mansions, and let me have a house here in a better neighborhood." No, no; God is not going to roll heaven, which is to be your residence for nine hundred quadrillion of years, to fit up your earthly abode, which you will ccupy at most for less than a century, nd where you may perhaps stay only ten ears longer, or only one year, or perhaps month more. Now you had better heerfully let God have his way, for, you ee, he has been taking care of folks for ear six thousand years, and knows how o do it, and can see what is best for you, etter than you can yourself. Don't think ou are too insignificant to be divinely ared for. It was said that Diana, the oddess, could not be present to keep her mple at Ephesus from burning because e was attending upon the birth of him ho was to be Alexander the Great. But tell you that your God and my God is great in small things as well as large ings, that he could attend the cradle of babe, and at the same time the burning f a world.

And God will make it all right with ou, and there is one song that you will ng every hour your first ten years in eaven, and the refrain of that song will e, "I am so glad God did not let me ve it my own way!" Your case will all fixed up in heaven, and there will such a reversal of conditions that we n hardly find each other. So I open your rk saying of despondency and com- aint, on my Gospel harp, and give you st one bar of music, for I do not pre- nd to be much of a player. "The Lamb hich is in the midst of the throne shall ad them to living fountains of water, d God shall wipe away all tears from eir eyes." But, I must confess, I am a tle perplexed how some of you good hristians are going to get through the te, because there will be so many there greet you, and they will all want ake hands at once, and will all want e first kiss. They will have heard that u are coming, and they will l press around to welcome u, and will want you to say hether you know them after ing so long parted.

Amid the tussle and romp reunion I tell you whose nd of welcome you had bet- r first clasp, and whose eek is entitled to the first ss. It is the hand and the eek of him without whom u would never have got ere at all, the Lord Jesus as e darling of the skies as he ies out. "I have loved thee th an ever-lasting love, and e fires could not burn it, d the floods could not own it."

Then you, my dear people, ving no more use for my or harp, on which I used to en your dark sayings, and ose chords sometimes apped, despoiling the sym- ony, you will take down ur own harps from the wil- ws that grow by the eternal ter courses, and play to- ther those celestial airs, me of the names of which e entitled, "The King in is Beauty," "The Land at Was Far Off." And as e last dark curtain of mys- y is forever lifted, it will as though all the oratorios at were ever heard had en rolled into one, and "Is- el in Egypt," and "Jeph- ah's Daughter," and Bee- oven's "Overture in C," d Ritter's first "Sonata in minor," and the "Crea- n," and the "Messiah" had been own from the lips of one trumpet, or en invoked by the sweep of one bow, had dropped from the vibrating chords one harp.

So I move that we adjourn what is w beyond our comprehension; and as, cording to Rollin, the historian, Alex- der the Great, having obtained the gold sket in which Darius had kept his rare rfume, used that aromatic casket there- er to keep his favorite copy of Homer and called the book, therefore, the dition of the Casket," and at night put e casket and his sword under his pillow: I put, this day, into the perfumed cas- t of your richest affections and hopes s promise, worth more than anything mer ever wrote or sword ever conquer- : "What I do thou knowest not now, t thou shalt know hereafter," and that all the "Edition Celestial."

SUNDAY AT THE WHITE HOUSE....

How the Lord's Day is Observed by the Nation's Chief Magistrate. . . . A Worthy Example and its Effect on Washington Society. . . . . .

DURING the recent period of stress and trial, when the mind of the nation was strained to its utmost tension over the rapidly developing phases of a war in which we had become suddenly involved, Christian people found substantial comfort in the knowledge that the men at the head of affairs were distinguished, no less for their patriotism and high courage, than for their unswerving faith in the divine wisdom, which has thus far controlled the destinies of the American people. They knew, above all, that the "man at the helm," the occupant of the Presidential chair, was an earnest, conscientious Christian, who took no step in public affairs that had not first been made the subject of appeal to the Source of all Wisdom for guidance.

There is something very cheerful and whole-souled about President McKinley's Christianity. He seems to carry it with him all the time, and to use it on every possible occasion. He does not keep it stored away for use on Sundays when he attends church, but scatters it broadcast during his busy week-days at the White House. No visitor can talk with him for any length of time, and not perceive him to be an earnest, active Christian, for he shows it continually in his conversation, and in his life.

Since the enormous cares of a foreign war have been added to the President's already large burden of duties, he has on a few occasions of great public exigency been obliged to vary his Sunday programme. The pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. Church in Washington knows that when the President is not in his pew on Sunday morning, something very extraordinary has occurred to demand his presence at the White House. On a few occasions, during the war with Spain, when startling news arrived on Sunday morning from the front, the Cabinet was assembled, but this was a rare occurrence, and he has usually been permitted to make his Sunday a day of absolute rest from all work, and to devote its hours to worship and spiritual exercises.

On week-days Mr. McKinley is a very early riser. For weeks he was seldom permitted to retire before midnight, and he began to feel his long hours very much. On Sunday morning, breakfast-table at the White House is a pleasant sight. The President himself asks the blessing on the morning meal. Then he and Mrs. McKinley counsel pleasantly with one another until it is time to leave for church. A Cabinet officer or Secretary may drop in for a moment, but his business must be very important indeed to have the President consider it on Sunday even for an instant. No mail is opened at the White House on this morning, unless its contents are known to be important, and in that case the President's Secretary himself oversees the operation. It is not brought to the President's attention till next morning, if it can be avoided, for his rules in this matter are iron-bound.

Promptly at fifteen minutes of eleven, the black horses and carriage are at the door, ready to take him to church, and promptly at ten minutes of eleven, the President steps into the vehicle. His wife is unfortunately very much of an invalid, and consequently he frequently goes alone to church, unless one of the Cabinet members accompanies him. Just as the minister is about to announce the opening hymn, the President walks down the aisle of the Metropolitan Church, and takes his seat in the fourth pew from the front. There is no noise about it, no whisperings among the congregation, and no attention is paid to his entrance. He quietly seats himself and bows his head in prayer. When the hymn is started, the President sings heartily, and from that time forward, his heart is in the service. He sings every hymn, reads the psalms, and listens intently to the sermon. He is evidently enjoying it thoroughly, and it does one good to watch him. He is the most modest of men, however, and would be greatly embarrassed to have the attention of the congregation directed towards him. It is his desire to worship in Washington as he worshipped in Canton, Ohio—just as a private citizen.

"I would rather attend some tiny mission, down among the wharves, and be allowed to worship as I wish," he once said, "than come to this large church, and be continually conscious of my position. I want to lay aside my position on Sundays, anyhow."

When the offering is taken, and the ushers pass the plate, the President encloses his gift in an envelope and drops it in with the others. When service is over, and the doxology sung, the nearby portion of the congregation remain seated a moment, while the President rises and passes out. That seems to be the only way in which he can escape many who desire to shake his hand. Before the rest of the congregation is out of the church, he is whirling away to the White House, happy and contented, because for one hour he has been permitted to be just a simple worshiper.

Sunday is his own particular home day. He and Mrs. McKinley spend it together, and it is indeed a day of rest to them. Before dinner is served they occasionally step out to the beautiful White House garden, and to see them thus is worth a great deal; they enjoy themselves so thoroughly, and find such delight in each other's company.

Sunday visitors are rare and the family usually sits down alone to this most pleasant meal of all the week. If Mr. Alger or Mr. Long happen to be present when it is served, they are of course asked to remain; but, knowing the President's desires, they seldom consent to do so. There are just the President and Mrs. McKinley, and, of course, Miss Barber, or Mrs. Abner McKinley, should they happen to be visiting at the White House. There is always some relative stopping with Mrs. McKinley, for company's sake—either Miss McKinley, or Mrs. Saxton, or one of the two already mentioned.

THE PRESIDENT IN HIS PRIVATE OFFICE.

Dinner over, the family settles down for a long, delightful, home-like afternoon. There are very few callers, and the mansion is very quiet indeed. Frequently Mrs. McKenna, or some very intimate friend, will come in to sit a while, but as a rule Mrs. McKinley discourages people from making Sunday calls. She wants the President to herself on that day. They occasionally occupy themselves with a little reading. As the afternoon wears on, they sometimes have Sunday music in the "blue room," or a little home concert of some kind, and when evening comes, and tea has been served, they withdraw to the family sitting-room, where the day is finally brought to a reverent close. Mr. McKinley never attends the evening service at the church.

METROPOLITAN M. E. CHURCH, WASHINGTON.

When Sunday at the White House finally closes, it always seems too short to the President and Mrs. McKinley. They invariably wish it might have lasted longer, or that it might come again before another six days have passed. They find in their "day of rest" together, a joy that is known only to hearts that are right with God, and which is more frequently found among humbler folks than among those of high station.

One might think that the President would be tempted to devote his Sundays to receiving his friends, and to making it a day of social enjoyment. In so doing he would only be following the plan of millions of our people, who plead a busy week as an excuse for a godless Sunday. But the President is a Christian of the sterner sort, and will allow nothing short of imperative affairs of State to interfere with his attendance at church, and with the proper observance of the Sabbath. He finds far more pleasure in a quiet day at home with Mrs. McKinley and the family than he would with a house full of callers all day long. His example means much to Washington society. Official families are beginning to follow the ways of the family in the White House, and where the Sabbath used to be a regular reception day, it has now become a real day of rest, if not of spiritual revival.

O time of tranquil joy and holy feeling!
When sacred thoughts, like angels, come appealing,
To our tent doors; O eve, to earth and heaven
The sweetest of the seven.

Always Praising.

A man was converted (writes Mr. Moody), and he was just full of praise. He was living in the light all the time. He used to preface everything he said in the meeting with "Praise God!"

One night he came to the meeting with his finger all bound up. He had cut it, and cut it pretty bad, too. Well I wondered how he would praise God for this; but he got up and said:

"I have cut my finger, but praise God, I didn't cut it off!"

If things go against you, just remember they might be a good deal worse.

THE CAPTIVITY OF JUDAH.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 18. Jeremiah 52: 1-11. Golden Text, Jeremiah 29: 13.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

JUDAH had filled up the measure of her iniquity as Israel had done before her. "The chief of the priests, and the people transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the Lord which he had hallowed in Jerusalem. and the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes and sending; because he had compassion on his people and on his dwelling-place. But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy" (II. Chron. 36: 14-16). The same God who had been so patient with an Ahab and a Jehoram in Israel, and with all their sinful successors until their wickedness obliged him to send them into captivity, now testified by Jeremiah (3: 2, R. V.): "Backsliding Israel has shown herself more righteous than treacherous Judah," and Judah's time for judgment was come. Now things had gone too far. The people had flattered themselves that because judgment was postponed in Josiah's days it would continue to be postponed: they "put far away the evil day" (Amos 6: 3), and said of the warnings which God sent them by his true prophet Ezekiel: "The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of times that are far off," even after God had sent them the solemn message. "The word that I shall speak shall be performed: it shall be no more deferred: for in your days, O rebellious house, will I speak the word and will perform it, saith the Lord" (Ezekiel 12: 25-28). Jehoiachin had already been carried away captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, with ten thousand captives, and all the skilled mechanics, whose craft would now go to enrich the country of their captivity; only "the poorest sort of the people of the land" remained for Zedekiah to reign over (II. Kings 24: 12-16), and yet so stubborn was this man that he presumed to rebel against the king of Babylon.

"Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, was again used of God to punish his idolatrous and rebellious people: he came with all his army against Jerusalem, and pitched against it and built forts against it round about" (Jere. 52: 4). What a sight! The Zion which God had chosen, desired for his habitation, of which he had said, "Here will I dwell, for I have desired it" (Psalms 132: 13, 14), besieged by the king of Babylon, that city which was the very centre of the most organized defiance of God, from the very time of its first building! "How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger" (Lam. 2: 1).

For nineteen months Zedekiah stood the awful siege; resisting not only Nebuchadnezzar, but far more obstinately him whose word had gone forth (Jere. 32: 3-5). "Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it; and Zedekiah, king of Judah, shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and his eyes shall behold his eyes; and he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the Lord: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper." What did the king gain by resisting God? He had to give in sooner or later. He saw around him everything going to ruin, and the people herded together in the city dying daily from starvation; no captivity in Babylon could be much worse than the condition of things in Jerusalem, where famine with all its attendant horrors reigned.

It was just when the bread supply came to an end that the besiegers made a breach in the wall, and the army of the king of Babylon entered Jerusalem. The city was broken up; the men of war fled by night, and the king with them. But the fulfilment of a part of God's warnings by Jeremiah must have brought with it the terrible certainty that the remainder of God's declared judgment awaited the King. Vain was his attempt to escape; a stronger than the king of Babylon was against him, whose word must be fulfilled. The famished fugitives had no chance against the well-fed army of the Chaldeans; they were overtaken, the army of Judah was scattered, and Zedekiah was brought up before the king of Babylon at Riblah, in the land of Hamath, an accused prisoner at the bar of his enemy. Zedekiah was found guilty of rebellion and treason: his sentence was a very severe one, and it was forthwith put into execution. His sons were slain before his eyes, and then the eyes which had just witnessed this terrible punishment were put out, and as though in mockery of the blind king, he was then bound in chains and carried to Babylon, where he died, an object lesson to such as will resist the Lord.

And now the spoiling of Jerusalem was carried out: the house of the Lord, the king's palace, the great houses of the nobles all burned with fire, and the walls of the beloved city utterly broken down. The people had polluted the house of the Lord by abominable idolatries. More than once God had turned with favor towards them, when Joash and Hezekiah and Josiah had cleansed and repaired the temple, but now it must be purified by fire, nothing less would do it, and the structure which had been one of the wonders of the world became a mass of shapless ruins. And the vessels of gold, and silver, and brass were carried away to Babylon; and the splendid brazen pillars and the brazen sea were broken up and carried away as so much common metal for the use of idolaters in Babylon.

THE PLAINS OUTSIDE JERUSALEM, WHERE KING ZEDEKIAH WAS CAPTURED.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

JUDAH'S fall was swift and complete. Only twenty years from the time when King Jehoiakim showed his contempt for Jeremiah's warning, by cutting and burning the roll on which it had been written, his capital with its historic temple was despoiled and set on fire. The historians who wrote the books of Kings and Chronicles hurry over the sad story as if they could not bear to dwell on the heartrending details. But Jeremiah was an eye-witness of the events and a prominent actor in them. From his book we get a graphic picture of the time. The old struggle between the two parties in the state was still going on. One party was urging submission to Babylon, and fidelity to the promises Judah had made to that kingdom. The other party advocated rebellion, relying on the help which Egypt promised. To this latter party Jehoiakim listened, in spite of Jeremiah's warning. The King of Babylon besieged Jerusalem, and Jehoiakim was killed. Some legends say that his own soldiers killed him, and threw his dead body, as a peace offering, into the Babylonian camp. He was succeeded by his son Jehoiachin, who is sometimes called Jeconiah. He followed his father's fateful course, and after a brief reign of one hundred days, was carried prisoner to Babylon. It is inferred that he was childless, for he was succeeded by his uncle Mattaniah. This king, who was the third son of the good King Josiah, took the name of Zedekiah, and was the twenty-first and last king of Judah. With him the long line of kings who descended from David came to an end. He, too, rebelled against Babylon, and was besieged in his capital. Realizing after a long struggle that the city would eventually be taken, he attempted to make his escape, but was captured and carried before the king of Babylon, who compelled him to witness the slaughter of his children, and then put out his eyes and carried him away captive.

He did that which was evil. The same thing had been said of many of Zedekiah's predecessors. He does not appear to have been worse than they. The story of his life indicates weakness and incapacity rather than extreme wickedness. But national ruin is apt to come under such a king. It was so in France a hundred years ago. Louis XVI. was by no means the worst of the Bourbons. He was comparatively harmless. He simply continued the practises of the kings who went before him. But the times had changed. The people had lost their patience. The storm, which had been gathering for scores of years, broke, at last, on his devoted head. The king was bewildered, and knew not what course to take. Alternately yielding and again showing firmness, he became a subject of contempt. Like Zedekiah, he was urged to fly for his life, but postponed the step from time to time, until it was too late. Then, when he should have remained, he tried to make his escape. He was ignominiously taken back to Paris, and ended his days on the guillotine. He and the nobles, who perished in the same way, could not understand why the evil fell upon them. They made the fatal mistake of supposing that punishment delayed, might never fall, and did not realize that in filling up the cup of their fathers' iniquities, the punishment might be the more severe because of the delay.

Overtook Zedekiah in the plains. He had delayed his departure too long. Jeremiah had warned him of his danger long before. There are some men whom it seems useless to warn. An Oriental legend tells of a young man, named Selim, who sought the advice of a dervish. The dervish, being under a vow of silence, intimated by signs that he would write the advice in the sand outside his tent. He did so, but Selim did not go out to read it, because the sun was too hot. After sunset he went, but a caravan had passed in the interval, and the writing was obliterated by the feet of the camels. Again Selim appealed to the dervish, and again the answer was written in the sand. But he delayed again to read it, and when he went, the wind had swept over it, and not a letter remained. Selim's troubles increased, and a third time he applied to the dervish. "It is useless," said the dervish, breaking his self-imposed vow of silence. "He that will not heed counsel twice given is already given over to perdition, and no counsel can benefit him."

He put out the eyes of Zedekiah. This fulfilled a prediction made by Ezekiel, who was at that time already a captive in Babylon, but who was aiding the party of Jeremiah, by writing warnings to the infatuated king and people in Jerusalem. Ezekiel said (10: 13) that Zedekiah should be brought a prisoner to Babylon and should die there, yet should he never see it. This prophecy, apparently contradictory, was fulfilled when the blinded king was carried into the city. A clergyman after preaching an earnest sermon, spoke to a stranger who was present and asked him to become a Christian. "No," was the reply, "there are contradictions in the Bible, and I could not believe a book that contradicts itself." "My friend," said the clergyman, "there are no real contradictions in the Bible, though there are some statements that appear contradictory to us, because we do not know all the facts. If I told you that the straight road between two towns that I know, would be a longer journey than one that turns to the west, and then to the north, and then to the east, you would not believe me." The stranger said that he should not believe such a statement. "I expected you would not," said the clergyman, "but you will when I tell you that the straight road leads you over a high mountain. Do not be too sure that the Bible contradicts itself."

IN LONELY WATCH TOWERS

Our Beacon Lights Along the Shore and the Routine of a Lighthouse Keeper's Life—Few Religious Privileges.

SAILING safely in and out of land-locked harbors, skirting treacherous shores, giving wide distance to submarine rocks, ledges, and shoals—do we think as we glide way, with a backward glance at the light the lonely watch-tower, of him who eeps it burning? The life of the light-ouse keeper, even on the mainland, and t its best, is an isolated one. When the atch-tower is out on a lonely rock or land, inaccessible at certain seasons om the mainland, this isolation is intenfied tenfold; and it is not an unknown ing for keepers to go insane or commit icide.

Two, three, or four men are on guard, ccording to the size and importance of e station: they relieve each other in the ight watches, and take turns in shore-ave. Off-shore keepers have three days month shore-leave, besides legal holiays; and in case of need, they go ashore ftener. They are at liberty to attend urch Sundays. It goes without saying, owever, that whenever the head-keeper away, a reliable substitute must be in harge; also, that in cases where a journey the mainland is difficult or dangerous, nd, as sometimes, for considerable perods impossible, keepers may not be able avail themselves of all the shore-leave e Lighthouse Establishment grants. In ighthouses on the mainland, or on large lands near the shore, their families are ermitted to live with them; but in the ff-shore lighthouse or lightship service, is has not been found advisable. Sometimes a woman is appointed as her husband's assistant, and in other instances head-keepers. The United States employs about twenty women in this service. Miss Colfax, a former Vice-President's ster, is in charge of the Michigan City ight Station. The appointment of women usually to stations where the chief service required is to keep the illuminating pparatus clean and the lights burning; ot that women do not perform more serous and gallant service. Ida Lewis, America's Grace Darling," now head-eeper at Lime Rock, Newport Harbor, as rescued thirteen men. In 1857 Keeper urgess went from his station to the main-nd for fuel and provisions; a storm ose; he did not return; his son set out a skiff and came not back. The wife id daughter watched and waited, their tions reduced to one cup of cornmeal uel and one egg a day; starvation stared them in the face, and suspense wrung their hearts as the days crept by. But the lights never failed! Every night they shone out clear and true, to guide the mariner on his way. It was three weeks before troubled seas permitted father and sons to return to the waiting women.

A keeper knows many sleepless nights. During storms he must often watch his lights all night. It is considered as cowardly for a keeper to desert his light as for a captain to leave his ship to her fate, or betray his command to the enemy. Keepers have died at their posts; when towers have been wrenched away from their foundations, keepers have gone down with their lights. When Sharp's Island Lighthouse, Chesapeake Bay, was overthrown by ice, the keepers who could have escaped in a boat, remained in it, and for sixteen hours were knocked about at the mercy of waves and blocks of ice. At midnight, the house full of water grounded upon an island, and they rescued the lens, oil, and other properties.

The government does all that is possible to ameliorate this isolation. At desolate stations keepers are changed as often as practicable. Homes at all the stations are made as comfortable and cosy as possible. Libraries are provided, and books changed for new ones. The salary of a first-light keeper is $750 a year, with perquisites. Applications for posts of every grade are numerous. Keepers are chosen with great care. A civil service examination, and a first-class character for soberness and trustworthiness, are essentials. Should his light be allowed to go out once, a keeper is dismissed; no excuse avails. The routine of his daily duties is monotonous, but they must be performed with unfailing exactness. The inspector's visit may occur at any time, and in welcoming him the head-keeper presents him with a white linen napkin. As he goes his rounds he passes this over the lens, the lamp, and even inside kitchen utensils; if the cloth comes immaculate from the test, he enters in the lighthouse log-book this record: "Service napkin not soiled," while the slightest smirch on the linen means a black mark for the keeper. The log-book, in which the keeper enters the records of each day, is kept as carefully as that of a ship. Supplies in the form of government rations are delivered quarterly by the lighthouse tenders, which are small steamers used in the service. Oil and other material for lighthouse work is delivered once a year; and once a year a ship which is a floating wholesale store, carrying all sorts of supplies, from pins and needles to surf-boats, horses and agricultural implements, visits the more isolated stations. The frequency and regularity of mails depends upon the location of the station.

There are sixteen districts in our Lighthouse Establishment, each provided with two inspectors, who make monthly reports to the office of the Board in Washington. The Board, created in 1854, with Admiral Jenkins, "father of the Board," as naval secretary, is composed of "two officers of high rank in the army; two civilians of high scientific attainments; an officer of the navy and an engineer officer of the army, who act as secretaries." The Secretary of the Treasury is ex-officio president, but the Board chooses the chairman who presides at its monthly meetings. Rear-Admiral John G. Walker, of brilliant Civil War record, is the present incumbent. All these gentlemen serve without other emolument than that to which they are entitled by reason of their naval, military, or civil positions. To their watchfulness and zeal is due the exceptional effectiveness and excellent discipline of our service. Many distinguished men have been in our Lighthouse Establishment, as members of the Board and inspectors; and the systems of Europe have been laid under tribute to perfect our own. The United States, France, and Spain are the only countries exacting no light dues from visiting vessels. Our magnificent equipment of 600 lighthouses, 42 light vessels, 1,900 post lights, and 5,000 or more buoys, are at the world's service free of toll.

The first lighthouse in America, the Boston Harbor light, built 1715, burned "Fier bales of pitch and ocum" in an iron basket aloft. Another early Massachusetts beacon was lit with tallow candles. From these there is a wide stretch of progressive improvements to the wonderful French lenses used to-day, and the perfected signal code of lights, flashing, revolving, red and white, conveying in intelligent language timely information to mariners many miles distant.

The greatest disadvantage of the lighthouse keeper's life is the deprivation of religious privilege, which must exist as a matter of course. No religious organization seems to have these men under special care. One keeper, at a post near the mainland, and as regular an attendant at church as circumstances permit, has not received in his more than twenty years of service one pastoral visit. Here, surely, is an excellent field for work that would doubtless be appreciated, for the isolation of the keepers' lives might make kindly attentions welcome. Surely the keeper's work is one that should make his heart yearn towards that God who neither slumbers nor sleeps, who holds the deep in the hollow of his hand, and who is mindful of them that go down to the sea in ships, and of them that guard and trim the beacon lights.

Government plans point to such close establishment of lights along our coasts that rays will cross, and our continent be completely light-encircled.

AN ERA OF TEMPERANCE.

The World, Growing More Enlightened, Recognizes the Evils of the Alcohol Traffic.

IN her address before the National Convention of the W. C. T. U. at St. Paul, Minn., recently, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, delivered the annual report of her department. In the course of her remarks she said:

REAR ADMIRAL JOHN G. WALKER,
(Chairman, Lighthouse Board.)

The poet Lowell says:

At the birth of each new era,
Nation wildly looks at nation,
With a recognizing start,
Standing with mute lips apart.

Have we reached the dawn of such an era for the temperance cause? Three things indicate that we have. The first is that the civilized nations of the earth are putting cause and effect together on the alcohol question as never before. In France, Switzerland and Belgium the increasing use of alcohol is recognized as the cause of a physical decline in stature that is filling those nations with alarm for their future. Close investigation is proving to the Kaiser that the beer-drinking soldier has only about eighty per cent. of the endurance of the total abstainer, and economists are calling attention to the bad effects increasing drink habits are having upon German industries. The young Czar of Russia, alarmed at the inroads alcohol is making upon his army and people, is striving to stem the tide. Thoughtful Englishmen are saying that Britain's greatest enemy is alcohol. In our own country its effects upon our soldiers, in home camps and on the field, have been made sadly evident to the American people. The second sign of the coming of a new era on the alcohol question is that the truth against alcohol is out. Everything that its advocates can say in its favor is controverted by the strongest scientific authorities of the world, who pronounce it a poison—the genius of degeneracy. Nothing can hide this truth from the people and their children whose heritage it is. Vain are the efforts to make the clock of the world move backward. Its great pendulum swings to the rhythm of truth. In the fulness of time it strikes the death-knell of error, and when that time comes no man can turn the hand back on the dial. The third sign is that the per capita consumption of alcohol has begun to decline in this country, although its consumption is increasing in other nations. The New York Medical Record puts this during the last ten years at thirty per cent. Prior to that time there was a continual increase.

The only new feature introduced into temperance work in this country during the past ten years so generally as to touch all sections, and the only method of importance in which our temperance work differs from that of England, is temperance education in the schools.

The Holy Sabbath.

EFFORT on all sides is being made to banish the Lord's Day, or turn it into a scene of pleasure. When the Sabbath goes down, the republic goes down. Men who are not willing to obey God's law in regard to Sabbath observance, are not fit to govern themselves. Sabbath-breaking means dissoluteness, and dissoluteness is incompatible with self-government. What is the matter with republicanism in Italy and Spain? No Sabbath. For ages they wanted a republic in France. After a while they got a republic; but one day Napoleon III. with his cavalry rode through the streets, and down went the republic under the clattering hoofs. They have a republic there again; but who would be so bold as to prophesy its continuance for twenty years. France never will have a permanent republic until she quits her roystering Sabbaths, and devotes one day in every week to the recognition of God and sacred institutions. Abolish the Sabbath, and you abolish your religious privileges. Let the bad work go on, and you have "the commune," and you have "the revolution," and you have the sun of national prosperity going down in darkness and blood. From that reign of terror may the God of Lexington and Gettysburg deliver us!

Rumology.

ALL Canada discussing the temperance question, and all New York voting as to whether the city shall be open all the time for alcoholism to have full swing, and the nations of earth groaning under the burden of inebriacy, it may be pertinent to show that there has been, and is now, a handed and organized effort against the world's sobriety.

I think the original Liquor League was formed in the lower world. One day the bad spirits met together and resolved that our human race were too happy, and a delegation of four infernals was sent up to earth on embassy of mischief. One spirit said: "I will take charge of the vineyards!" Another said, "I will look after the grain fields!" Another said, "I will supervise the dairy!" Another said, "I will take charge of the music!" They landed in the Great Sahara Desert, clutched their skeleton fingers in a handshake of fidelity, kissed each other good bye with hp of blue flame, and separated for their mission.

The first spirit entered the vineyard one bright morning and sat down on the twisted root of a grape-vine in sheer discouragement. He could not at first plan any harm for the vineyard. The clusters were so full, and purple, and luscious, and pure. The air was fairly bewitched with their sweetness; health seemed to breathe from every ripened bunch. But in wrath at so much loveliness, the fiend grasped a cluster in his right hand, and squeezed it with utter hate, and lo! his hand was red with the liquid, and began to smoke. Then the fiend laughed, and said, as he looked at the crimson stream dripping from his hand, "That makes me think of the blood of broken hearts. I will strip the vineyard, and squeeze out all the clusters, and let juices stand till they rot, and will call the process 'fermentation.'" And a great vat was made, and men, seeing it, brought cups and pitchers and dipped them, and went off, drinking as they went, till they dropped in long lines of death; so that when the fiend of the vineyards wanted to go back to his home in the pit, he trod on the bodies of the slain all the way going down over a causeway of the dead.

The fiend of the grain-field waded chin-deep through the barley and the rye. As he came in, he found all the grain talking about bread, and prosperous husbandmen, and thrifty homes. But the fiend thrust his long arms through the barley and rye, and pulled them up and flung them into the water, and kindled fires beneath by a spark from his own heart, and there was a grinding, and a mashing, and a stench. And men dipped their bottles into the fiery juice, and staggered, and blasphemed, and rioted, and fought, and murdered, till the fiend of the grain-field was so well pleased with their behaviour, he changed his residence from the pit to a whiskey barrel; and there he sits by the doorway, at the bunghole, laughing right merrily at the fact that out of so harmless a thing as barley and rye he has made this world a suggestion of pandemonium.

The fiend of the dairy met the cows as they were coming up, full-uddered, from the pasture field. As the maid milked, he said, "It will not take me long to spoil that mess. I will add to it some brandy, and sugar, and nutmeg, and stir them up into a milk punch, and children will like it, and even temperance men will take it; and if I can do no more, I will make their heads ache, and hand them gradually over to the more vigorous fiends of the satanic delegation." And then he danced a breakdown on the shelf of the dairy till all the shining row of milk-pans quaked.

The fiend of music entered a grog-shop, and found the customers few. So he made circuit of the city, and gathered up all the instruments of sweet sound, and after the night had fallen, he marshalled a band, and trombone blew, and cymbals clapped, and harp thrummed, and drum beat, and bugle called, and crowds thronged in and listened, and, with wine cup in their right hand, began to whirl in a dance that grew wilder and stronger and rougher, till the room shook, and the glasses cracked, and the floor broke through, and the crowd dropped into hell.

They had done their work so well, these fiends of vineyard, and grain-field, and dairy, and concert saloon, that, on getting back, high carnival was held, Satan from his throne announcing the fact that there was no danger of the earth's redemption so long as the vineyards, and orchards, and grain-fields, and music paid such large tax to the diabolic. Then all the satyrs, and spirits, and demons cried "Hear! hear!" and, lifting their chalices of fire, drank "Long life to rum sellers! Prosperity to the gallows! Success to the license law!"

THE LIGHT of the HOUSE.

ALL that the Sun is to vegetation, Cheerfulness is to the Home. Without the Sun, no light, no color, no warmth, no growth; without Cheerfulness in the house, no pleasure, no courage, no hope, no happiness! We are all dwellers in the caves of our several temperaments, tastes and circumstances; but Cheerfulness is a presence of "good diffused" and exerts that elevating heaving force—the same as in the word heaven—which reaches down to the regions of the perennial.

Now we are by no means innocent, when we do harm to ourselves; and as Cheerfulness is the health of the Soul, we have a double duty concerning it; for it is the soul-health which gives the sweetest, keenest relish, even to the very smallest events of life. Life is an incessant conquest; and we must have the courage to be Cheerful.

What is Cheerfulness? It is that frame of mind which meets all emergencies without a whimper; rallies after every blow; and rises to every occasion. Cheerfulness is a general strength; it can bear weight, it can support the weak, and at its best it is a form of magnanimity. It never ignores the troubles of life, nor turns its back upon them. It owns them, it meets them, and it conquers them; yes, and it teaches others to do the same.

A sullen, morbid temper is its opposite—a temper in which men and women lead grey, sombre lives, with no gleam of sunshine to light their daily fog. But no one has any necessity to lead such a life. Everything can be learnt, even Cheerfulness; and a habit of Cheerfulness ought to be cultivated, if for no higher reason than because "Cheerfulness carries the day." Certainly in some it is a partly natural attribute, but in the largest number of men and women, it is a noble effort, confirmed by habit into nature; for no proverb is more truthful than that one which asserts "habit is second nature." For this reason the most cheerful people are often conscious of making an effort; conscious, because of the moments of reaction which follow this effort. If it were not so, there would not be so many rules for the cultivation of Cheerfulness. In fact, it is one of the last graces that some really good and great minds learn.

For it is precisely such minds which are apt to muse on their own short-comings, and the misery and want around them, until they are ready to fall into poor John Bunyan's case, and feel "as if the sun that shineth in the heavens did grudge to give light, and as if the stones in the streets, and the tiles upon the houses did bend themselves against them." Yet this condition is the very reverse of that Spiritual Cheerfulness, which comes from a serious discipline of the will, founded on faith—a discipline which does not ignore the evils of life, but sees beyond them the "hope of Israel," which makes the Bible one long exhortation to "look forward with rejoicing," counting the sins and evils felt so vividly, as not worthy to be compared with "the glory that should be revealed." The want of this Spiritual Cheerfulness is generally the result of powers not well balanced. In one direction or another, there is an excess; and wherever there is excess there is defect of some kind.

The first indisputable ally of Cheerfulness is Courage. No Cheerfulness without Courage! In order to be really cheerful, we must have no bugbears at our rear; no person, no event, that we can not bravely turn upon. In like manner, we must be able to look the present and the future squarely in the face. A fearful soul cannot be a cheerful soul; and with brooding, Cheerfulness has nothing to do.

If we would be Cheerful, we must be busy; we must have some real Work in hand. Who is more morbid and melancholy than the man who has made money, and then retired to some lovely spot to enjoy it? He is too old to change all his ways, habits and prepossessions; he has no special aim in life; he finds his leisure tedious beyond expression; his rest a very weariness; he is bored to death with his prosperity, and wishes himself back at his desk, a hundred times each day. For when the sole purpose of life is to get rid of time, who can be Cheerful?

Cheerfulness has no secrets and no mysteries. It is kin to the daylight, and it lives in the daylight. What an illumination a Cheerful person brings into a depressed, gloomy room! They enter, and immediately the atmosphere is cleared and changed. They inspire it with their own element. The stagnant brood of men sitting there, and feeding on themselves, are invigorated, strengthened and warmed by their mere presence. Such a person must be loved and welcomed by his fellows. For he is a moral tonic; and to every one, a general benefactor. Thus the mere contact of a Cheerful life is a beneficial contagion. In fact, it is the highest glory of Cheerfulness, that it is infectious; that it does others good, and is not simply a personal grace and attribute. For this reason, women have the highest charge concerning it. It is positively wicked in a woman, on whom the happiness of so many depends, not to be by habit if not naturally so—a Cheerful wife, and mother, and mistress, and friend. She is mainly occupied with present details, a favorable circumstance for the cultivation of Cheerfulness, and it is her Gospel to scatter cheerful looks and words to all who must, in a great measure, take life from her hands—to change by this wonderful alchemy:

Every weed into a flower;
Turn each thistle to a vine;
Make the bramble eglantine.

There is a mood which some thoughtless people might call Cheerfulness, and which is in reality depressing and exacting to the last degree—a mood called "jollity," a mood as nearly allied to ill-temper as possible. Who is more exasperating than a person who will giggle and simper with or without reason. Cheerfulness always parading itself in laughter and song, and noisy talk, is cheerfulness of the wrong kind. It is a poor, thin quality of no account in the real work of life. It is also apt to be of the same selfish kind, as the Miller of Dee praised and practised:

I care for nobody,
And nobody cares for me.

Who would care for a jaunty, easy hilarity with a cold, hard, selfish heart behind it?

Fellow travelers on the same road, let us help one another all we can; for when we arrive at home, there is not a smile that we have given that shall lose its reward. Who has not felt the sunshine on the face, mingling with the glow yet summer from within, to be the earthly reflex of the sensible presence of God and the clear shining of his countenance on our lives? For Cheerfulness is one of those "beauties of Holiness," not given us for mere adornment, but wrought into our being for the blessings of ourselves and of all with whom we come in contact.

Have we this Cheerfulness which God loveth? If so, we are happy. If we have not yet compassed it—if it is alien to our natures and moods, and circumstances, still the word is—Be Cheerful! Be Cheerful! and again, Be Cheerful! striving for the victory, even unto the end, for they who die fighting have not failed.

BRIEF NOTES.

There are now considerably over 4,000 Christian Endeavor Societies in Great Britain.

The Sultan has issued instructions that in future no land in Palestine shall be sold to a Jew even though he may be a native of the Turkish empire.

The Pope's collection of regalia and jewels is said to be the most valuable collection owned by any one man. It is worth ten million dollars. It includes eight golden tiaras studded with jewels.

A missionary, who sailed recently for his sphere of labor in China, writes home that, to his surprise, he found no less than fifty-seven of the passengers were going out as missionaries.

Mr. Caleb T. Rowe has just resigned the office of general agent of the American Bible Society. During his term of office, the number of volumes of the Scriptures issued from the Bible House exceed forty-two millions.

It is quoted, as proof of Ireland's prosperity, that the output of whiskey last year was 14,547,76 gallons, or three and a half million gallons more than the output of 1888. It is a somewhat dubious proof of prosperity.

Successful revival services have been held at Caledonia, N. Y., by Evangelist E. E. Davison, of Newton, Mass. There was a large attendance throughout and 113 persons were in the inquirers' meetings.

Dr. Leon Bouland, the converted Roman Catholic priest, has offered himself for missionary work in Cuba. His experience in the Romish Church qualifies him for the work of opening the eyes of the people to the errors of that church.

Korean Christians hang out a white flag from their houses on the Lord's Day. A contemporary suggests that the same practise would be good in this country. At present it is not always easy to know from ordinary indications whether a family is or is not a Christian family.

At a supper, recently given in London, to men who earn their living by walking the street with a board before and behind them, on which posters are pasted, and who are known as "sandwich-men," it was found that seven of them had once been clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

A child, ten years old, who was brought into court in New York as a witness recently, in answer to questions, said she had never seen nor heard of a Bible; had never heard of God, and did not know the meaning of the reference to him; did not suppose she had a soul, and expected when she died that she would go to the cemetery. Yet she was born in New York and had lived here all her life.

Missionaries of the American Board, some of them returning to their spheres of labor in Armenia, and others newly going out to that country, failed to secure passports from the Turkish government. After waiting vainly for them, they proceeded without them, under the escort of a representative of the United States legation. This is the first time that missionaries of the Board have been refused passports.

THE FRENCH IN TUNIS.

A RECENT visit of the French Secretary of the Navy to Tunis has evoked an expression of cordial good-will from that government, which is in some slight degree a balm for the irritation France feels at the continued presence of England in Egypt. Tunis is practically a dependency of France, although the Bey is still its nominal ruler. Since 1881, a French Resident has controlled the affairs of Tunis, has collected the taxes and customs, and has regulated all affairs. He pays the Bey a stipulated income, sufficient to maintain his dignity, and supports the establishments of the princes. That this arrangement is satisfactory to the Bey is apparent from the cordiality of the reception of the French Minister. An escort met him at the dock and conducted him to the Bey's palace, where he was received with the utmost respect. The Bey expressed his gratification at the visit, and his satisfaction at the recognition by all the powers of "the union" of France and Tunis. The minister in responding, observed that the obligation was mutual, for while France developed the resources of Tunis and was introducing European civilization, Tunis protected French interests on the Mediterranean, and was aiding in the completion of the system of defence of the French African possessions. The minister was subsequently entertained at an elaborate banquet, at which similar compliments and good wishes were expressed. It is much to be wished, in the interests of the people of Tunis, that the union might do more than promote material prosperity. There would be more hope of the permanent welfare of the people if the European civilization, of which the minister spoke, included the principles of the Christian religion. The wise king's declaration is as true now as when he uttered it:

Righteousness exalteth a nation (Prov. 14:34).

Expensive Excavation.

To a reporter of a New York newspaper, a builder recently gave his reasons for the unusual length of time which had been spent on the excavation of the foundation of a new office building. It is to be one of those lofty structures which are known as "sky-scrapers" and the reporter looking down into the cavity which had been dug before a stone was laid, asked the builder if he intended having half the building underground. His reply was that he was going down to bed-rock for his foundation. It would have been a much cheaper process to have driven piles and laid the foundation upon them, but there was always a possibility of the sand shifting and the piles rotting, which would make the building insecure. He had, therefore, at an immense cost, sunk his excavation sixty feet, at which point bed-rock had been reached. It was true that the cost of erecting the building had been increased by that system, but its safety had been assured. It would be well if in character-building the same system were adopted. We should then be spared some of the terrible scandals that occasionally shock society:

Whosoever heareth my sayings and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like: he is like a man who built a house and digged deep and laid the foundation on a rock (Luke 6:47).

An American Idolater.

An extraordinary complaint was received last week by the Police of Reading, Pa. On Thursday morning a man rushed into the office of the Detective Department, and begged the chief to find his property, of which he had been robbed. He said that it was his gods that had been stolen, and he would not lose them for any amount of money. An officer went with him to see the place from which they had been taken. The excited man took him to an upper room in a rear building, which was reached by a ladder. It was partly filled with images in stone, wood and plaster-of-paris, many of them beautifully carved and fashioned. They showed considerable skill, and the man, who is an expert mason, declared that they were all his own work. Every one had the name of a prophet, or an apostle, and the largest of all, the maker said, was an image of the Supreme Being. He called the room in which they were kept, heaven, and the neighbors say that he is accustomed to go there, at regular intervals, to worship. When he reaches the room, he draws the ladder up, so as to be undisturbed. He had been absent for two days, and when he returned he missed several of the images, which he is sure have been stolen. The police have learned that he incurred heavy losses some years ago in some building operations, and have no doubt that brooding over them has unsettled his mind. They are evidently right in treating him as insane, but it would not be safe to carry the principle too far. There are not many who call their gods their property; but if all were counted insane who make their property their god, there would not be enough lunatic asylums to hold them. It is still necessary, as it was in the Apostle's time, to remind men who are absorbed in the race for wealth, of the Biblical definition for covetousness.

Covetousness, which is idolatry (Col. 3:5).

RECEPTION OF THE FRENCH MINISTER OF MARINE BY THE BEY OF TUNIS.

A Document Worth a Fortune.

An advertisement has been appearing in the journals of New York, for a document which has been missing for fourteen years. The advertisers are heirs of a widow, who died in 1884. She had confided the management of the estate bequeathed to her by her husband, to a prominent business man in the city. Some questions arose as to his keeping his business as trustee distinct from his personal business. The widow was satisfied as to his fidelity, but in order to satisfy her children and friends, she took a bond, or unrecorded judgment, for two hundred thousand dollars as security. The trustee is now dead, as well as the widow; and the children of the widow are convinced that a large sum is due them from the trustee's estate. But the document which would give them power to enforce a settlement, is missing. Whether the widow destroyed it, or put it in some unknown place for safe keeping, does not appear. The family are naturally anxious to find it, but hitherto their advertisements have failed to elicit a clue to its whereabouts. We can imagine with what delight the family would seize and use the document if it could be found. They would not neglect it, or ignore it as people often do the word of God, which contains directions by which they can obtain eternal riches.

The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver (Ps. 119:72).

Saved the Child.

A writer in Harper's Bazar who was recently visiting a hospital in Auburn, N. Y., describes a significant sight which he witnessed during his stay. A man, accompanied by a well-dressed lady, entered the hospital carrying a child who had been badly burned. The doctors examined its injuries and dressed them. It was then necessary to enter the particulars on the hospital books. It was then found that the man did not know the lady who was with him, and neither knew the child they had brought to the hospital. The lady said that as she passed a house a child ran out with its clothes on fire. She seized a blanket that was hanging on a clothes-line nearby and rolled the child in it to extinguish the flames. Knowing that prompt medical assistance was essential in such cases, she hurried on board a passing car with the child in her arms. When the car reached the neighborhood of the hospital, which was three blocks off, one of the passengers volunteered his services to carry the child from the car to the hospital, and the lady gladly accepted his offer. They were rewarded for their efforts by learning from the surgeons that the child will recover. The people at the hospital seemed surprised that these persons should take so much trouble for a child who was an utter stranger to them, but they were only fulfilling the law of Christ which teaches us to recognize the claim of suffering even in a stranger.

The Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another and toward all men (I. Thess. 3:12).

A Forgotten Autograph.

An old gentleman in Maine has been confronted with an autograph which he made in clay more than sixty years ago, and had forgotten. In tearing down an old village church, which was to make way for a new edifice, one of the workmen noticed a brick bearing the name of his former employer, with the date 1836. It was written in a bold, free hand, and was clearly legible in characters an eighth of an inch deep, on the side of the brick. That evening he carried the brick to the house of the gentleman whose name it bore, but he said that as he was not born until after 1836, the signature could not be his, but he would show it to his father, whose name was the same as his own. Some days later he visited his father, who lived a few miles away, and showed him the brick. The old gentleman explained it at once. He remembered being at a brickyard under circumstances that made an indelible impression on his memory. He was a young man at the time, but he would never forget his visit. Recalling the circumstances, he could remember that while waiting impatiently for the coming of the friend who was to meet him, he wrote his name and the date with his cane on one of the soft bricks which were being laid in the sun to dry. It must have been baked in, and remained indelible all these years. It was to him simply an interesting memento of past times; but if it had been some sin or evil in his life that had thus come to light, what misery it would have brought him. Yet these things, too, are indelible, and will come to light unless through Christ they are pardoned. We are apt to forget that the evil we do is more permanent than we think.

Liberty's Electric Halo.

An electrical experiment conducted at Liberty Island, in the bay of New York, has corrected an error which has been held by electricians. It was supposed that the gigantic bronze statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," which rears its head on the island, absorbed the electricity of the surrounding air. A number of military officers assembled on the island one day recently to make some tests of military kites, which were conducted by William A. Eddy, the kite expert. After the tests had been made, Mr. Eddy proposed to find out just how much of the electricity of the air the statue absorbed. He attached to one of his kites, a collector, consisting of a cube of wood, covered with tinfoil, to which a thin copper wire was attached. He already knew that such a collector would bring down electricity from a height of six hundred feet. An iron rod was driven into the ground, and the end of the wire was kept about a foot away. To the electrician's surprise, a spark sprang from the wire to the iron rod, when the collector had attained an altitude of four hundred feet. As it rose higher and was near the head of the statue the sparks increased. The collector was then sent up at a distance of five hundred feet from the statue, but no sparks appeared until it had risen to the usual height of six hundred feet. This proved conclusively that if the statute absorbs electricity, as was believed, it gives it out again. It should be so with the grace that a Christian receives. Every one around him should be the better for the spirit that animates his life. Christ's injunction to his disciples applies to all his followers:

Freely ye have received: freely give (Matt. 10:8).

Anecdotes by Moody

Illustrations and Incidents in the Life of the World's Greatest Evangelist.

THERE was a Wesleyan preacher in England, Peter Mackenzie, full of native humor, a most godly man. He was once preaching from the text: "And they sang a new song," and he said:

"Yes, there will be singing in heaven, and when I get there I will want to have David with his harp, and Paul, and Peter, and other saints gather around for a sing. And I will announce a hymn from the Wesleyan Hymnal. 'Let us sing hymn No. 749—'

My God, my Father, while I stray—

"But some one will say, 'That won't do. You are in heaven, Peter; there's no straying here.' And I will say, 'Yes, that's so. Let us sing No. 651—'

Though waves and storms go o'er my head,
Though friends be gone and hopes be dead—

"But another saint will interrupt, 'Peter, you forget you are in heaven now; there are no storms here.' 'Well, I will try again: No. 536—'

Into a world of ruffians sent—

"'Peter! Peter!' some one will say, 'we will put you out unless you stop giving out inappropriate hymns.' I will ask, 'What can we sing?' And they will say:

"'Sing the new song, the song of Moses and the Lamb.'"

Nothing to Hold on To.

It was related of an atheist who was dying that he appeared very uncomfortable, very unhappy, and frightened. Another atheist who stood at his bedside said to him:

"Don't be afraid. Hold on, man, hold on to the last."

The dying man said: "That is what I want to do, but tell me what to hold on to."

Not At All Absurd.

A man said to me some time ago, "Moody, the doctrine you preach is most absurd: you preach that men have only to believe to change the whole course of their life. A man will not change his course by simply believing."

I said: "I think I can make you believe that in less than two minutes."

"No, you can't," he said; "I'll never believe it."

I said: "Let us make sure that we understand each other. You say a man is not affected by what he believes, it will not change his course?"

"I do."

"Supposing," I said, "a man should put his head in at that door and say the house was on fire, what would you do? You would get out by the window if you believed it, wouldn't you?"

"Oh," he replied, "I didn't think of that!"

"No," I said quietly, "I guess you didn't."

Belief is the foundation of all society, of commerce, and of everything else.

Not Too Great for Cæsar.

It is said that on one occasion when Cæsar gave a very valuable present, the receiver replied that it was too costly a gift. The Conqueror answered, that it was not too great for Cæsar to give.

Our God is a great King, and he delights to give gifts to us; so let us delight to ask him for great things.

A Good Samaritan.

I remember the first good Samaritan I ever saw. I had been in this world only three or four years when my father died a bankrupt, and the creditors came and swept away about everything we had. My widow mother had a cow and a few things, and it was a hard struggle to keep the wolf from the door. My brother went to Greenfield, and secured work in a store for his board, and went to school. It was so lonely there that he wanted me to get a place so as to be with him, but I didn't want to leave home. One cold day in November my brother came home and said he had a place for me. I said that I wouldn't go, but after it was talked over they decided I should go. I didn't want my brothers to know that I hadn't the courage to go, but that night was a long one.

The next morning we started. We went up on the hill and had a last sight of the old house. We sat down there and cried. I thought that would be the last time I should ever see that old home. I cried all the way down to Greenfield. There my brother introduced me to an old man who was so old he couldn't milk his cows and do the chores, so I was to do his errands, milk his cows, and go to school. I looked at the old man and saw he was cross. I took a good look at the wife, and thought she was crosser than the old man. I stayed there an hour, and it seemed like a week. I went around then to my brother and said:

"I am going home."

"What are you going home for?"

"I am homesick," I said.

"Oh well, you will get over it in a few days."

"I never will," I said. "I don't want to."

He said, "You will get lost if you start for home now; it is getting dark."

I was frightened then, as I was only about ten years old, and I said, "I will go at daybreak to-morrow morning."

He took me to a shop window, where they had some jackknives and other things, and tried to divert my mind. What did I care for those old jackknives? I wanted to get back home to my mother and brothers; it seemed as if my heart was breaking.

All at once my brother said, "Dwight, there comes a man that will give you a cent."

"How do you know he will?" I asked.

"Oh! he gives every new boy that comes to town a cent."

I brushed away the tears, for I wouldn't have him see me crying, and I got right in the middle of the sidewalk, where he couldn't help but see me, and kept my eyes right upon him. I remember how that old man looked as he came tottering down the sidewalk. Oh, such a bright, cheerful, sunny face he had! When he came opposite to where I was he stopped, took my hat off, put his hand on my head, and said to my brother:

"This is a new boy in town, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir, he is; just came to-day."

I watched to see if he would put his hand into his pocket. I was thinking of that cent. He began to talk to me so kindly that I forgot all about it. He told me that God had an only Son, and he sent him down here, and wicked men killed him, and he said he died for me. He only talked five minutes, but he took me captive. After he had given me this little talk, he put his hand in his pocket and took out a brand new cent, a copper that looked just like gold. He gave me that; I thought it was gold, and didn't I hold it tight! I never felt so rich before or since. That cent has cost me a great many dollars. I have never walked up the streets of this country or the old country but down into my pocket goes my hand, and I take out some money and give it to every forlorn, miserable child I see. I think how the old man lifted a load from me, and I wanted to lift a load from some one else.

Do you want to be like Christ? Go and find some one who has fallen, and get your arm under him, and lift him up toward heaven. The Lord will bless you in the very act. May God help us to go and do like the good Samaritan!

A GROUP OF JOURNALISTS WHO SERVED ON CUBAN BATTLEFIELDS.

At this time, when the heroes of our army and navy are receiving their meed of praise, the gallant band of journalists, who risked death on the battle-fields of Cuba, should not be overlooked. Our photograph shows a few of these brave fellows, but there are others who deserve equal recognition. Creelman, who led up the hillside at El Caney, and who was sorely wounded; Marshall, who faced the Spanish fire at Quasimas, and fell wounded there, Peltz, Johnston, Scovel, Quigley, Bryson Lewis Rea—all deserve to be remembered. Hardly a member of the correspondents' corps wholly escaped both fever and bullets. They were not in the field as combatants, and had nothing to do with the fighting, yet their vocation of searching out and forwarding the news involved the facing of constant peril while the war lasted.

MISS WILLARD'S SUCCESSOR.

New Officers of the W. C. T. U. Chosen at the St. Paul Convention.

AT the national convention of the W. C. T. U., held in St. Paul lately, there was a large attendance of delegates from the various States of the Union. New national officers were chosen. Miss Lillian M. N. Stevens, who was vice-president-at-large during the late Miss Frances E. Willard's last term of office, and who became acting-president after Miss Willard's death, was elected president.

MRS. LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS.
The New President of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Stevens was born in Dover, Me., and has always made her home in the Pine Tree State. Her first public work was as a school teacher, but at the age of twenty-one she married Mr. Stevens, a leading business man of Portland. One daughter, now Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, blessed their home. When the Maine Christian Temperance Union was organized about twenty-five years ago, Mrs. Stevens was elected treasurer, which position she filled for three years. She was then made State president, and for twenty-two years was re-elected to the position, and in all that time but one ballot was cast for another candidate. From 1880 to 1893 she filled the position of assistant recording secretary, and in the latter year was elected recording secretary. No woman in the organization is more loyal to its fundamental principles; none possesses in greater degree the universal confidence of its supporters. As a presiding officer she has few equals. To her experience of twenty-two years as State president is added the native executive ability which fits her admirably for her high position. Of profound wisdom, Mrs. Stevens holds the respect and love of the organization at whose head she is placed. She is a born leader, and where she leads her women will gladly follow.

Miss Anna Adams Gordon, who was elected vice-president-at-large, is a Bostonian, and was a student at the famous Mount Holyoke College. Her literary work is considerable, including "Marching Songs," the Song Book of "Y's," etc. During her travels she has spoken to the children in schools and conventions in all parts of America and England. The Willard Fountain, of which she is the projector, was erected by dimes contributed by children all over the world. In the World's Fair city it is seen at the entrance to Willard Hall. Miss Gordon was the Private Secretary of Miss Willard at the time of the latter's death.

Our Convalescent Soldiers.

The Women's National War Relief Association finds abundant work to do. Nearly 3,000 invalid soldiers have been received at Camp Walworth and many convalescents entertained at Woody-Crest, Miss Gould's country home for children, which she placed at the disposition of the Association. At Camp Jewett (THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Children's Home), many sick soldiers have recovered health and strength. Accommodations, providing for fifty guests, have been greatly taxed at times. Mrs. G. H. Crawford, of Nyack, has greatly helped Miss Gould and the Association in this patriotic work.

This issue of "The Christian Herald," like the one immediately preceding it, consists of ONE MILLION Copies which are sent out to as many Christian homes, as a personal invitation to subscribe. The weight of this edition is 300,000 pounds.

The good Samaritan. S. LUKE 10. The good Samaritan.

25 ¶ And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?
26 He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou?
27 And he answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.
28 And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

"A certain Samaritan . . . saw him."—Luke x. 33.

29 But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?
30 And Jesus answering, said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.
31 And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.
32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.
33 But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him,
34 And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn,

The Greatest and Most Profusely Illustrated Book of Travel of the Present Day—Large Type and Large Pages.

THE author of Around the World with Eyes Wide Open, has been exceedingly happy in the choice of a title. This beautifully illustrated book brings us, as it were, face to face with all that a bright, intelligent man, gifted with exceptional powers of observation and supplied with abundant means, found worth seeing, worth photographing and worth recording in a journey covering over 20,000 miles, and taking in both the Old World and the New, under circumstances more favorable than usually fall to the lot of even exceptionally favored travelers.

Dr. Tupper, in the preparation of this superb work, has exercised remarkable skill, both from a literary and an artistic standpoint. Vivid and graphic in style, simple but choice in language, exceedingly rich and profuse in illustration, he has produced a volume which will bring joy to the heart of every member of the family and contribute instructive entertainment all the year round. Never was a more attractive book on travel given to the world even at ten times the price. In its pages we find the world as it is to-day, pictorialized and described, with all the quaint customs in vogue in countries strange and distant; the costumes worn in the Orient and in the Occident; the various modes of travel in operation the world over; and a thousand and one things that will interest, amuse and instruct old and young, rich and poor. No book like it was ever issued, and none on the book-shelves of the present day are capable of affording more infinite and more varied entertainment than Dr. H. Allen Tupper's most remarkable work, Around the World with Eyes Wide Open.

CHAPTER 1.

IN the [a]beginning [b]God created the heaven and the earth.
2 And the earth was [c]waste and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep: [d]and the spirit of God [1]moved upon the face of the waters.
3 [e]And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.
4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness.
5 And God called the light [f]Day, and the darkness he called Night. And there was evening and there was morning, one day.
6 ¶And God said, [g]Let there be a [2]firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.
7 And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were [h]above the firmament: and it was so.
8 And God called the firmament Heaven. And there was evening and there was morning, a second day.
9 ¶And God said, [i]Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.
10 And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good.
11 And God said, [j]Let the earth put forth grass, herb yielding seed, and fruit tree bearing fruit [k]after its kind, wherein is the seed thereof, upon the earth: and it was so.
12 And the earth brought forth grass, herb yielding seed after its kind, and tree bearing fruit, wherein is the seed thereof, after its kind: and God saw that it was good.
13 And there was evening and there was morning, a third day.
14 ¶And God said, [l]Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years:

MRS. Harriet Prescott Spofford has given to the world under the title of "Stepping-Stones to Happiness" a magnificent volume which tens of thousands will hail with sincere delight.

If you are Seeking Happiness, and have Not Yet Found It, get Mrs. Spofford's book and read it carefully—read every word—and you will be surprised how helpful it will prove to you in successfully prosecuting your search. You may be near it now; indeed, Happiness may be at your very side, and yet, without the priceless assistance which this remarkable book offers, you may unwittingly turn from it and reach out in another direction, only to meet with disappointment and chagrin. Mrs. Spofford has made this subject a matter of Life-long Study, and with graceful pen she tells for the benefit of others where Happiness may be found, and how life may be filled with love and sweetness and made one grand, endless song of rejoicing.

* * * *

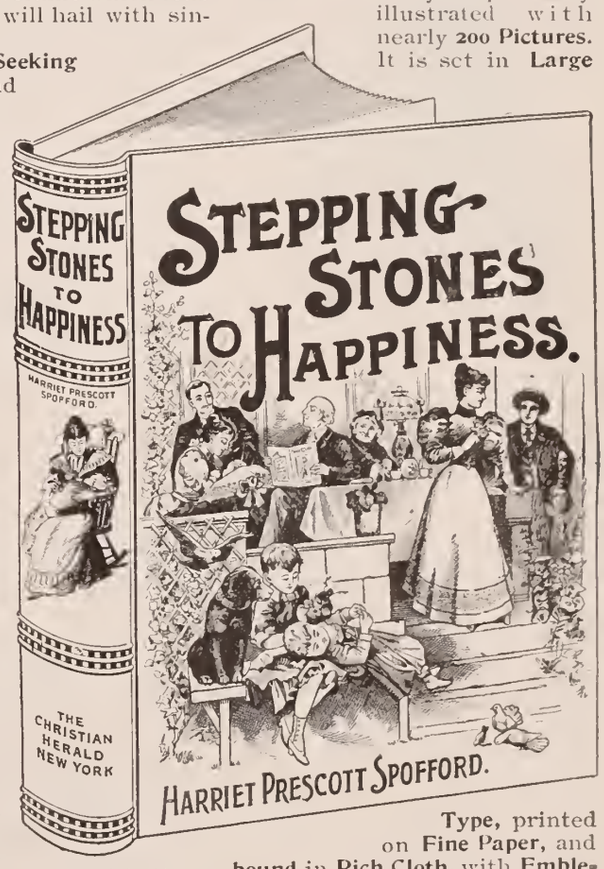
Mrs. Spofford is one of America's Greatest Authors. She has a heart that beats in Generous Sympathy with all that is good, and pure, and noble, and true; and "Stepping-Stones to Happiness" is unquestionably one of her Brightest productions. It is one of the few books that prove equally acceptable to husband and wife, parent and child; and every life brought under its benign influence will be the Richer, the better, the Brighter, the sunnier, and the Sweeter. By all means get this most excellent book, and read it aloud when all the household is gathered around the evening lamp.

* * * *

The topics treated in "Stepping-Stones to Happiness" are of surpassing interest to every one in earnest quest of that inestimable jewel. While Wealth may, in a large measure, Contribute to Happiness, fortunately, it is Not an Essential condition, and the Poorest of the poor may, with the aid of such a faithful guide as Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's great book, Attain to a larger measure of Happiness than many a wealthy person may be able to achieve without it.

* * * *

"Stepping-Stones to Happiness" is beautifully and profusely illustrated with nearly 200 Pictures. It is set in Large Type, printed on Fine Paper, and bound in Rich Cloth, with Emblematic decoration. It is printed from new electro-plates, and makes a book of 496 large pages. It weighs Three Pounds, and is Brimful of Excellent Material. Sent, all charges prepaid, together with The Christian Herald for one year—52 Times—for only Two Dollars. Money refunded if not entirely satisfactory.



* * * *

"Stepping-Stones to Happiness" is as ornamental as it is useful, and a more Appropriate, a more Acceptable, and in every sense of the word, a more Satisfactory Holiday Gift, will be sought for in vain on the book-shelves and in the book-stores this year. There is great advantage in securing a book like this, which diffuses its beneficent influence throughout the year, and sheds its lustre and radiance upon the hearts and lives of all the members of the family circle—a book that continually pays a Princely interest on the investment, by contributing largely to a much more abundant measure of genuine and enduring Happiness.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

A NOTABLE MOTHERS' MEETING.

New York Ladies Welcome the President of the Mothers' Congress.

MRS. PHEBE A. HEARST.

OUR readers will welcome some account of what was said and done at the recent reception given by the New York City Mothers' Club to Mrs. Theodore Birney, of Washington, D. C., President of the National Congress of Mothers, and Mrs. D. O. Mears, of Albany, President of the New York State Assembly of Mothers. Several interesting addresses were made.

Mrs. Birney spoke of the marvelous progress made by this "mother movement" since the first National Congress was talked over and planned about two years ago by a few earnest women in the home of Mrs. Hearst, the millionaire Vice-President of the organization, whose generosity has so liberally aided the work. "It is particularly gathering force in the West," said Mrs. Birney, "the large attendance at the recent Mothers' Congress in Omaha giving evidence of its strength in that section. We are glad to see, too, that men are beginning to take great interest in the work; and it is only a question of time when the name of the organization will be Parents' Congress—as it should be, for mothers cannot do their best for the children without the co-operation of the fathers. Mothers are eager to find out what is best to do for their children, and value opportunities for conference, mutual help and co-operation." The formation of clubs in places where they do not now exist was urged, and the importance of keeping in touch with the national centre. It was said that the erection of Children's Palaces (modeled on the one at the World's Fair), in all cities is under consideration.

Mrs. Mears said the world owed the greatness of its great men to the goodness and wisdom of their mothers; this mother movement purposed to place the wisdom, goodness and experience of all mothers at the service of each.

The President of the Philadelphia Auxiliary declared that while solicitude for her own little brood had drawn her into the movement, a larger motive now actuated her—interest in the welfare of all children. Over worked mothers, mothers of the slums, should have the best information, advice and help within such easy reach as the ideal Mothers' Club would bring it. She prophesied that as this mother spirit moved the world more and more, childless homes would open to homeless children until every little child in this world would be mothered. Mrs. Bailey, Secretary of the State Assembly, a sweet-faced, white-haired lady, said "Mothers are hungry to know what is best to do for their children. And grandmothers—like myself—are hungry to know what to do for their grand-children." Mrs. Rebecca Kohut, head of the Jewish Council of Women, and other women prominent in the movement, spoke of the good Mothers' Clubs are accomplishing; and then the formal meeting dissolved into little groups about the rooms and around the pretty table, set forth with simple, appetizing dainties—an ideal temperance table. As the ladies sipped their chocolate and discussed the best things for babies, one was forced to compare to its advantage the worthy purpose of such a social gathering with the idle, useless and mischievous one of the progressive eucher party. A better day dawns for the world when mothers are turning their social pastimes to such good account; there will be brighter promise still when fathers join their ranks.

The ladies expressed appreciation of the interest THE CHRISTIAN HERALD had shown in this movement. "Don't you want the pictures of our babies for the paper?" they asked. "In some quarters criticism has been made that the Congress is composed of childless women. We are mothers and grandmothers—and kindergartners and teachers, each of whom mothers hundreds of children."

MRS. BIRNEY, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL CONGRESS OF MOTHERS—THE "MOTHERS' TABLE."

Going to Sunday School.

On Sunday morning early,
The air is bright and cool;
All clad in our best graces,
With rosy morning faces
We go to Sunday School.
Here learn we how to brighten
The heaviest lot and lighten
The day most dark and dule.

A Dutch Wedding

A wedding in Holland is a solemn business. The service, which lasts two hours, is far from lively. The bridegroom and bride, in regulation wedding garments, sit in front of the black robed minister and listen to his address, which "bristles with personalities." Relatives sit sobbing in pews, and finally everybody connected with the bride kisses her as mournfully as if for the last time. Then comes the "tremendous breakfast in French fashion." It is good form for all the bride's friends to send her baskets or bouquets of white flowers, plentifully ribboned, and the house often presents quite a bower-like appearance. Nevertheless, the wedding breakfast is a serious matter. Numberless kinfolks are present, and almost all of them make speeches, as a matter of family duty. In Holland, the family duty is paramount to everything.

Naming Persian Girls.

Persian girl babies are given very pretty names. In one family, perhaps, one will find Aktar, the star; Gulshan, lilies: Wobahar, the spring; Shamsi, the sun; Shireen, sweet; Almas, diamond. Yet little girls are not wanted. There is mourning in a house when a girl is born, and an old Persian proverb says: "The household weeps forty days when a girl is born." There is an imposing ceremonial when a boy is named, but an old woman stoops and whispers in a wee maid's ear the name she is to go by. Her father does not look at her. Presently, when she can crawl to his feet, she may win him by her pretty baby ways. There are no kindergartens in Persia. As soon as she is six years old, the Persian girl's life of seclusion begins. She is taught embroidery, and perhaps to read the Koran. But there exists in the minds of many Persians the idea that it is immodest for a girl to know how to read.

Flowers for the King.

Margherita, Queen of Italy, like another royal lady, Her Majesty, of Holland, loves a garden and cultivates her own. Whether at Rome or at Monza, a part of every morning's programme is a walk through her garden and the gathering of a bouquet with her own hands for her husband's table. If the weather is bad she culls this offering to the king from her hothouses. Whether a woman be queen or peasant, she is beloved of the King of Kings, for whom she may tend the garden of her heart, and unto whom she may offer each morning a bouquet of grateful thoughts, and believing prayer.

The Child and the Chestnut Burrs.

The chestnuts closed their houses tight,
But Jack Frost opened them all last night.
I think, some time, I'll sit up and see
When he opens the burrs, if he won't show me.
For I've wondered so, and I wish I knew
Why he don't get pricked, as my fingers do.
And I can't see why, after all his fuss,
He leaves them here on the grass for us!

CHANGING PLACES.

"WHEN I am grown," said Ned,
"I'll give you a red silk gown,
A coat like queens in pictures wear,
And a beautiful golden crown."
And he gently stroked his mamma's cheek
With a hand as soft as down.

"But, O! mamma, if I don't get rich—
Whatever shall I do?
For then I can not buy the things
I want to give to you."
"You'll always give me," mamma said,
"That which is best and true.

"Love is better than royal robes,
Better than crowns of gold."
"Why, I can't give that," said little Ned,
"To you when I am old,
I'll be too big, you know, mamma.
"For you to kiss and hold."

She strained him closer to her breast,
Tears started to her eyes;
Ned's brows met in a thought perplexed.
Then looked he wondrous-wise.
"I guess when I'm big and old,
Why, you'll be undersize.

"And I can do the holding, then;
You'll sit upon my knee,
And I will call you pretty names.
Now, mamma, don't you see
That when I am a great big man,
My little girl you'll be?"

"When I am grown," insisted Ned,
"I'll give you a red silk gown,
A coat like queens in pictures wear,
And a beautiful golden crown."
And he gently stroked his mamma's cheek
With a hand as soft as down.

—GOODLOE HARPER.

THE HOME-MAKER.

WHO is the home-maker? Mother. Yes; and a few others or many others, just as the family is a large or small one. Every inmate—and also the boy or girl at a distance, who only writes letters back, and sends little gifts (a pressed flower, a bit of handiwork, maybe.)—helps to make the home atmosphere happy and healthful or the reverse. First, of course, there are father and mother. It goes without saying, that around the evening fireside, they will lay care aside as much as possible and smile and make merry for the children. Then, there are the sisters, big and little. Let them use their best accomplishments, wear their prettiest gowns, sing their prettiest songs, and contrive interesting games for their brothers' entertainment. And brothers—it is the easiest thing in the world for them to add to the home happiness. There are few fathers and mothers who are not gladdened by evidence that their boys love the home circle: and where is the sister who is not delighted to be her brother's comrade? And, fathers and brothers, remember: even as mothers and sisters create your ideal of womanhood, so do you create their ideal of manhood.

Children's Emotions.

A distinguished London physician, says that the very common defect of squinting in children has frequent origin in falls, frights, fits of anger, and other things which upset the nervous system. Many physicians are saying that hatred, fear, and all unlovely emotions tend to derange health, and to make a child physically less perfect and beautiful. There is therefore a positive saving of doctors' bills in training our children into habits of kindness, gentleness, fortitude and love. And, little folks, remember: the doctors are simply repeating in a new form the grandma's doctrine. "Pretty is as pretty does."

TRAINING THE ORPHANS.

How the Christian Herald Fund is Providing Homes and Christian Education in the Missionary Institutions for Orphan Children in India.

THE hearts of our readers will be gladdened by the picture on this page of a group of intelligent children who are being supported in India by the funds they contributed. They are the Famine orphans who were taken in and rescued from starvation at Ahmednagar by Rev. R. A. Hume. Their healthy appearance and bright, cheerful faces are in sharp contrast with the haggard, woebegone appearance they presented when Mr. Hume took compassion on them and admitted them to his station. "Sometimes, it has seemed possible," says Mr. Hume in his letter to Dr. Klopsch, acknowledging the receipt of the money from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphan Fund, "that we assumed too much responsibility in undertaking the care and support of so many of these children. But the only chance for them to become good men and women is in such care as a Christian missionary can give. So we have gone forward, hoping that in some way our Heavenly Father would provide the means. You can imagine with what gratitude, dear Dr. Klopsch, we received your letter telling us of the help we can rely upon from the fund contributed by the kindly readers of your splendid journal."

REV. R. WINSOR AND THE NATIVE TEACHERS OF HIS SCHOOLS.

Another American missionary in India who succored the orphan children during the recent famine, was the Rev. R. Winsor. His work is at Sirur in the Poona District, and is under the auspices of the American Board. He and his devoted wife have on their hands seventy-two orphan boys and girls. In a letter recently received from Mr. Winsor, expressing his gratitude for the assistance he is receiving in supporting his large family of orphans, from the fund contributed by our readers, he says that the opportunity for Christian work is greater now than he has ever known it during the twenty-eight years he has been in India. The magnificent generosity of Christian people in distant lands during India's time of trouble, has evidently made a deep impression on the natives, who now see Christianity in a new light of compassion and helpfulness. Unhappily, the straitness of the financial resources of the missionary societies precludes the missionaries from turning these opportunities to account to the fullest extent.

Mr. Winsor's interest in the children of India is no new development of his work. He has established eleven schools in as many villages in the neighborhood of Sirur, besides the great Industrial School of the Deccan, which was last year destroyed by fire. This institution has won the praise of many distinguished persons who have visited it. It is the outgrowth of a conviction which Mr. Winsor shares with those best acquainted with the social conditions of India, that no better service can be rendered to the rising generation of natives, next to that of giving them the religion of Christ, than that of giving them an industrial training. The attempt was first made in an humble way at Satara. The appreciation manifested by the native boys was so unmistakable that Mr. Winsor removed the school to Sirur, where the Government placed a commodious building at his disposal. It is this building, with its equipment of tools and apparatus, that was burned recently. The missionary work of many years was thus swept away. But he has had the gratification of rebuilding it, with the aid of friends. One native gentleman, who knew its value, himself gave five thousand rupees toward the expense.

FAMINE CHILDREN AT REV. R. A. HUME'S SCHOOL AT AHMEDNAGAR.

As the American Board has no funds available for the support of such an enterprise, its support entails a heavy burden on the missionary. Every year Mr. Winsor has to raise the equivalent of four hundred dollars for necessary expenses. When the famine struck his district, in the closing months of the year 1896, he foresaw new burdens. "The people," he writes, "had known us for years, and had been accustomed to come to us for help in their little difficulties. Now they flocked to us by hundreds. What could we do? We had no funds for the relief of such numbers. We were so distressed by the spectacle of the suffering which we could not remedy that it became a question whether we could remain to witness it. It was at this juncture, when we were in such despair, that we received the gift from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I have told you in former letters how we thanked God and took courage." It is the seventy-two orphans that he received during that sad period that now cause Mr. Winsor anxiety. He has accommodation for them and the means of educating them, but he lacks funds for their support. Mr. Winsor gratefully acknowledges the new help he is receiving from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund for this purpose, but more is needed, and Mr. Winsor has now come to this country in the hope of obtaining help. His address for a few weeks will be Oberlin, O. Any of our readers writing him can obtain all particulars.

From Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. Clough, of the Baptist Church; Dr. Forman, of the Presbyterian Church, and Dr. Wharton, of the Church of the Disciples, similar reports of need, come. The children have been received, have been fed and nursed back to health after their terrible suffering from starvation. They are beginning to learn the truths of the Gospel, and all appliances are in existence for giving them an education which will make them men and women of influence in the communities of India, capable of worthily representing the Christian cause. All that is lacking is the money to support them for a few years, while the devoted, consecrated missionaries who rescued them from famine are training them for Christ's service. The missionaries believe that when the Christian people of America know how grand is the opportunity, the funds will be provided in abundance, and so, after long years of waiting, the kingdom of Christ will come in India. It costs from $15 to $25 a year to support a child. If any of our readers would like to adopt a boy or a girl and undertake the maintenance of it, we should be glad to put them in communication with a missionary who would accept the charge.

A SONG OF PRAISE.

MY soul, beside the crystal sea,
Thy loving Saviour waits for thee:
Raise to him e'er in faith thine eye,
Praise him the Lord of earth and sky.
His life for us he did surrender,
Thus showing love for us most tender.
O stars above join in the chorus
That angels first re-echoed o'er us.

From strand to strand, the earth around,
Praise to our Saviour shall resound:
O may his love all spirits fill
With constant zeal to do his will.
And give swift feet that ne'er grow weary,
Tho' dark the way, and lone and dreary.
Let soul join soul in one grand chorus
Till Heaven's own harps re-echo o'er us.

BISHOP HARTZELL'S PLEA.

A Call to Christians to Help Evangelize and Educate Liberian Converts.

REV. Joseph C. Hartzell, the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Bishop of Africa, recently returned to the United States after a 40,000-mile journey in the Dark Continent, during which he visited Liberia, the Congo, Angola and Zambesia, and inspected the various phases of Methodist missionary work in those localities. Bishop Hartzell is especially encouraged by the spiritual progress made in the Liberian Republic, and speaks in glowing terms of the results of Gospel effort in that part of Africa. Believing that the time has come when a native mission press is indispensable to the future success of the work in Liberia, he has invited the readers of this journal, who have already done so much for the cause of Christ in Africa, to co-operate, with this object in view. Bishop Hartzell has prepared the following appeal, which we warmly commend to the earnest consideration of all who have the cause of heathen evangelization at heart.

REV. JOSEPH C. HARTZELL,
M. E. Missionary Bishop of Africa.

"In 1896, at the manifest call of God speaking through his church, my face was turned toward Africa, as the successor of Bishop William Taylor, whose advancing years made it necessary for him to retire from aggressive work. Before a great body of Christian ministers who had elected me to my work, after providing comfortably for him for the remainder of his life, the old hero gave me his unqualified benediction, and has followed me in prayer and sympathetic co-operation ever since.

"My first tour of Africa has now been made, and in a few weeks I return again to my field for a two-years' service in the midst of educational and missionary needs which it is impossible for words to express. In Angola, on the west coast, I made a tour of nearly a thousand miles by hammock, on bullock, and on foot, and found open doors everywhere. The same conditions exist in Portuguese East Africa, and in Rhodesia, on the east coast. There is great need of ministers and teachers, tools to outfit industrial schools, and money to employ native workers. The whole continent of Africa is entering upon a new era, and is not only waiting for the Gospel and its attendant blessings in home life and government, but millions are anxious to welcome those who come with its precious words.

"But my present word to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is for Liberia, the Republic lying on the west coast, just north of the equator, and the offspring of philanthropic and benevolent American Christian people, who eighty years ago began sending out colonists through colonization societies, and who believed that it was God's purpose that civilized Christian negroes, whose fathers were brought to America in slavery, were to be important factors in the spiritual redemption of Africa.

"Fifty-one years ago, the colonists were organized into a nation, received the recognition of other nations, and, from that time until now, have been bravely facing responsibilities of national life under most difficult and trying conditions.

"I have made two annual visitations, and traveled in the midst of those people. My heart has been deeply stirred as I witnessed their struggles to better their conditions in educational and Christian life. One mother brought to me her son, whom she wanted educated. I asked him what he could do to help himself, and whether he would do $25 worth of work during the year on the school building if the tools were furnished him. He said he would. Then I asked the mother what she would do to help her boy. She said she would send down from the interior $2.50 each month in palm oil or palm kernels, and my reply was that I would see that the balance of the $90 for the year was paid. And then we had prayer together, and the first words of the boy were, 'O! God, I am glad I am going to have a chance.' Then the mother followed, and her first sentence was, 'O! God, I bring you an offering. It is my boy. I give him to thee.' This is a specimen of how these people speaking the English language, are struggling in their poverty, not only to help themselves, but to get ready to help in all forward movements for the Christianization of the vast multitudes of barbarous heathen about them.

"The people of Liberia, especially those who are engaged in Christian work as ministers and teachers, feel the great need of a paper, published in the interest not only of the Republic, but especially of aggressive Christian work in their midst. Those people are far away from centres of Christian influences, and are scattered up and down the coast for nearly 400 miles. They need a medium not only of communication among themselves, but through which Christian men and women can help them in their homes, and in their Sunday School and church work, and build them up in Christian living and activity.

"This will not cost much—only a few thousand dollars. A young black man from the South, who has had years of experience at the head of a printing office, has consecrated his life to the work, and goes, trusting God for his support. The college of West Africa, situated at Monrovia, proposes to teach printing to the native born boys as one of its industries, so that, once outfitted, the expense of the enterprise will not be large.

"Here is an opportunity to aid this struggling and heroic people to help themselves in a most efficient way. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have already helped Africa, not only by prayers and faith, but with their gifts, and I present this case with confidence that many will be glad to assist.

J. C. HARTZELL."

To all who wish to have a share in this evangelizing and educational work among the natives of the West African Republic, Bishop Hartzell's letter affords a golden opportunity. He invites the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to join with him in this effort. All contributions for the Liberia Mission work sent to this journal will be duly acknowledged in these columns, and Bishop Hartzell also will acknowledge them by personal letter. Every contributor of one dollar and upward will be supplied for one year with the new Liberian Mission publication, as soon as it is issued.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Vinter Evening Pleasures—An Embarrassed Hostess—A Housekeeper's Duties, etc.

HERE they are again, the long winter evenings, when we gather around the lamp for home enjoyment, for sociability and for profitable study. Wise rents turn this part of the year to acunt in making home the pleasantest ace on earth for their growing boys and rls. There have been great men among who conned their books by the blaze pine knots, and whose childhood was cessarily filled with privation and hardip. But, though these men triumphed sheer personal force and strong will er many hindering circumstances, it is t well for those of us who can make the y easier for our dear ones to fail to do . Let us provide for the school children warm, well-lighted room where they y prepare their lessons in comfort, all e more successfully that father is sitting ar with his book, and mother is close with her mending basket.

The winter evenings give us a fine ance for being neighborly. That home ich does not open its friendly doors to quaintances and intimates, which does t sometimes entertain guests, is far m being as broad and as winsome as a me ought to be. Guests help to edute the children. They draw from us r best in conversation and in manners, well as in fare, and they are to be welmed and held in honor, though we ould never attempt to entertain in a y beyond our means. Simplicity and ostentation are always to go hand in nd with our gentle welcome.

A FRIEND writes that she recently gave party in honor of a young lady who is visiting her daughter. As the diningom was not large enough to accommote all the guests at once, at supper, she cided to serve her guests at separate bles, a first and a second, letting her sitor and her daughter go to the first. his was entirely right, and in accordce with the requirements of good form, t some of the company fancied themlves slighted, and refusing to wait for eir turn at the second table, were ofnded and went home. The hostess turally felt aggrieved and embarrassed, d feared she had made a mistake. On e contrary, she had fulfilled every contionality. It is a very ordinary thing r people at an evening company to be rved in successive relays, and while a rtion of the guests are having refreshents in one part of the house, the others e entertaining themselves agreeably th music, games or talk in another. It perhaps easier to serve a large comny from a table than to seat them ound it. If this course is adopted, ice as many persons can be seated ound a room, or in groups, as can have aces directly at the board. Then let pkins first be passed with plates, and t the viands follow each other in course, ginning with bouillon, or creamed oysrs, and delicate sandwiches, including you choose, a salad, and finishing with sert and coffee. My correspondent ay set her mind at rest, and if she is agnanimous she will overlook the rudeess of the young people who left her use in dudgeon.

AN invalid, my dear perplexed Matron, often better for having a light breakst in bed or in her room before she esses. Once you have fallen into the utine, you will not mind sending or takg to your fragile sister a cup of hot ffee, or of hot milk, and a bit of bread soon as she is awake. If she will take well-beaten egg in a glass of milk, or a p of bouillon at eleven o'clock in the orning, she will be tided over her usual intness then, and have a better appete for early dinner.

LAURA S. The duties of a visiting ousekeeper briefly stated are these: You early in the morning to the house which you are in charge, inspect the pantries, refrigerator, and kitchen; make up the list of articles required for the day, do the marketing, oversee the servants, make your daily or weekly report to the mistress of the house, audit and pay all bills. Where there is a large establishment this is no sinecure, and it demands strength, health and executive ability of a high order. Why not try to secure a position as matron in a school, or institution, or as care-taker of the linen closet in a hotel? These latter places seem to me more desirable for you than the situation of visiting housekeeper, which has some decided drawbacks.

YOU WISH to know, Fannie J., what are the duties of a secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association. A resident secretary in a town with which I am familiar, cares in a friendly, sisterly way, for three hundred young business women, saleswomen, operatives in factories, etc. She has a rest hour for them at noon, in a pleasant lunch room, to which they bring their own lunch, while tea and coffee are served to them at a very low price. She conducts Gospel meetings, presides over educational classes in the evenings, at which book-keeping, stenography, millinery and dressmaking are taught, and in every possible way she proves herself their comrade, and their thoughtful and loving counsellor. Her duties are many; they cannot all be told in a paragraph, and, before a young woman can be a successful secretary, she must have a period of training. Indeed, this is true of every vocation. One must be drilled before one can be a soldier. One must be a pupil before one can teach. An indispensable requisite in a secretary of the Y. W. C. A. is consecration to the Master, and personal magnetism of a high degree.

If your hands are rough, hard or chapped from the repeated washings necessary to keep them free from the office dirt, examine carefully the soap you use. If it is a cheap toilet soap you will find that it is greasy, acrid and irritating.

Ivory Soap makes a profuse lather that removes the dirt and rinses easily, leaving the skin soft and clean.

If your office force is large there are two considerations that will recommend Ivory Soap to you. It is quick in action, saving time, and is inexpensive.

Send the office boy for some and try it.

THE ALLUREMENTS OF SIN.*

"I FEEL persuaded that there is a lesson which the Master would teach us, that we have not thought of. Perhaps he would have us make our homes so attractive and so filled with the sunshine of love, that our daughters would consider home the brightest spot on earth, and that our sons would prefer the cheerful sitting-room to the billiard-hall, and the society of mother and sisters to that of the downtown rowdy. I said, 'perhaps.' My brethren, I am sure the Great Teacher has a lesson for us along these lines. Much I fear that our sons and daughters are going to destruction before our very eyes, and we know it not.

"Did you ever notice how brilliantly lighted the billiard-hall and saloon are kept by the cunning owner? Why doesn't he keep his rooms dark and cheerless? He knows that they would not attract customers if he did. The devil uses every means to allure the wary into his net. Music, with its seductive power; pictures, with their atmosphere of cheer; books, with the witching fascination which the most gifted writers have woven into their thrilling tales—nothing is considered too sacred and beautiful to use as an allurement whereby the young are led on and on away from the faith of integrity into the highway of ruin. Even sweet poetry is turned from its rightful use, which, as one has truthfully expressed it, should be only:

To make the souls of angels pure and white,
And fair and sinless as the angels be,
To keep the fires upon love's altar bright—
This be thy mission, O sweet poetry!

Turned, I say from its holy mission, and made to do the devil's errands.

"And shall we be less careful to use our best endeavors to draw the loved ones to Christ, by using every means in our power to this end?"

OUR WINTER BIRDS.†

The third week in October sees the last of the golden-crowned thrushes and Maryland yellow-throats, the fox sparrows pay a flying visit, and the red-breasted nuthatches settle down. Even if there has been no hard frost, November is sure to bring it, and then in the afterglow, the illusive Indian summer, we begin to realize that the song birds have left us. Grackles we have and meadowlarks, but the robins and bluebirds are diminishing, and after the middle of November the birds that you see may be safely called winter residents.

The blue jay becomes very conspicuous now, and in late November walks you will constantly see his pointed crest, while his harsh notes no longer jar upon your ear, but sound companionable. Most likely he is nutting, and jeering and laughing at the squirrels who are filling their paunches under the same tree.

Golden-crowned kinglets, with their dainty little heads on one side, peep into every crevice in the apple trees, giving a shrill, wiry call, the winter wrens are settled in their old quarters about the woodpile, the pine warblers come in bustling flocks, white-throated sparrows appear at rare intervals, and three, at least, of the woodpeckers.

If December is moderately snowy and not too cold, you will see a distinct change even among the winter residents. The horned larks become quite tame, and together with the meadowlarks keep near the upland farms, and if the rivers are free from ice the kingfisher still constitutes himself their guardian. The tree sparrow takes the place that the chipping sparrow filled in summer, resembling it both in appearance and note, and the cedar birds come from their warm coverts and feast upon the remaining berries which are now completely ripe and soft.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthly appetite and thorongh digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but today I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

JOY IN RELIGION.

A Right Understanding of Religion a Source of Happiness. Neh. 8: 8–12; I. Peter 4: 3, 12, 13.

Many Christians appear to have overlooked the passage from the book of Nehemiah, which is associated with the topic. A day that is holy to the Lord, is in many homes a day of gloom and austerity. The reason assigned for the gladness of the people on that particular day of Nehemiah's time, may suggest a cause for a common mistake in our day. The people rejoiced "because they had understood the words that were declared unto them." Perhaps, if we understood the Word of God and his character better, we, too, should rejoice more than we do. There was reason enough for the tears of those people, as there is for ours. Disobedience to God's law and wandering from his ways into the paths of sin, are valid causes for sorrow and self-reproach. God does not condemn us for such sorrow. Like the father in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, he rejoices over the sorrow that brings us back to him; but he would not have us waste our time in vain regret. The Prodigal would have shown a poor appreciation of his father's welcome, had he presented a weeping face at the feast. There was work to do in Jerusalem by the people under Nehemiah's rule, and they could not do it heartily while they were sorrowing. There is work for us, too, and we ought to be energetic in its performance. We may show our grief over past misconduct better by carefulness of our future steps, by a charitable attitude toward other wanderers, and by readiness for service, than by idle tears. The Christian ought to be cheerful. He is like the child in the family who has been forgiven and restored. His burden of sin has been removed. He is in harmony with the principles of his being, and with God's government, and can look forward to continual development. The jarring strings of life are attuned to the eternal harmonies, and, being reconciled to God, we have a peace that the world cannot take away, and a hope that no sorrow can dim. It is by understanding these things and realizing our privileges that we attain to real happiness.

Consumption, Bronchitis and Bronchial Asthma.

Diseases which Cause Almost as Many Deaths as Consumption.

A cold settling on the chest or grippe that goes down to the lungs produces bronchitis, and when it has continued for several months it becomes chronic bronchitis.

There is at first only trifling cough in the morning with slight chilly feelings, followed by a sense of feverishness towards evening. Walking rapidly or going upstairs cause shortness of breath with a general sense of tightness and oppression in the chest.

As the disease advances the patient begins to raise yellow, or greenish yellow matter; has hectic fever and night-sweats and loses in flesh and strength. From this point, unless arrested by treatment, it goes on rapidly soon exhausts the vitality and causes death with symptoms closely resembling consumption and yet not consumption at all.

By careful observation extending through many years, I am confident that fully two-fifths of all the deaths charged to consumption are really deaths by consumptive bronchitis. On examining the sputum and the tissues of the lungs in these cases, we find neither tubercles nor the bacilli germs that are always present in true consumption.

This is a most important fact, for bronchitis is much easier to cure than consumption, every case being curable if properly treated. It is only a seated, chronic inflammation of the mucous lining of the air tubes, and at the worst is as certainly curable in the lungs as such inflammation in any other part of the body.

Consumptive bronchitis is not curable by medicine given by the stomach, nor by those hyperdermically injected, for they never reach its seat. It is only by the direct application of medicines to the lining of the bronchial tubes in the lungs that cure is ever effected. The disease is not in the stomach, nor in the blood, but in the lining of the lungs, and there the remedies must be applied.

Before I introduced this local treatment of the lungs, all these chronic bronchial cases were fatal. The patient either died of exhaustion produced by the filling up of the tubes with muco-purulent matter or the bronchial disease ended in consumption.

The treatment of all lung diseases was formerly a disgrace to the medical profession. Because physicians could not cut open the lungs to get at the seat of the disease, nor reach it by pouring medicines down the wind-pipe, without causing strangulation, they gave up the effort altogether and contented themselves with dosing the stomach by cough mixtures, tonics and opiates to stifle the symptoms, and then when death came, as it always did, accounted for it by calling the disease incurable.

Nothing but a direct application of healing medicines, antiseptics and germicides to the very seat of the disease will effect the cure of this or any other lung case, and they can be applied only by inhaling them in a gaseous state. The lungs constitute an air cavity, and can be reached medicinally only by medicated air. This treatment was discovered, perfected and first successfully applied by me. It is the only natural, scientific and common-sense treatment ever applied for the cure of bronchial and consumptive diseases. If it fails, nothing else could possibly succeed. But it never does fail, unless mortal injury to the lung structures has taken place before it is applied.

BRONCHIAL ASTHMA differs only from ordinary bronchitis in being attended by greater difficulty of breathing coming on in spasmodic attacks, mostly at night, or after unusual exertion, as ascending stairs, climbing hill or running. During these attacks the patient wheezes and struggles for breath, and is oppressed by a great weight and constriction of the chest.

The treatment of bronchial asthma is the same as that of chronic bronchitis, only the inhalations must be more soothing and antispasmodic. Under them, the wheezing and spasms cease as if by magic, and, by perseverance, cure is attained in every case.

I have applied this medicated air treatment successfully to thousands of patients, whose cases had proved incurable under every other treatment employed.

THE MOTIVE OF LIFE.

How a Good Life May Recommend Christ to the World. I. Peter 4: 11.

The familiar question and answer of the old catechism, which instructs the child to say that the chief end of man is "to glorify God and to enjoy him forever," has doubtless seemed incomprehensible to many a youthful mind. There are many objects in life that the child regards as more important. Yet the answer is true and if carefully examined will be found to be reasonable. If a man makes a watch or a locomotive, or any other machine that fulfils its purpose and does the work it was designed to do, it is a testimony to his power. When a child becomes a good citizen and an honorable man and wins distinction in any sphere of labor, he is a credit to his family and to his teachers. So a really good life glorifies God. It fulfils his purpose, and it shows the beneficence of his power. He undertakes to change the nature, to give a new heart and a right spirit. When people see that changed nature, see the man of evil life loving purity and striving, even with many failures, after the right and the true, they see that some supernatural power has been at work in him, and that he is what he is by virtue of that power. The Apostle places that motive before the people to whom he writes, as one that will quicken their spiritual nature. They are to live so that people seeing them will think well of God. If a man who has been on the verge of the grave is cured by some skilful physician, and is seen going around strong and well, the physician is honored and his ability is praised. But if the patient neglects his doctor's instructions, fails to take proper exercise, eats unwholesome food and neglects the laws of health, people seeing him in his unhealthy condition, and not knowing the cause, are liable to think it was not much of a cure, after all. It is so with the Christian. If he is worldly, and selfish, and inconsistent, people say that religion does not make much difference. Thus really in a personal sense, every Christian has Christ's honor in his keeping. He may show Christ's power in his life, or he may leave it to be inferred that the power has practically little effect. Thus, apart from his own happiness and his own advancement, the Christian has this additional motive to good living that in that way he can glorify God.

Bright's Disease
BUFFALO
LITHIA WATER
NATURE'S REMEDY

Dr. Alfred L. Loomis, Professor of Pathology and Practical Medicine in the Medical Department of the University of New York, wrote:

"For the past four years I have used BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in the treatment of Chronic Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, occurring in Gouty and Rheumatic subjects, with marked benefit."

Dr. William A. Hammond, Surgeon-General (retired) U. S. Army, formerly Professor of Diseases of the Mind and Nervous System in the University of New York, etc., Washington, D. C.:

"I have had considerable experience with BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in the treatment of Bright's Disease. I have witnessed the Albuminuria of this affection, and also casts of the renal vessels, disappear on the use of the Water, and this not only in a single case, but in several of which I have full notes. It must be taken in large quantities, and its use continued for a considerable time.

"Lithia has for many years been a favorite remedy with me in such cases, but the BUFFALO WATER certainly acts better than any extemporaneous solution of the Lithia Salts, and is, moreover, better borne by the stomach."

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is sold by Druggists and Grocers generally. It is an undoubted positive remedy for many of the most serious and most common ills that afflict mankind. An illustrated book can be procured on request, containing the testimony of the most famous physicians of this country and Europe, as to the wonderful power of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in Gout, Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Gravel, Indigestion, Nervous Dyspepsia, Nervous Exhaustion, Malaria, Alcoholism, Eczema and Blood Disorders, Diseases of Women, etc. Send for the book and judge for yourself. LIMITING GOD.

e Conditions Indispensable to Blessing. Jer. 14 : 8–10; Mark 6 : 5–6.

One of the most remarkable statements in the Gospels is this of the people who paralyzed Christ's power of blessing. "Jesus could not." That is a strange thing to say of that mighty nature. It s possible for men to take such an at- de that even Jesus himself could do m no good. The fact lets a flood of t on the relation of God to men. Man st bring something to him on which he work. So little it may be, that man pises it and thinks it of no account; t God accepts it, though it may be faith small as a grain of mustard seed, and t of it makes a power that transforms life. There must be co-operation even the dealings of God with men. It is so nature. The most fertile soil demands seed before it will yield a harvest; but seed once given is restored multiplied undredfold. It is so in our social re- ions. The best teacher in the world not educate the child who makes no ort, who brings him no attention, no fidence. A government cannot de- op a nation, or create business interests; t if the people will trust it and bring terprise and energy, it can open up ilities which will ensure prosperity. e physician, the lawyer, find their work tricted and their powers crippled if y have not the confidence of those who sult them. We notice how often Christ ed the sick who sought his help whether y believed that he was able to heal them. matter how feeble or halting was their th, if they had but the germs it was ficient; but when there was no faith, could do no mighty works. The good ngs that he stands ready to give to his ple now, are often not dispensed for s reason. Men must hold out their nds, they must expect the blessing, and vill come. Ye are not straitened in me, tells them, but in yourselves. Open ur windows, and the blessing that he l give will astonish you by its bounty. rist will stand at the door and knock, t the door must be opened; he will not ce an entrance. To the man who will ld himself to him he gives liberally, t there must be the yielding; he com- s no one to become good. To those ose hands are closed, and whose hearts shut against him, no heavenly gifts n ever come. Poor as our natures are, ve offer them to God, there is no bound the possibility of development. His wer out of such material can produce ngs fit for his service here and his esence hereafter.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Christian, Oklahoma. Would I be doing right in joining a Methodist church when I am a Presbyterian? There is no Presbyterian church near us.

You would be doing quite right. The reasons against it that you mention in your letter are of no weight, and the difficulties you anticipate are imaginary rather than real. The questions at issue between the two churches need never disturb your fellowship. You are in accord on the main questions of faith in Christ, dependence on him for salvation and the duty of living an earnest, clean, helpful life. You can help the church by doing Christian work, and it can help you by the ordinances of fellowship.

Church Member, Canton, O. Is it possible for a truly regenerate person to fall away and be lost?

When a child of God falls into sin, we believe that God in his love applies such discipline, that the wandering one repents and is restored. He promises to receive and forgive the backslider on his repentance. But it is a terrible thing for a Christian to fall away. It brings reproach on the name of Christ and base ingratitude to him. If, therefore, after God has manifested his willingness to forgive such an one, his tenderness and magnanimity are despised, there must be such hardness of heart in the wrong-doer that we should doubt whether he had ever been really regenerated.

Mrs. F. G. B., Union Valley, N. Y. Can you tell me why Venice was built on the water? Why was it necessary to build a city there? Was there no land they could build upon, and how do they build so that their buildings are not destroyed by the water?

At the beginning of the fifth century, the inhabitants of Venetia—one of the twenty-nine provinces into which Italy was divided by Constantine—used, to a large extent, the numerous marshy islands of the lagoons extending along the northwestern shores of the Adriatic as temporary retreats from the successive barbarian invasions. The first permanent settlement on the site of the present City of Venice—the Rivo Alto (i. e. the Rialto), and its numerous islets—cannot with certainty be traced further back than the ninth century. Between 710 and 812, various struggles arose, and after peace had been concluded, the people finally abandoned the mainland, in order to make Rivo Alto, with its surrounding islets, the permanent seat of the government, which was that of an aristocratic republic, until the unity with Italy, in 1866. Venice to-day stands on 117 islets, separated by 150 canals, and united by 380 bridges. All the main traffic passes along the canals. The foundations of the buildings are triumphs of engineering and architecture, and of a strength calculated to withstand for centuries the destructive action of the tides.

Some very interesting answers to the latest Scriptural puzzle in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Oct. 26, have been received. Miss Susie Mills, Clonakilty, Ireland, writes:

Moses was instructed by the Lord to prepare the "oil of holy ointment," also the "perfume." He was therefore the apothecary mentioned in the Bible. Gershom was the name of his son. Exodus ii. 22 38; Exodus 2 22.

Inquirer, Richmond, Va. What did Christ mean by saying (Luke 7 28), that the least in the kingdom of heaven was greater than John the Baptist?

Christ's coming into the world made so great a difference that the greatest of the Old Testament saints had less knowledge of God's love and of the redemption that was revealed, than those who learned of them through Christ. It is, as one might say of a schoolboy of these times, that he is further advanced in science and knowledge of the universe than Newton. The modern discoveries have given him a vantage ground that Newton, great as he was, did not occupy.

Young Christian, Philadelphia, Pa. 1. What forms of amusement should a Christian permit himself? 2. Is not diversion essential to physical and moral well-being? 3. Should not Christians find more enjoyment in life than those not Christians?

1. It is impossible to give a hard and fast answer. "The moment any form of recreation becomes indispensable to us, the moment we find that it diminishes instead of heightening our interest and delight in the regular duties of our daily lives, that instant we should check its encroachment upon our time and, if need be, cut it off altogether." Also, if an amusement, harmless to ourselves, works injury to others, by that fact it becomes a sin. 2. Yes; to run in one groove all the time is dangerous. Recreation is an excellent thing. The trouble is that many popular amusements exhaust instead of renewing one's energies and spirits. 3. Certainly. The Christian faith arms him against sorrows and disappointments, protects him from debasing amusements and occupations, and interdicts no innocent pleasure.

In a letter relative to Gospel progress in the West Indies, Miss W. S. H., Wimbledon, London, England, says:

Hayti needs the Gospel more than either of its neighbors. Will no Gospel ship, in going from one island to the other, touch at some port of Hayti and plant some seeds from the Word of Life? The barbarism in the island is said to be terrible. In the interior, I have from two distinct sources, heard of cannibalism. I am praying for the island. May God send successful workers.

CLEARING AWAY THE SNOW IN NEW YORK STREETS AFTER THE RECENT BLIZZARD.

Not since the memorable blizzard, ten years ago, have the Eastern and Middle States experienced a winter storm of such severity as that of Nov. 26–27. In many places the wind blew at the rate of sixty miles an hour, which, with a temperature only slightly above zero, and a heavy, driving snowfall, combined to form conditions appallingly destructive to life and property. Upward of 120 vessels of all classes were lost on the Atlantic Coast, and along the bays and rivers. In the larger cities the heavy snowfall blocked business for days, and railroads were tied up temporarily in nearly all directions. Our photograph affords a glimpse of the condition of New York streets before the snow was fully removed.

Unquestionably, Hayti will benefit, spiritually and otherwise, by the work for which the Lord is opening the way in Cuba and Porto Rico. It will be impossible for the dark republic to be uninfluenced by the concentrated and consecrated efforts which the next year is certain to witness in both islands that have recently come under our control.

S. S., Sandy Creek, N. Y. How can the Cuban insurgents gain their independence under the American flag?

The island will probably in any event remain under the American flag for some time, and should the insurgents demonstrate their capacity for self-government to our satisfaction, they will doubtless be given an opportunity for the experiment.

C. D. Rantoul, Ill. Why do you not continue the relief fund for the starving Cubans?

Because our government is now conducting the work of relief, having made an ample appropriation for that purpose, and the daily dispatches show that the work is going forward on an extensive scale.

Subscriber, Durland, Ill. 1. What is meant by the initiative? 2. What is the "referendum," applied to legislation?

1. The initiative is a preliminary step or act taken for the purpose of beginning a movement. To "take the initiative" is to make a beginning. 2. It is the submission of any proposed public measure, or law, to a popular vote after it has been acted upon by the legislature or convention, for the purpose of ratification or rejection. In Switzerland, the referendum is a constitutional right of the people, in regard to all legislation of a certain character.

J. H., West Point, Neb. 1. When will work begin on the next census? 2. How are the census takers appointed, and by whom?

1. Work on the next census—that of 1900—will probably begin toward the close of next year, under the present Administration. 2. The Superintendent of Census, Washington, D. C., has the appointing power.

Here is an opportunity for some of our readers to do a little effective missionary work. Miss Estelle Walden, Corresponding Secretary B. Y. P. U., 411 Highland Avenue, Greenville, S. C., writes:

There are about seven thousand soldiers stationed at this point, and we are desirous of obtaining some religious literature for distribution among them. Please send us what you can spare by express or by mail.

L. C., Franklin Park, N. J. Will you please reprint the "Grace" that your Mont-Lawn children sing before meals?

God is gracious, God is good,
And we thank thee for our food;
By his hand must all be fed,
Give us Lord our daily bread.

Jennie A., Atlanta, Ga. What is the origin of Christmas decorations? Whence did we derive the present custom, the use of holly, etc.?

In pre-Christian times, when Rome was pagan, the great feast of Saturn held in December, was made the occasion of decorating the temples with such green plants as could be procured. When Rome became Christian, the pagan festival was transformed to a Christian feast, the decorations included. The holly is called "Christ's-thorn" in some parts of Germany, and has been in use for Christmas decorations from time immemorial.

In reply to letters from several readers inquiring as to the States in which women have the full right of suffrage at all elections, and when such right was conferred, we give the list as follows:

Wyoming, 1869; Colorado, 1893;
Utah, 1895; Idaho, 1896.

South Dakota may possibly be added to the list, but the returns from the late election (in which the suffrage issue was involved), are not yet officially canvassed.

Subscriber, Newark, N. J. What was the origin of the Paris Monte de Piete (pawnbroking house).

It was established in 1777 during Louis XVI's reign, the idea being borrowed from Italy. Its originators, desiring to give it a benevolent or philanthropic character, gave it the name by which it has ever since been known.

L. M., Savannah, Ga. What is the significance of the presentation of the "Golden Rose" by the Pope of Rome, of which mention was recently made in the secular press?

The Rosa d'Oro is a gift bestowed annually upon that individual sovereign or community whose services to the church during the year have been the most valuable. The custom was established in 1040 by Pope Leo IX., who, as patron of Alsace, exacted every year from an Alsatian monastery a rose of gold of the finest workmanship. Venice, at one time, possessed five such roses, which had been presented by different popes.

Constant Reader, Scranton, Pa. Is it known whether the book of Isaiah was all written by the same man?

The question is disputed. Scholars who have made a study of the book in the original tongue see so great a difference in the literary style of the chapters preceding the fortieth from that of the subsequent chapters that they think the latter part was written either by a different man or by the same man after a long interval.

Mrs. Henry Y., Waterloo, N. Y. Will you please state what share of a husband's property a wife receives if they have no heirs? Also, what share of a wife's does the husband receive?

In the State of New York, upon the death of a husband without a will, if he leaves any descendant, the widow takes one-third of his personal property absolutely. If he leaves no descendant, the widow takes one-half of his personal property absolutely. If he leaves no descendant or parent, but does leave a brother, sister, nephew or niece, the widow takes in addition to one-half, all of the other half to the amount of, but not to exceed, two thousand dollars. If the husband leave no descendant, parent, brother, sister, nephew or niece, the widow takes his entire personal estate absolutely. Upon the death of a husband, with or without a will, the widow is entitled to the use and income of one-third of his real estate during her life-time. The husband may, by his will, deprive his wife of any interest whatever in his personal property, but has no power to deprive her of her dower right, that is, the use and income of one-third of his real estate. If the wife die without a will, and leaving any descendant, the husband is entitled to one-third of her personal property absolutely. If she leave no descendant, the husband takes the whole of her personal property, provided he becomes administrator of his wife's estate, which he may do as a matter of right. Probably, even if he did not become administrator, his rights would be the same, but this has been doubted. With regard to the wife's real estate, the husband is entitled to curtesy in it, that is to say, he is entitled to the use and income of all of the wife's real estate during his lifetime, provided that a child of the marriage has been born alive, and provided an absolute divorce has not been granted against the husband. The wife may deprive her husband of his interest in the personal property, and of his curtesy in the real property, by her will. The husband's interests just stated are in case of the wife dying without a will.

Inquirer, Baltimore, Md. One of my little folks asked me yesterday who was the author of the old-time rhyme: "Thirty days hath September, April, June and November?" I was obliged to confess my ignorance. Possibly THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can enlighten us.

The lines are attributed to Richard Grafton, a printer in England, in the sixteenth century. Grafton was noted as one of the earlier Bible publishers, and issued several editions of the Scriptures.

Mrs. A. De N., Pittsburg, Pa. What is an ecstatic?

"Ecstasy" means "out of the body." St. Paul refers to this when he says he was caught up to the third heaven and heard unutterable words, "whether in the body, I cannot tell" (II. Cor. 12: 2–4). St. John says he was "in the spirit," i. e., in an ecstasy, when he saw the apocalyptic vision. The belief that the soul left the body at times was very general in former ages, and it is still the belief of many.

HEIDELBERG'S HISTORIC CHURCH.

A Quaint Edifice in Germany, Five Hundred Years Old, in which Roman Catholics and Protestants Hold Simultaneous Services.

PREPARATIONS are being made in Germany for the celebration of the five hundredth anniversary of the founding of the grand old Church of the Holy Spirit, which rears its head above the quaint old town of Heidelberg. In this country we look with wondering interest on a church which has a continuous history of two hundred years, and probably there is not one whose house of worship has stood so long. But those old Germans of the fourteenth century built with a solidity that endured; and the walls they reared have echoed the praises of God from generation to generation, until now their descendants are about to celebrate the semi-millennial anniversary of their work. Additional interest attaches to the old church from the fact that it is probably the only church in Christendom in which Protestants and Roman Catholics worship under the same roof at the same time. A veritable "middle wall of partition" separates the one congregation from the other, but the tower and the bells are common property, and the church shelters all those who by the one way or the other, seek salvation and sonship of God.

"Beautiful for situation" is the fine edifice which has withstood the storms of five centuries. Forest-clad hills and quiet valleys piercing the sombre depths of the Odenwald, and fringing the broad plain of the Rhine, give to the place a loveliness and grandeur that impress every visitor. It is full, too, of historic associations. In the far-away ages before the Christian era, the Romans marked the beauty of the site and established a settlement there. The roads they made and the foundations they laid for their towers may still be traced. But the Teuton tribes came down, and, taking advantage of Rome's decadence, seized the fertile hills and valleys, and destroyed the Roman civilization. As the centuries wore on, the new possessors laid aside their wild habits and built houses and a fortress, and finally a monastery under the hill. But the shadow of ignorance and corruption that was upon the church of those days fell on Heidelberg too, and complaint was made that though the monastery was there, neither the abbot nor any of his officers or monks could so much as write their names. The institution which was destined to make Heidelberg famous the world over, resulted from an effort to remedy all this. In the fourteenth century the ruler of Heidelberg was Rupert I., Count Palatine, that is a prince with some of the prerogatives of royalty. To him Heidelberg owes the foundation of its hoary, but ever-youthful university, to which students still go from every nation on earth, to gain the learning with which they may enlighten their native lands. He gave it a rich dowry, made it free from the civil power, and forbade any man to molest the students. Rupert III., his grand-nephew and second successor, was a man of similar public spirit. He it was who founded the Church of the Holy Spirit. He and his wife were buried within its walls, and their double tomb is still in its choir.

The church was built of old red sandstone in the late Gothic style of architecture. High up on its walls there are strange curved balconies supported by massive stone pillars, from which light, graceful columns rise to support the vaulted roof. A winding staircase fixed in the wall gives access to each balcony. These balconies were originally the library and reading rooms of the University. They were placed there as a fire-proof storehouse for the priceless books and manuscripts which soon began to flow to the University from all parts of the Empire. Unhappily, the precious literary treasures, though safe in the balconies of the church from fire, were not safe from clerical robbers. In the seventeenth century, under the vandal Tilly, they were carried off to enrich the library of the Vatican in Rome.

The old church was, of course, originally Catholic, for it was founded before the rise of Luther, and when all Europe was under the yoke of the Papacy. But it caught the first gleams of light which illumined Germany and spread throughout the world. The professors of the university, and the priests and canons of the Church of the Holy Spirit, with the Elector and his Court, were assembled on April 21, 1518, to hear an address by a young Augustinian monk, who, passing through Heidelberg, was permitted to stay and lecture. He discoursed so eloquently on the doctrine of justification by faith, that all his audience was moved, but an old priest who saw whereunto such doctrines would logically lead, told him bluntly that if he continued to teach them he would undoubtedly be stoned. The monk was aware of the fact, but he was not to be deterred by the peril, for he was none other than Martin Luther. Thus the light came to Heidelberg and it could not be stifled. It spread, and there came a day when the people who were gathered in the Church of the Holy Spirit to hear Mass as usual, suddenly, to the amazement of the officiating priests, broke out into singing the Reformation hymn of victory, "Now unto us the Saviour has come by grace and love divine." This was the recognized sign of change of faith. On the following Sunday the Lord's Supper took the place of the Mass in the service, and the church of the Holy Spirit became a Protestant church.

From that time, for over a century and a half, the history of the church is full of strange vicissitudes. Under the Elector, Otto Heinrich, it was a centre of Lutheran influence. Luther's friend and colleague, Melanchthon, was teaching and preaching there on the Elector's invitation. Later it became Calvinistic, and its minister, Caspar Olivianus, was one of the two authors of the famous Heidelberg Catechism, which has found its way into every country in Christendom. During the Thirty Years' War, the church became Catholic again. In 1633, the city fell into the hands of the Swedes, and the church was used for Protestant services. In 1635, the Bavarians again became masters of the city, and the Church of the Holy Spirit was once more the scene of Catholic ceremonies. Fifteen years afterwards it was again in the possession of the Calvinists. During the war with France in 1689, it was partially destroyed by fire, but was speedily rebuilt. The Elector of that time, however, was a Catholic, and insisted on behalf of his co-religionists, on, at least, a share in the old church. He took possession of the choir and left the nave to the Protestants, establishing a division similar to that which exists at the present time.

This amicable division of the old church has not continued undisturbed through the centuries. Carlyle tells in vivid style the story of one effort to put an end to it. It was early in the eighteenth century that Karl Philip, the Elector Palatine, being a Roman Catholic, determined to oust the Protestants from the church and make it his principal cathedral. He offered to build the Protestants another church, if they would depart voluntarily, but they declared that they dare not, in conscience, give up their rights. The Elector, however, was not to be turned from his purpose, and summoning smiths to pick the locks, and masons to force the stone buttresses, he took possession of the whole church on behalf of the Catholics. The Protestants thus, as it were, turned into the street, knew not to whom to appeal for help. The only person whose power in the Palatinate was superior to the Elector was the Kaiser, but it was useless to appeal to him for he was under the influence of the Jesuits. In their distress, they laid their case before Frederick William, king of Prussia. He had no power in the Palatinate, but sympathizing deeply with the wronged Protestants, he cudgelled his brain for a way of securing justice for them.

The method he adopted was unique but effectual. He had in his dominions a number of rich and powerful Roman Catholic institutions. At Magdeburg, Minden and Hammersleben there were wealthy churches and monasteries which enjoyed their rights and privileges under their Protestant sovereign. Frederick William proposed to use them as his weapon against his brother sovereign of the Palatinate, to secure justice for the Protestants of Heidelberg. He accordingly assembled the Roman Catholic abbots, canons and priests who were at the head of those institutions and called them to witness that he, a Protestant king, had always treated them fairly and kindly. This they admitted. He then explained the situation at Heidelberg, which he had no power to remedy. But he told them that he was determined that there should be no difference between the treatment of the Protestants of Heidelberg and the Catholics of Prussia. Therefore the Catholic churches of Prussia would be closed, public worship should cease, and the revenues of all Catholic institutions and officers would be suspended until the Protestants of Heidelberg were again in possession of their share of the Church of the Holy Spirit. The Catholic officials protested that such treatment was unjust, that they were being punished for the faults of others. Frederick William replied that they doubtless knew ways, inaccessible to him, of making their influence felt and it would be to their interest to use them. On the day that the Protestants of Heidelberg recovered the use of their church, the Catholics of Prussia would be reinstated in their benefices and incomes. The Catholics appealed to the Kaiser, and to the Pope, both of whom remonstrated with the King of Prussia, but without effect. The Elector Palatine was obliged to yield. Within three months the Heidelberg Protestants were worshiping in their old church and the Catholics of Prussia were again in enjoyment of their incomes and privileges.

From that time to the present, the arrangement has continued in force. The choir is used by the Roman Catholics and the nave by the Protestants. The spire and the bells are common property. There are two pastors and an assistant pastor who have joint charge of a congregation of nearly eight thousand souls, or a third of the whole Protestant community of Heidelberg. The present ministers are Rev. Adolf Schmidthenner and Rev. Julius Schick. Under their charge the Lutherans and Calvinists have become united. The union was celebrated by the communicants of both parties participating together in the Lord's Supper. In the approaching celebration both the Roman Catholics and the Protestants will have part though possibly they may not unite. To both the old church is very dear, but something more than the common love of a building is needed to draw them together. Even the wall that divides the congregations, is not so great an obstacle to union, as are the differences in their belief. When those are removed and the Catholic learns that in Christ alone is there hope of salvation, the wall will soon come down, and the two congregations will unite in worshiping him who prayed that all might be one, as he and his Father are one.

The Shut-In.

A Sermon by...
Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D.

Text:
Genesis 7 : 16:
The Lord shut him in.

COSMOGONY has no more interesting chapter than the one which speaks of that catastrophe of the ages, the submersion of our world in time of Noah, the first ship carpenter. Many of the nations who never saw a Bible have a flood story—Egyptian flood story; Grecian flood story, of which Ducalion was the Noah; Hawaiian flood story; New Zealand flood story; Chinese flood story, American Indian flood story—all of which accounts agree in the immersion of the continents under universal rains, and that there was a ship floating, with a select few of the human family and with specimens of zoological and ornithological and reptilian worlds, although I could have wished that these last had been shut out of the ark and drowned.

All of these flood stories represent the ship thus afloat as finally stranded on a mountain top. Hugh Miller, in his Testimony of the Rocks, thinks that all these flood stories were infirm traditions of the Biblical account, and I believe him. The worst thing about that great freshet was that it struck Noah's Great Eastern from above and beneath. The seas broke the chain of shells and crystal and rolled over the land, and the heavens opened their clouds for falling columns of water which roared and thundered on the roof of the great ship for a month and ten days. There was one door to the ship closed after he had entered. "The Lord shut him in." So there are many people now in the world who are as thoroughly shut in—some by sickness, some by old age, some by special duties that will not allow them to go forth, some surrounded by deluges of misfortune and trouble, and for them my sympathies are aroused, and from them I often receive messages, and this sermon, which I hope may do good to others, is more especially intended for them. To-day I address the shut-in. "The Lord shut him in."

Notice, first of all, who closed the door so that they could not get out. Noah did not do it, nor his son Shem, nor did Ham, nor did Japheth. I will tell you how it was done. A hand was stretched down from heaven to close that door. It was a divine hand as well as a kind hand. "The Lord shut him in."

And the same kind and sympathetic Being has shut you in, my reader or my hearer. You thought it was an accident, ascribable to the carelessness or misdoings of others, or a mere "happen so." No! no! God had gracious design for your betterment, for the cultivation of your patience, for the strengthening of your faith, for the advantage you might gain by seclusion, for your eternal salvation. He put you in a school-room, where you could learn in six months or a year, more than you could have learned anywhere else in a lifetime. He turned the lattice or pulled down the blinds of the sick-room, or put your swollen foot on an ottoman, or held you amid the pillows of a couch which you could not leave, for some reason that you may not now understand, but which he has promised he will explain to you satisfactorily, if not in this world, then in the world to come, for he has said, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter!"

The world has no statistics as to the number of invalids. The physicians know something about it, and the apothecaries and the pastors, but who can tell us the number of blind eyes, and deaf ears, and diseased lungs, and congested livers, and jangled nerves, and neuralgic temples, and rheumatic feet, or how many took no food this morning because they had no appetite to eat, or digestive organs to assimilate, or have lungs so delicate they cannot go forth when the wind is in the east, or there is a fog rising from the river, or there is a dampness on the ground or pavement because of the frost coming out? It would be easy to count the people who every day go through a street, or the number of passengers carried by a railroad company in a year, or the number of those who cross the ocean in ships; but who can give us the statistics of the great multitudes who are shut in? I call the attention of all such to their superior opportunities of doing good.

Those of us who are well, and can see clearly, and hear distinctly, and partake of food of all sorts, and questions of digestion never occur to us, and we can wade the snowbanks and take an equinox in our faces, and endure the thermometer at zero, and every breath of air is a tonic and a stimulus, and sound sleep meets us within five minutes after our head touches the pillow, do not make so much of an impression when we talk about the consolations of religion. The world says right away, "I guess that man mistakes buoyancy of natural spirits for religion. What does he know about it? He has never been tried." But when one goes out and reports to the world that that morning on his way to business he called to see you and found you, after being kept in your room for two months, cheerful and hopeful, and that you had not one word of complaint, and asked all about everybody, and rejoiced in the success of your business friends, although your own business had almost come to a standstill through your absence from store or office or shop, and that you sent your love to all your old friends, and told them that if you did not meet them again in this world, you hoped to meet them in dominions seraphic, with a quiet word of advice from you to the man who carried the message, about the importance of his not neglecting his own soul, but through Christ seeking something better than this world could give him—why, all the business men in the counting-room say, "Good! Now, that is religion!" And the clerks get hold of the story and talk it over, so that the weigher and cooper and hackman, standing on the doorstep, say, "That is splendid! Now, that is what I call religion!"

It is a good thing to preach on a Sunday morning, the people assembled in most respectable attire and seated on soft cushions, the preacher standing in neatly upholstered pulpit surrounded by personal friends, and after an inspiring hymn has been sung, and that sermon, if preached in faith, will do good; but the most effective sermon is preached by one seated in dressing gown, in an arm-chair into which the invalid has with much care been lifted, the surrounding shelves filled with medicine bottles, some to produce sleep, some for the relief of sudden paroxysm, some for stimulant, some for tonic, some for anodyne, and some for febrifuge, the pale preacher quoting promises of the Gospel, telling of the glories of a sympathetic Christ, assuring the one or two or three persons who hear it of the mighty reinforcements of religion. You say that to such a sermon there are only one or two or three hearers. Aye! But the visitor calling at that room, then closing the door softly and going away, tells the story, and the whole neighborhood hears it, and it will take all eternity to realize the grand and uplifting influence of that sermon about God and the soul, though preached to an audience of only one man or one woman. The Lord has ordained all such invalids for a style of usefulness which athletes and men of two hundred healthy avoirdupois can not affect. It was not an enemy that fastened you in that one room or sent you on crutches, the longest journey you have made for many weeks being from bed to sofa, and from sofa to looking glass, where you are shocked at the pallor of your own cheek and the pinchedness of your features; then back again from mirror to sofa and sofa to bed, with a long sigh saying, "How good it feels to get back again to my old place on the pillow!" Remember who it is that appointed the day when, for the first time in many years, you could not go to business, and who has kept a record of all the weary days and all the sleepless nights of your exile from the world. Oh, weary man! Oh, feeble woman! It was the Lord who shut you in. Do you remember that some of the noblest and best of men have been prisoners? Ezekiel a prisoner, Jeremiah a prisoner, Paul a prisoner, St. John a prisoner, John Bunyan a prisoner. Though human hate seemed to have all to do with them, really the Lord shut them in.

All the men and women that tossed in that oriental craft had lived long enough to remember a great many of the mercies and kindnesses of God, and they could not blot out, and I think they had no disposition to blot out the memory of those brightnesses, though now they were shut in. Neither should the shut-in of our time forget the blessings of the past. Have you been blind for ten years? Thank God for the time when you saw as clearly as any of us can see, and let the pageant of all the radiant landscapes and illumined skies which you ever looked upon kindle your rapturous gratitude. I do not see Raphael's Madonna di San Sisto in the picture gallery of Dresden, nor Rubens' "Descent from the Cross" at Antwerp, nor Michael's Angelo's "Last Judgment" on the ceiling of the Vatican, nor "Saint Sophia" at Constantinople, nor the Parthenon on the Acropolis, nor the Taj Mahal of India; but shall I not thank God that I have seen them? Is it possible that such midnight darkness shall ever blast my vision that I cannot call them up again? Perhaps you are so deaf that you cannot hear the chirp of bird or solo of cantatrice, or even organ in full diapason, though you feel the foundations tremble under its majestic roll, or even the thunder-storm that makes Mount Washington echo. But are you not grateful that once you could hear trill and chant and carol and doxology?

Again, notice that during that forty days of storm which rocked that ship on that universal ocean of Noah's time, the door which shut the captain of the ship inside the craft, kept him from many outside perils. How those wrathful seas would like to have got their wet hands on Noah, and pulled him out and sunk him! And do all of you of the great army of the shut-in realize that though you have special temptations where you are now, how much of the outside style of temptation you escape? Do you, the merchant incarcerated in the sick-room, realize that every hour of the day you spend looking out of the window, or gazing at the particular figure on the wall-paper, or listening to the clock's ticks, men are being wrecked by the allurements and uncertainties of business life? How many forgeries are committed, how many trust funds are swamped, how many public moneys are being misappropriated, how many bankruptcies suffered! It may be, it is, very uncomfortable for Noah inside the ark, for the apartment is crowded and the air is vitiated with the breathing of so much human and animal life; but it is not half as bad for him as though he were outside the ark. There is not an ox, or a camel, or an antelope, or a sheep inside the ark as badly off as the proudest king outside. While you are on the pillow or lounge you will make no bad bargains, you will rush into no rash investments, you will avoid the mistakes which thousands of men are every day making.

Notice, also, that there was a limit to the shut-in experience of those ancient mariners. I suppose the forty days of the descending and uprising floods, and the 150 days before the passengers could go ashore must have seemed to those eight people in the big boat like a small eternity. "Rain, rain, rain!" said the wife of Noah. "Will it never stop?" But after awhile it cleared off. Sunshine, glorious sunshine! The ascending mists were folded up into clouds, which instead of darkening the sky only ornamented it. As they looked out of the windows these worn passengers clapped their hands and rejoiced that the storm was over, and I think if God could stop such a storm as that, he could stop any storm in your life time experience. If he can control a vulture in mid-sky, he can stop a summer bat that flies in at your window. At the right time he will put the rainbow on the cloud and the deluge of your misfortunes will dry up. I preach the doctrine of limitation, relief, and disenthrallment. At just the right time the pain will cease, the bondage will drop, the imprisoned will be liberated, the fires will go out, the body and mind and soul will be free. Patience! The last week of the Noachian deluge came, the last day, the last hour, the last moment. The beating of the rain on the roof ceased, and the dashing of the billows on the side of the ship quieted, and peacefully as a yacht moves out over quiet Lake Cayuga, Como, or Luzerne, the ark, with its illustrious passengers and freight, glided to its mountain wharfage.

Notice, also, that on the cessation of the deluge the shut-ins came out, and they built their houses and cultured their gardens and started a new world on the ruins of the old world that had been drowned out. Though Noah lived three hundred and fifty years after this world-wide accident and no doubt his fellow-passengers survived centuries, I warrant they never got over talking about that voyage. Now I have seen Doré's pictures and many other pictures of the entrance into the ark, two and two, of the human family and the animal creation into that ship, but I never saw a picture of their coming out; yet their embarkation was not more important than their disembarkation. Many a crew has entered a ship that never landed. Witness the steamer Portland, a few days ago, with 100 souls on board, going down with all its crew and passengers. Witness the line of sunken ships, reaching like a submarine cable of anguish, across the ocean depths, from America to Europe. If any ship might expect complete wreckage, the one Noah commanded might have expected it. But no! Those who embarked, disembarked. And I now cheer with this story all the inmates of sick-rooms and hospitals, and those prisons where men and women are unjustly endungeoned, and all the thousands who are bounded on the north, and south and east, and west by floods, by deluges of misfortune and disaster. The ark of your trouble, if it does not land on some earthly height of vindication and rescue, will land on the heights celestial.

If you have put your trust in God you will come out in the garden of the King, among orchards bending with twelve manner of fruits, and harvests that wave in the light of a sun that never sets. As the eight passengers of that craft of Captain Noah never got over talking about their seafaring experiences, so you who have been the shut-ins of earth will add unbounded interest to the conversation of heaven by recalling and reciting your earthly experiences, and the rougher those experiences, the more thrilling will they be to yourself and others who listen. As when we sit amid a group of soldiers and hear their story of battle, or a group of sailors and hear their story of cyclones, we feel stupid because we have nothing in our life worth telling, how uninteresting will be those souls in heaven who had smooth sailing all their lives and no accidents, while Noah tells his story of the deluge, and Lot his story of escape from destroyed cities, and Paul his story of the Alexandrian corn-ship, and you tell your story of the days and nights and years of the times when you were shut in. I hail all the shut-ins because they will be the come-outs. Heaven will be all the brighter for your earthly privations and environments. What a heaven it will be for those who were always sick, when they are always well; and after twenty years of pain to have millions of years of health! What a light will be the light of heaven for those who on earth could not see their hand before their faces! And what will the music of heaven be to those the tympanum of whose ears for many years has ceased to vibrate! Denied on earth the pleasure of listening to Handel, and Haydn, and Mendelssohn's Symphonies, at last reaching a world where there has never has been a discord and hearing singing where all are perfect songsters, and oratorios in which all the nations of heaven chant! Great heaven it will be for all who get there, but a hundred times more for those who were shut in.

Meanwhile you have all divine and angelic sympathy in your infirmities. The mightiest test of character is physical suffering. Critics are impatient at the way Thomas Carlyle scolded at everything. His seventy years of dyspepsia were enough to make any man scold. When you see people out of patience and irrascible and lachrymose, inquire into the case, and before you get through with the exploration your hyper-criticism will turn to pity, and to the divine and angelic sympathy will be added your own.

By a strange Providence, for which I shall be forever grateful, circumstances with which I think you are all familiar, I have admission through the newspaper press, week by week, to tens of thousands of God's dear children who cannot enter church on the Sabbath and hear their excellent pastors, because of the age of the sufferers, or their illness, or the lameness of foot, or their incapacity to stay in one position an hour and a half, or their poverties, or their troubles of some sort will not let them go out of doors, and to them as much as to those who hear me I preach this sermon, as I preach many of my sermons, the invisible audience always vaster than the visible, some of them tossed on wilder seas than those that tossed the eight members of Noah's family, and instead of forty days of storm and five months of being shut in, as they were, it has been with these invalids five years of "shut-in," or ten years of "shut-in," or twenty years of "shut-in." Oh, comforting God! Help me to comfort them! Give me two hands full of salve for their wounds. When we were three hundred miles out at sea, a hurricane struck us, and the life-boats were dashed from the davits and all the lights in the cabin were put out by the rolling of the ship, and the water which through the broken skylights had poured in. Captain Andrews entered and said to the men on duty, "Why don't you light up and make things brighter, for we are going to outride this storm? Passengers, cheer up! Cheer up!" And he struck a match and began to light the burners. He could not silence either the wind or the waves, but by the striking of that match, accompanied by encouraging words, we were all helped.

And as I now find many in hurricanes of trouble, though I cannot quiet the storm, I can strike a match to light up the darkness, and I strike a match: "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." I strike another match: "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." I strike another match: "We have a great High Priest who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and he was in all points tempted like as we are." Are you old? One breath of heaven will make you everlastingly young again. Have you aches and pains? They insure Christ's presence and sympathy through the darkest December nights, which are the longest nights of the year. Are you bereft? Here is a resurrected Christ, whose voice is full of resurrectionary power. Are you lonely? All the angels of heaven are ready to swoop into your companionship. Here is the Christ of Mary and Martha when they had lost Lazarus, and of David when he had lost his son, and of Abraham when he had lost Sarah, and of your father and mother when in time of old age they parted at the gates of the tomb. When last I was in Savannah, Georgia, at the close of the Sabbath morning service, I was asked to go and see a Christian woman, for many years an invalid. I went. I had not in all that beautiful city of splendid men and gracious women seen a face brighter than hers. Reaching her bedside, I put out my hand, but she could not shake hands, for her hand was palsied. I said to her, "How long have you been down on this bed?" She smiled and made no answer, for her tongue had been palsied; but those standing around said, "Fifteen years." I said to her, "Have you been able to keep your courage up all that time?" She gave a very little motion of her head in affirmation, for her whole body was paralytic. The sermon I had preached that morning had no power on others compared with the power that silent sermon had on me. What was the secret of her conquest over pain and privation and incapacity to move? Shall I tell you the secret? I will tell you: The Lord shut her in.

There is a good deal of fanaticism abroad about the recovery of the sick, but if we had as much faith as Martin Luther we would have Luther's success. His friend, Myconius, was very ill, and Luther fell upon his knees and said, "O, Lord, no! Thou must not yet take our brother Myconius to thyself. Thy cause will not prosper without him. Amen." Then he wrote, "My dear Myconius: There is no cause for fear. The Lord will not let me hear that you are dead. You shall not and must not die. Amen." Luther's letter so excited Myconius that an ulcer on his lungs broke, and he got well. Would to God that like that we might be able to pray, that we might have similar results! Oh, men and women, visible and invisible! The probability is you will never write your autobiography. It is the most difficult book to write, because you are tempted to omit passages in your life that were not complimentary to yourself, and to quote from a diary, which is always incomplete, because there are some things which you do not think best to write down. As you will not undertake an autobiography, the story of yourself, I will take the responsibility of presenting your biography, which is the story of one's life by some one else. If you will give your love and trust to Him of Bethlehem and Calvary, this will be your biography: "Born at the right time, but the most important event in his life was when he was born again. Died at the right time, but long before that he had died unto sin. In his life there were many sorrows, wave after wave, storm after storm, but he outrode everything and landed in eternal safety. Why? Why? Because the Lord shut him in."

But do not think that heaven is made up of an indiscriminate population. Some of my friends are so generous in their theology that they would let everybody in without reference to condition or character. Do not think that libertines and blasphemers and rejecters of God and His Gospel have "letters of credit" that will draw anything from the Bank of Heaven. Pirate crafts will not be permitted to go up that harbor. If there are those who as to Heaven are to be "shut-ins," there are those who will belong to the "shut-outs." Heaven has twelve gates, and while those twelve gates imply wide-open entrance for those who are properly prepared to enter them, they imply that there are at least twelve possibilities that many will be shut out, because a gate is of no use unless it can sometimes be closed. Heaven is not an unwashed mob. Show your tickets or you will not get in—tickets that you may get without money and without price, tickets with a cross and a crown upon them. Let the unrepentant and the vile and the offscourings of earth enter heaven as they now are, and they would depreciate and demoralize it so that no one of us would want to enter, and those who are there would want to move out. The Bible speaks of the "withouts" as well as the "withins." Revelation 22:15: "Without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." Through the converting, pardoning, sanctifying grace of God, may we at last be found among the shut-ins and not among the shut-outs!

PORTO RICO'S NEGLECTED CHILDREN.

Not a Single Sunday School on the Island, and Only One Protestant Church — An Inviting Field Ripe for Home Missionary Effort.

WITH the conclusion of the labors of the Joint Peace Commission at Paris, and the acceptance of our terms by Spain, Porto Rico, Guam and the Philippines, including the Sulu Islands, become colonial possessions of the United States, and Cuba is also relinquished to our keeping to be hereafter disposed of as our government may decide. Our title to these vast new possessions has now been ratified, and the way is open for American civilization and enterprise to confer upon the people who have come under our charge the benefits of which they have been so long deprived.

One of the first considerations which naturally appeals to the thoughtful American is that the religious freedom guaranteed to our new possessions, heretofore kept in slavish ignorance and darkness by the medieval religious policy of Spain, should be made a reality with as little delay as possible. The islands offer a field for missionary effort such as can be found nowhere else on the globe, and the inhabitants, as far as can be learned from the most authentic sources, are ready to welcome Christian workers and the Gospel with open arms and responsive hearts.

While THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in conformity with its policy on all previous occasions where Gospel effort was involved, will cheerfully render whatever assistance lies within the scope of its influence to the spiritual workers in our new territories, it meanwhile invites the attention and sympathetic interest of its family of readers to the opportunities Porto Rico affords for the beginning of a work specially calculated to enlist their energies and to repay their efforts. The population of Porto Rico is estimated at 800,000—now all Americans, and looking to the Stars and Stripes not only for protection, but also for enlightenment and blessing. Their country is pictured by those who have visited almost every nook and corner of it as the "garden spot of the world." Columbus, who discovered it on Nov. 16, 1493, during his second voyage, gave it the name of Puerto Rico, or "Rich Port." It has an area of 3,668 square miles, and many beautiful towns and villages. It is the healthiest of the West Indian group and one of the richest in varied products. Yet with all its natural advantages, Porto Rico lacks many of the elements that are essential to the happiness of its people.

Although education has been nominally free, only about seven per cent. of the population can read and write, the reason being that the 31,541 pupils in the schools of the island, under the direction of the Catholic Church, are drilled in the ceremonial and devotional exercises of the Romish ritual, and taught the innumerable legends and traditions of the Catholic saints, instead of the rudiments of a common school education. Their school buildings are mostly mere sheds, while their cathedrals and military barracks are in a style that is palatial in comparison. Now that the island is under American control, our public school system will be introduced, and substantial and permanent advantages will be reaped by the children of Porto Rico.

There is at the present time only one Protestant church on the whole island—that shown in the photograph on this page. It is a cheap, temporary, unsubstantial building, located in the city of Ponce, a great commercial centre, and the second city of importance on the island. When our soldiers arrived at Ponce, after the capitulation, they found the little church closed, and it was quite evident that the "religious tolerance," boasted of by Spain in its West Indian dominions, had here a characteristic exemplification.

With nearly a quarter of a million children, Porto Rico has not a single Sunday School. Mariolatry, image-worship, and every form of monkish belief and superstition, the Romish church inculcates on young and old, but religious education, and especially for the children, is unknown. It is not surprising that they should grow up with a confused notion of spiritual things, with no conception of the Saviour and his Divine mission, and without chart or compass to guide them on the voyage of life. These children are now Americans. They belong to our beloved Union just as much as do our little ones of the West and South and North and East. We have taken them into the fold, and shall we deny them the advantages our other little ones enjoy? They are not in need of material things, for their fertile island supplies all that is necessary from its own rich soil, but they need our help, nevertheless. We will shortly send them teachers and school books and all the paraphernalia of properly equipped class-rooms for secular education. Let us not forget to give them, also, the higher training in things spiritual. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD believes it to be one of the first duties incumbent upon us in Porto Rico, to open Sunday Schools and to gather in the children in every city, town and village under the banner of that blessed One who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

This is a Christ-like work in which our readers, who have already done so much for the children of our land, can heartily join. Through their generous co-operation, many Sunday Schools have been founded in our Western and Southwestern States, from some of which churches have sprung where the Gospel is now preached with power and blessing. If only a beginning of Sunday School work were made in Porto Rico, where the field is ripe for the harvesters, who can say what glorious results might not follow? With schools established at Ponce, San Juan and Mayaguez, the movement would quickly extend to all parts of the island, and thousands of the dusky-skinned Porto Rican girls and boys, who, till now, have never heard a line or syllable of the beautiful Gospel message, would learn of the gentle Saviour.

Teachers, Testaments in the native tongue, Sunday School cards and general material for the work will be needed, but these it will not be difficult to supply. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be pleased to hear from any of its readers who may feel drawn to this work among the little neglected children of Porto Rico. It is not a mission to far-distant Africa or China, but a home mission, right at our doors and among those who are now of our own family and household, and whom we should love to lead into the light of Gospel truth and liberty. Any contributions for the work forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 12 Bible House, New York, will be acknowledged and applied toward the establishment of pioneer Sunday Schools in Porto Rico. Announcements of the work will be made in these columns from time to time as it progresses.

A CHRISTMAS LESSON.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 25. Hebrews 1: 1-9. Golden Text, Luke 2: 11.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

"THERE is born to you this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." It was a message from heaven, but few were awake to hear it that momentous night in Bethlehem; and ever since, it has been only the few of Jews or Gentiles who have realized that he "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting" (Micah 5: 2), was really born in our human nature in Bethlehem, that he might in person bring the message of God the Father, in the most direct way, to fallen and lost man. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" (John 1: 1); but only when "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (John 1: 14), did God speak unto us in his Son. "Of old time, by divers portions and by divers manners," he had spoken "unto the fathers in the prophets" (Heb. 1: 1, R.V.); "holy men of old speaking from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost" (II. Peter 1: 21; I. Peter 1: 11), but now in his unutterable condescension, he comes nearer still; no less a Personage than God the Son, speaks the message from God the Father.

Who then is he in whom God speaks to us, who are even unworthy to receive his communications through our fellow creatures? "His Son, whom he has appointed heir to all things, through whom also he made the ages" (Heb. 1: 2, R. V.). Have we seen in the simple Carpenter of Nazareth, the open-air Preacher of the villages of Galilee, the crucified Redeemer of Calvary, the rightful Heir of this vast universe? Have we realized who it is we accept or reject as our Saviour and our King? Have we realized the majesty of him who could wash his disciples' feet, and be among such fallible representatives as "He that serveth" (Luke 22: 27), while he was all the time the brightness or effulgence of the Father's glory, the very image of his substance, upholding all things by the Word of his power? Has it dawned upon us how great is the impertinence, the presumption, of doubting any word of his who upholdeth all things "by the Word of his power?"

Have we understood the majesty of that humility which could afford to come so low, without losing anything of his inherent power and glory? Do we appreciate that one who was less exalted could not have taken upon him the form of a servant, and been made in the likeness of man, and become obedient unto death, even the death of the cross? (Phil. 2: 7, 8). It would have been irretrievable loss to an angel. But he who "was before all things, and by whom all things consist" (Col. 1: 17), could go down to the lowest parts of the earth in every sense, to the lowest depth of suffering and the lowest depth of shame; could go through death, and yet rise out of all to take again his place of power and glory. "When he had made purification of sins [he] sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high," far above all rule, and authority, and power, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age, but in that which is to come, and God hath "put all things in subjection under his feet." (Eph. 1: 21: 22, R.V., margin).

Have we seen and understood all that this means for us, if so be that we enter into the purposes of God for us? Who is it that is now seated at the right hand of God? God the Son from everlasting. Yes, but also one whom it behooved "in all things to be made like unto his brethren, of one order with them, for which cause he is not ashamed to call us brethren!" (Heb. 2: 11). Our brother Man is seated there as our Representative, our Guarantee that he has as Man won that place for them "that are sanctified" (ver. 11). How trifling, how utterly insignificant are those things for which most men live, compared with the glory of eternal oneness with our God! And yet how few there are who will go the way of the cross of death and shame, to reach life eternal, the glory and the throne!

Our beloved Lord is not only our Saviour, but also our Example and Pattern. "Even he, as Man, must descend that he might ascend" (Eph. 4: 9), and none can follow him without treading the same path. He has, as Man, become by so much better than the angels as he hath inherited a more excellent name than they." The angels have never known the position of Son. "And when he bringeth the First-born into the world he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him" (R. V.), and yet he must first share with man his place a little lower than the angels. In him was life, and the Life was the light of man, but death had "passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5: 12), and he might overcome death, and bring "life and immortality to light through the Gospel" (II. Tim. 1: 10), our Lord must himself become obedient unto death. As Man, he was counted "of more glory than Moses" (Heb. 3: 3), and yet Moses never had a more obedient disciple, for he could challenge his enemies who judged by the law of Moses, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" (John 8: 46), and not one of them could take up the challenge. He obeyed Moses that he might excel Moses, he obeyed death that he might conquer death, he was made lower than the angels that he might prove he was better than the angels. And equally so he obeyed the Levitical priesthood, observed the law, and worshiped in the temple, while he was bringing in "a better hope," was "made Surety of a better covenant established on better promises" (Heb. 7: 19, 22; 8: 6), and was made a Priest not after the law of commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

When our Lord came on earth, they were few indeed who knew what had happened when the Son of man was born. How many on this Christmas Day will enter into the joy of the Lord, or be one with him in his thoughts and purposes? How many will think of how to honor him who by becoming man has put such honor upon man?

The simple shepherds of Bethlehem have a readier response to the heart of our heavenly Father, than all those who with gorgeous ritual, and studied form, proclaim either the devotion or sacerdotal pride which exalts man, and hides the grace of our holy and most loving God. In his grace he has made a wondrous gift to the world, and he seeks from us not our gifts, but ourselves. His gift was himself. Nothing less than ourselves is an adequate acknowledgment of the gift of God, Christ Jesus our Lord. He does not seek from us services which, however beautiful the music, do not bring us into face to face communion with him. He seeks our hearts to dwell in and our lives to shine through.

In these days of ritualism and formalism, it is well to recall the simplicity of our Lord's first advent; the humble Jewish maiden who was the mother of our Lord; the extreme poverty of the surroundings when he came into the world; the ready journey of the shepherds to Bethlehem, and their unquestioning adoration; the simple faith and devotion of the magi, while the choir which sang glory to God was far unlike that of singers, many of whom have no heart whatever in the holy words they utter.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ONLY one subject is appropriate for our lesson on Christmas Day. Interesting, as have been the quarter's lessons which ordinarily would have been reviewed on this Sunday, they are dwarfed into insignificance by the momentous event which all Christendom has agreed to celebrate on this day. They told the story of sin and punishment, but this speaks to us of the birth of the Saviour. The story of the Hebrew nations may serve as a warning, but the story of the Advent touches us at the very centre of life. This was the event for which the world had waited from the beginning. Its supreme need was that of a Saviour. Legislators and prophets and poets had delivered their messages, but the world was still struggling in the toils of sin. What it needed was a Deliverer who could strike off the fetters and give the feeble sufferers power to rise and live. The mystery of the Incarnation, we can never fathom, but of the fact, there can be no doubt in the mind of the Christian. Such a life as that of Christ, could be no other than that of God in the flesh. It was a revelation. There has been no life that so fully expressed the qualities of Divinity. And its power still continues. The personal form, which gave physical life and healing by a touch, has ascended; but the spiritual presence, which imparts life and vigor to the dead soul, is still with us and in every generation works its wonders. God speaks to us in his Son, and every soul that listens and believes, receives power to become a son of God.

"The Brightness of His Glory and Express Image of His Person."

His Son. The Emperor Theodosius the Great, who denied the divinity of Christ and persecuted all who professed their faith in it, in his old age made his son a partner in his throne, and declared him entitled to all the honors of royalty equally with himself. He assembled all the chief men of the empire at the installation to do honor to the young prince. Among them came Amphilocus, a bishop who had been persecuted for preaching the divinity of Christ. He made his obeisance to the king, and delivered an address renewing on his own behalf and that of his people pledges of loyalty. He was then about to depart when Theodosius recalled him. "Have you nothing to say to my son?" he inquired. "Do you not know that he is equal with myself and that I will have him honored?" Amphilocus bowed. "Your Majesty is jealous," he said, "for your son's honor, but how think you does God feel, when in every part of your empire, by your own command, his co-equal and eternal Son is slighted and despised?"

Better than the angels. A well-known writer tells of a dream in which he saw a young man walking on the edge of a precipice. Above him was an angel evidently distressed by the young man's danger. He wanted to save him, but the youth could not feel the touch of his hands nor see his would-be deliverer. But presently a man appeared who stopped the youth and pointed out his danger. He turned around and was saved. Then the dreamer saw the angel rejoice that the work he longed to do, but could not do, was done by one feebler than himself. Christ had to be made lower than the angels to save men.

Above thy fellows. A number of literary men, in the early years of this century, were assembled at a friendly meeting. The conversation drifted to the great men of the past. "What a sensation it would make," said one, "if the immortal Dante were to enter such an assembly as this! How we should honor the author of the 'Inferno!' "Or suppose," said another, "Shakespeare were to step into the room." "Ah!" said Charles Lamb, "I would be first to greet that king of thoughtful men!" Other names were mentioned, and then some one said, "Suppose Jesus Christ entered the company, what then?" No one spoke for a moment, but Carlyle broke the silence by saying, "If he came, we should all fall down and worship."

Hath spoken to us by his Son. A Persian legend tells of a certain man who had two sons. The younger was wayward and grieved his father by his perversity. His career of wrong-doing culminated in his forging his father's name and flying to escape the consequences of his crime. Nothing was heard of him for several years. Eventually word came that the young man had joined a band of Koordish brigands and had become a robber. His father mourned over his fate, and one day he said in his elder son's hearing, that if the misguided youth would only return, even yet he would forgive him. The elder son, who loved his brother, set out the same day for the mountain fastness in which the Koords lived, that he might carry to his brother the assurance of his father's forgiveness. It was a dangerous mission, as he well knew. Before he reached the cave, he was waylaid by the brigands, and was robbed and severely wounded. The robbers carried him to their cave, and there he saw his brother. With his dying breath he told his story and begged the wanderer to go home. The prodigal listened in amazement. The love of his father in sending the message, and the love of his brother who died in delivering it, overcame him. Sorrowfully and with many tears he went back to his father's house, a redeemed and repentant man.

JERUSALEM'S DAY OF SPLENDOR.

The Holy City Decked Like a Bride to Welcome Emperor William—The Emperor Weeps on Olivet and Thrills his Auditors with Gospel Truths in his Address at the Consecration of the New Church—Our Special Correspondent's Description of the Memorable Occasion.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S journey to the Holy Land is now a thing of the past, but the letter which appears below, and which was received only a few days ago from a special correspondent in Palestine, is of such general interest that even at this date we venture to give it for the information of our readers who have perused the accounts of the Kaiser's Eastern pilgrimage as they appeared in these columns from week to week. Besides, the illustration is a remarkable one, being the only photograph of the royal entry that has yet been received in this country. Our special correspondent writes as follows:

"The Royal Party entered the city at three o'clock through dense crowds such as were never seen here before, and visited the Holy Sepulchre. At five P. M., at the home of the German Consul, there was an official reception given by the Emperor and Empress to the Consular corps, including the Consular ladies and various officials. Here the Emperor and Empress shook hands with each person and exchanged greetings, or held a few words of conversation. Six days later their Majesties left Jerusalem for Jaffa on their way to Damascus.

"Among the many features of this wonderful visit its religious character has been very noticeable. If the occasion was unusual the opportunities were likewise unusual for calling forth an expression of the Emperor's views on Christianity, on Christian work, and the Christian life. For example, the royal party dedicated a new Orphan Asylum in Bethlehem on Sunday morning, the thirtieth, and later the same morning they attended divine service in the beautiful German church in Bethlehem. On the afternoon of that day they held a private devotional service in the open air on the summit of the Mount of Olives. At this service there was throughout the deepest feeling of reverence, and while on their knees, those nearest to the Emperor and Empress noticed that tears were coursing down the royal cheeks as the leader of the informal meeting spoke of the last days of the Master's life on earth, and of the ascension from near that spot of the glorified Christ. On Tuesday, the Emperor received from the Sultan a parcel of ground on Mount Zion, and, with appropriate exercises, set it apart for a cemetery for his subjects here. One afternoon he visited the new English church to look at the font, which had been presented by his grandmother, Queen Victoria. On Thursday afternoon, the day before leaving Jerusalem, special divine services were held in the new church that had been dedicated on the previous Monday.

"Their Majesties also visited the German Orphanage for Syrian Boys, under the care of the venerable Herr Schneller, also the school of the Kaiserswerth Deaconesses, which Sister Charlotta has presided over for more than forty years, and the Kaiserswerth Hospital, of which, as of all the German institutions here, the German people have a right to be proud.

"After the service on Sunday morning in the church at Bethlehem, when the crowd had nearly all dispersed, the Emperor called the German pastors together in a small group about his person, and addressed them for ten minutes upon the subject of personal religion in their own hearts, their personal work for Christ in this part of the East where God had called them to labor, and upon their personal loyalty to the great doctrines of the evangelical faith. The writer, while the address was being delivered, stood only a few feet from the Emperor, where he could observe his manner, watch the movements of his face, which showed great earnestness, and hear his words, which were full of reverence, helpfulness and cheer.

"The presence of their Majesties was an inspiration likewise to the humble, patient workers in the hospital and schools that have been mentioned. With the aged Schneller and Sister Charlotta they spent several hours, inquiring into all the phases of their work, listening to the history of their saint-like perseverance amid many obstacles, and of the slow but successful growth, and speaking to them heartiest words of encouragement. In the hospital every room was visited, children were taken in her arms by the Empress, pleasant words were spoken to the sick in the wards, and a list of the needs of the hospital, new surgical instruments, conveniences for the operating room, and many comforts were made by the royal secretary at the Empress's dictation.

"The events of Monday, the 31st of October, when the Evangelical Church was consecrated, were of world-wide interest. It was the grandest day for Protestantism that Jerusalem has ever seen. Greeks, Latins and Anglicans have, by doctrine and practice placed the church above Christ; but on this day it was felt that Christ was above the church. This church, now the largest and finest in Jerusalem, was crowded to its utmost capacity. Majestic is the only word that will describe the music on this occasion. The orchestra brought by the Emperor from Berlin, the great organ played by a master hand, hundreds of well-trained German voices all blending in one full, rich volume of sound, especially when Luther's famous hymn, "Ein feste Burg" was sung, stirred one's soul to its very depths. The sermon of Pastor Hoppe was full of the Spirit of the day. After the services the Emperor rose and in a clear, strong voice read to the congregation an eloquent address appropriate to the completion of this house of worship. Before him lay an open Bible that had been contributed by his grandmother, signed with her own hand, 'Augusta Victoria.' The address was strong in its statements of Christian truths. It expressed the convictions of one who had firm faith in the Gospel of Christ for the needs of a sinful world. We rejoiced that day and we still rejoice that the foremost representatives of a strong and intelligent nation lifted up in this ancient city a mighty voice for the simple, satisfying truths of our evangelical faith."

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM.

This photograph (which was taken expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), shows the royal cortege at the moment the Emperor, on horseback, was under the triumphal arch which had been erected on the Jaffa road, just outside of the Holy City. The Empress is in the nearest carriage.

Inconvenient Compensation.

A singer, making a tour of the world, stopped at the Society Islands. A few foreigners there invited her to give a concert, agreeing that she should have one-third of the gross proceeds. The Popular Science Monthly, giving this incident as an illustration of the inconvenience of being without coined money and bank bills, states the outcome thus: "The concert was well attended by the natives, who came from all parts of the islands. When the receipts were counted, the singer found that her share consisted of several pigs, fowls, goats, and a large quantity of bananas and tropical fruits. As she could not consume any considerable portion of her share, and as her live stock soon suffered from hunger, it became necessary to feed one part of her wealth to the other part, and she left the islands little richer than she came."

MY FATHER'S HOUSE.

St. John 14 2.

MY heart is sick for my Father's house,
I want to go home to-day.
The road has been rough to my weary feet,
Still his love has lightened the way.
Oh, the glory of seeing his face!
The glory of his smile! [heart,
And the peace that will come to my weary
As I rest by the gates awhile!

There I will leave all care and pain,
And all the fear of sin,
And with one great, glad shout,
I will run, and enter in.
In through the pearly gates,
Into the city fair,
Then will I see Him as He is,
And remain forever there.

MRS. M. STEVES.

BRIEF NOTES.

Sweden is said to be the most Protestant country in the world. Out of a population of over four and a half millions, there are only 810 Roman Catholics.

In Nyassaland, Africa, where twenty years ago missionaries entered at the peril of their lives, 4,000 converts, recently gathered, spent five days in meditation, prayer and song, and one day 284 converts were baptized.

Roberts College, Constantinople, has completed its thirty-fifth year, and has been so successful that it is overcrowded with students, not only from Turkey, but from all the surrounding countries. There are now 250 students in the college.

Rev. S. Hall Young, of the Yukon District of Alaska, is prepared to give addresses on the territory and its mission field. Churches desiring to learn the facts from one who has the merit of being a personal observer should hear him. His address is the Presbyterian Home Mission Board, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The Presidency of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, left vacant by the death of Dr. John Hall, has been filled by the election of Rev. D. Stuart Dodge. Mr. Dodge is the son of the late Hon. William E. Dodge, and is well known for his deep interest in all philanthropic and religious work. He was formerly a missionary in Syria.

The death is announced of Mr. Cheyne Brady, the famous writer of tracts, who, for more than thirty years has been a most active worker in that field. Mr. Brady was a lawyer, an Irishman by birth, and a most eloquent speaker. He traveled extensively in this country, Germany, France, Italy and Switzerland, always in Christ's service. He was 81 years old when he died.

Dr. E. Payson Hammond has just concluded a two months' evangelistic tour of Minnesota and Nebraska. The attendance at all the services had been very large and great numbers have made profession of faith and have joined the churches. At Fremont, Neb., no less than 182 gave in their names to the evangelist as determined, in Christ's strength, to lead new lives.

The congregation of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., was startled on Nov. 27 by the resignation of the pastor, Dr. Lyman Abbott. He expressed his sincere regret at giving up the pulpit, but said that his physician had warned him of the danger of continuing both his pastoral and literary labors. He therefore felt it incumbent on him to resign the office he has held since the death of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, about eleven years ago.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has been holding successful evangelistic services in Boston, Mass. They commenced on November 27 with great meetings in the Clarendon Street Baptist Church, the scene of the labors of the late Dr. A. J. Gordon. Dr. Munhall's services in Minneapolis, Minn., in which eight churches united, were a source of wonderful blessing. Following those was a campaign at Centralia, Ill., in which large numbers made profession of faith in Christ.

At the Annual Convention of the Church of the Disciples, recently held at Chattanooga, Tenn., it was stated that the Missionary Society connected with the church had an income last year of $41,345, a gain of $3,446 over the preceding year. The report shows a gain of $6,352 in the offering of the churches, an increase of 316 in the number of contributing churches. The secretaries believe the offerings would have amounted to much more but for the wave of war excitement that swept over the country at that time. This society sustains altogether, or in part, 401 evangelists and pastors in all parts of the country. The work of the year shows: Churches organized, 234; Bible schools organized, 203; additions, 23,604.

The number of immigrants who came to this country in the twelve months ended June 30th was 218,502. Besides these, 10,737 came via Canada, making a total immigration of 229,239. Of these the males were 135,775; females, 93,524. The total amount of money they brought with them was $3,852,077. The largest number from any one country was 58,613, who came from Italy. Austria is next on the list with 39,797 and Russia next with 27,221, and Ireland fourth with 25,128.

Rev. J. McClure Bellows, the brilliant young pastor of Grace Church, Norwalk, Conn., comes of a family whose members have rendered distinguished service for the Gospel in pulpit and on platform. His eloquent sermons attract many hearers from Hartford, New Haven and Bridgeport. His spiritual fire and forceful oratory strongly recall the style and manner of the late Dr. Phillips Brooks. His pastorate has already been productive of excellent spiritual results and has made a deep impression upon the people of Norwalk and vicinity.

Detroit, Mich., journals say that Countess Schimmelman, the famous Danish evangelist, who is now visiting this country, has had a providential escape from death. While making a tour of the lakes in her yacht, she accidentally fell in stepping across a plank from the yacht to the dock. Her son witnessed her fall and plunged into the water after her. She was unconscious when he brought her up, but she soon recovered her senses, and is now well on the way to recovery. The Countess has done so much good in European lands that her escape will be the cause of much thankfulness.

Christ in Winter.

AT this season all Christendom celebrates the birth of Christ. Step down out of your comfortable surroundings into the chill December night of Bethlehem. Two plain people are hotelled in a village barn after a walk of eighty miles, too long a trudge for one in poor health. No lords of state waiting in ante-chamber, as when other kings are born. No messengers mounted at the doorway ready to herald the advent from city to city. No medical skill in attendance. No satin-lined cradle to receive the infantile guest. But a monarch born in the hostelry called the house of Chimham, the night with diamonded finger pointing down to the place, the door of heaven set wide open to look out: from orchestral batons of light dripping the "Oratorio of the Messiah;" on lowest doorstep of heaven the minstrels of God discoursing of glory and good will. But why Christmas in Winter instead of Spring or Summer? Ah! Christ was born in a Winter month.

HAD he been born in the month of June—that is the season of roses. Had he been born in the month of July—that is the season of great harvests. Had he been born in the month of September—that is the season of ripe orchards. Had he been born in the month of October—that is the season of upholstered forests. But he was born in the month of December when there are no flowers blooming out of doors, and when all the harvests that have not been gathered up have perished, and when there are no fruits ripening on the hill, and when the leaves are drifted over the bare earth.

* * *

IT was in closing December that he was born, to show that this is a Christ for people in sharp blast, for people under clouded sky, for people with frosted hopes, for people with thermometer below zero, for people snowed under. A December Christ! That is the reason he is so often found among the destitute. You can find him on any night coming off the moors. You can see him any night coming through the dark lanes of the city. You can see him putting his hand under the fainting head in the pauper's cabin. He remembers how the wind whistled around the caravansary in Bethlehem that December night, and he is in sympathy with all who in their poverty hear the shutters clatter on a cold night.

IT was this December Christ that Washington and his army worshiped at Valley Forge when without blankets they lay down in the December snow. It was this Christ that the Pilgrim Fathers appealed to when the Mayflower wharfed at Plymouth Rock, and in the years that went by the graves digged were more in number than the houses built. Oh, I tell you we want a December Christ, not a Christ for fair weather, but a Christ for dark days clouded with sickness, and chilling with disappointment, and suffocating with bereavement, and terrific with wide open graves. Not a Springtime Christ, not a Summer Christ, not an Autumnal Christ, but a Winter Christ.

* * *

OH, this suffering and struggling world needs to be hushed and soothed and rocked and lullabied in the arms of sympathetic omnipotence. No mother ever with more tenderness put her foot on the rocker of the cradle of a sick child than Christ comes down to us, to this invalid world, and he rocks it into placidity and quietness as he says, "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

Nothing Merely Happens So.

IT seemed to be a very insignificant event when Edwin Forrest, the actor, entered one of the street-cars of New York and wilfully and spitefully stepped on the toes of Charles O'Conor, the great lawyer, but that started an antipathy, which ended not until Charles O'Conor had risen in his legal wrath and spoiled the actor's social life for ever. It seemed to be a matter of no importance that Tamerlane had a chill one day, but he had planned the extermination of nations, and he had that chill of which he died, and that one chill decided the destiny of a century. All events connected with all other events.

About the middle of the last century a poor shoemaker's boy leaves at the roadside a bundle of mended shoes in order that he may study a flower of the field and pick up a moth and put it in the crown of his hat and carry it home for more deliberate study of the construction of the moth. Who has any interest in that? You have when I tell you that was the dawn of the career of one who translated the Holy Scriptures into thirty-six versions, and who became the greatest of Oriental linguists, and made the governments of the earth bow before him—William Carey. A straight line reached from that lad studying the weed in the field to the eminent scholarship that decorated the Church and decorated the world.

An American clergyman had a son, Adoniram, of wonderful brightness, and the father used to pat the boy on the head and say: "Adoniram, you will be a great man yet," and the son's pride was flattered, and he studied very hard and became so familiar with the Latin that they called him "Old Virgil Dug Up." But one day the lad came across a book entitled "Embassy to Ava," and it revolutionized his heart and his life, and one eventide, when the father was seated with his family about him and talking over the bright worldly prospects of the young man, the father said: "Dr. Griffin has been here, Adoniram, to see you: he wants you to become his colleague in Boston." And then the mother and the sisters were gratulating at the thought that the son and brother was going to live all his life near home. Then the young man told them how he had read the "Embassy to Ava," and that it had revolutionized him, and that he intended spending his whole life in preaching the Gospel in India. That which seems unimportant may decide our temporal and eternal destiny.

All About Our Premium Offers

THE attention of subscribers is respectfully directed to our remarkable premium propositions. Never before have we had such a surprisingly varied and unusually attractive array.

In the first place, we mention, of course, our Revised Teachers' Bible in Verse Form. Heretofore the Revised Bible was issued only in paragraph form, which rendered it very unfamiliar to the eye, and made it exceptionally difficult to find any particular passage. Then there were no helps, and only a very few had references, while the price was unreasonably high.

But all this has been done away with by the enterprise of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our Revised Bible is in verse form; it has sub-divisions conforming precisely to those in the Authorized Version; it has full references, Teachers' Helps, a Word Book, including Concordance, and the usual number of maps. But over and above all, the price has been brought down so that we offer this superior and exceptionally helpful book in divinity circuit, red under gold edges, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at only $2.00.

Now, if you have another dollar to spare, and can make it convenient to send us $3.00, we will send you a Revised Bible, divinity circuit, with leather-lining, and thumb-index, particularly attractive and specially prepared with a view to durability. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of course, goes with it for a year, at the price mentioned. The richer Bible is worth three of the other, if lasting qualities and thumb-index, leather-lining, and a soft, velvety, flexible book have any special attractions for you. We always prepay express charges.

All that we have said about the Revised Bible is also applicable to our Authorized Version. You may have the one or the other at the same price. Both of them are printed from large, long primer type. The binding is identical. The same difference is maintained between the $2.00 and the $3.00 propositions. If you want to know just how large a book we offer, take a rule and measure from top to bottom 9 inches, and from right to left 13½ inches, and the space thus outlined indicates the exact size of our Bibles when open. They are very handy, very superior, very legible, and very durable; the best the market affords.

Next in order is, of course, the Art Bible, with its 852 pictures, and its large type. Pictures are object lessons which frequently prove of more assistance to a correct understanding than long and tedious lectures, and the memory is far more apt to retain what the eye has seen than what the ear has heard. This beautiful book is elegantly bound in divinity circuit, American levant, red under gold edges, and can be sent (owing to our purchase of 25,000 of them), with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year for only $3.50. It would be cheap at double the price. Text only—no references.

Margaret E. Sangster has prepared for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this year the crowning effort of her long and honored literary career, and she has christened it "The Art of Home-Making." It is truly a fine book, and does great credit to this warm hearted, genial authoress, who has given months of patient, careful and prayerful toil to the preparation of this helpful, inspiring and beautiful volume. It is a fine specimen of modern book-making, bound in olive silk-finished cloth, with red and gilt decoration, and measures when open 9 x 15 1-2 inches. Sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, all charges prepaid, for only $2.00.

"Around the World with Eyes Wide Open," is a book among books, and Dr. Tupper, its author, has exercised remarkable skill in its preparation, whether considered from a literary or artistic standpoint. Never was a more attractive book on travel given to the world, even at ten times the price. In its pages we find the world as it is to-day, pictorialized and described, and Palestine of modern time can be studied to better advantage in this volume than by means of a hurried trip, such as was recently taken by the German Emperor. This book is the same size as "The Art of Home-Making" described above, and contains 464 pages bound in linen cloth, with white paneling and rich red and gold decoration. No book that we have ever offered sells more rapidly or gives greater satisfaction "Around the World with Eyes Wide Open," together with the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, all charges prepaid, only $2.00.

The next in order are our Libraries, No. 2 and No. 3, each consisting of ten volumes beautifully bound in silk-finished cloth or vellum, and aggregating 3,200 pages. The ten books and book-case weigh nearly six pounds, all of which are sent, all charges prepaid, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, at only $3.00. The fact that we have sold nearly 200,000 of these libraries demonstrates their popularity without further comment. Remember, there are ten books in each Library, large type, beautifully printed and elegantly bound, and these ten books and book-case, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are sent charges prepaid, for $3.00—surely a marvelous offer that will not long go begging.

Finally, we offer the Hon. Wm. M. Thayer's heart-stirring book "Onward to Fame and Fortune." It is full of action, full of enthusiasm, full of inspiration, and from cover to cover reads like a romance. It contains nearly 500 pages, and is beautifully bound in Turkey red, with artistic side and back stamp, same size as "Around the World with Eyes Wide Open" and "The Art of Home-Making." It is sent, together with the CHRISTIAN HERALD, for one year for only $2.00. You may believe us when we say that you cannot make a mistake by selecting this book of energizing, vitalizing, soul-stirring power.

Best of All.

To any and every subscriber to the CHRISTIAN HERALD who will accept any of the above offers, if he will add One Dollar to the amount called for by the proposition selected, we will send, for one whole year, THE COSMOPOLITAN every month, and Success every week—52 times.

Or, if already a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, send $1.00 more for these two publications. It will not do to send half the amount for either one of them. You may have each publication sent to a different address, or all to the same address, without extra charges.

* * * *

Please act promptly this year. By so doing you help us, you help yourself, you help the Post Office authorities and you help the transportation companies.

AWAITING VINDICATION.

GRAVE apprehensions for the stability of the republic in France are aroused by the latest developments of the Dreyfus case. The military power has asserted itself over the civil power by arresting Col. Picquart, who has made himself obnoxious to it by his disclosure of facts favorable to the prisoner, and is holding him for trial by Court-martial. That the generals in command of the army should have taken this high-handed course while the highest court in the land is dealing with the Dreyfus case, suggests the suspicion that the generals are driven to desperate measures and are prepared to establish a military despotism. As the Paris correspondent of an American journal says, the generals "are fighting with ropes around their necks," and are aware that if the truth is known they will be publicly disgraced. It is not yet known what facts have been elicited by the inquiry of the court as to the trial at which Captain Dreyfus was found guilty; but the statements made outside the court show that it was grossly unfair. It is now known that the seven officers who condemned him, did not decide the case on the evidence produced at the trial, but on certain papers shown to them privately, and which were not disclosed to the prisoner or his counsel. One of these documents has been proved to be a forgery, and there is good reason for believing that none of them were genuine. On such evidence the prisoner was sentenced to lifelong imprisonment, and was sent to Devil's Island, off the coast of South America, where he has remained for nearly four years. He is imprisoned in a little hut, surrounded by a high stockade, and is watched continually by a guard who is not permitted to speak to him. It is hoped that the court will insist on his being brought back to France, to appear personally in his own defence. There is little doubt in the minds of unprejudiced persons in France and of the public outside of France, that the man is innocent of the crime charged against him and is being unjustly punished. The fact of his being a Jew and that his enemies are ante-Semites indicates this. He appears to have been the victim of a plot devised by persons who ignored the divine warning:

To turn aside the right of a man before the face of the Most High, to subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not (Lam. 3 : 35).

THE PRISON OF CAPT. DREYFUS ON DEVIL'S ISLAND, OFF FRENCH GUIANA.

Lost Identity.

A press dispatch from Binghamton, N. Y., describes a case in the State Hospital there, which is puzzling the physicians. He was found in the streets of the city several weeks ago suffering from a severe blow that he had received on his head. He was unable to give any account of himself, or even to remember his name. He has fully recovered from his injury and is in good health, but his mind is an utter blank as to his past history. One evening lately he went with some other convalescents to witness the feats of a Japanese juggler, who was performing in the city. He seemed deeply interested in the performance, and surprised his attendants by declaring that he could do things a great deal more wonderful than had been done by the juggler. He was allowed to go on the stage, and he there performed feats of sleight-of-hand which astonished every spectator. He has evidently been a professor of conjuring, but there is as much mystery as to his identity as ever. The curious thing about the case is that the skill of the man should have survived while his memory, even of his name and former life and occupation, should have lapsed. It shows that what a man is in the habit of doing is fixed in his nature, and becomes a part of him. This fact is a terrible one for those who are hoping to put away their sin and reform before they die, or even to be saved after death. God's Word intimates that even if they were admitted to heaven they would not be able to renounce their sin.

Let favor be showed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly (Isaiah 26 : 10.)

Who was the Painter?

Inquiries are being made, says a trade journal, for the man who painted the station sign at Harper's Ferry, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The sign was painted and put up fully thirty years ago. Its letters are to-day as fresh as when it was first painted. Neither the sun nor the storms have dimmed their lustre. The wood on which the sign is painted has been warped, and its surface has been eaten away by the sand driven against it by the wind to the depth of a sixteenth of an inch; but the paint has not been in the least affected. It is stated that there is no paint known to the trade that would endure so long, and inquiries are being made for the man who mixed it, in the hope of discovering his secret. If he is living and will disclose it, he may make a large fortune by his knowledge. He has only to manufacture such paint as he used on that old sign, to sell it in unlimited quantities, and be rich beyond the dream of avarice. In this, as in other walks of life, the thing men want is the thing that will endure. Religious teachers sometimes disregard this fact, otherwise they would take more care that their teaching contained the elements of God's truth which lasts forever. There are many to whom the warning uttered by the prophet to the false teachers of his day applies:

When the wall is fallen, shall it not be said to you: Where is the daubing wherewith you have daubed it? (Ezekiel 13 : 12).

Dangerous Water.

A petrifying spring has been found in Texas. A San Antonio journal says that a party of hunters accompanied by a ranchman were recently hunting in Zapata County. They encamped one day on a dry arroyo, and, as their canteens were empty, sent one of their number on a search for water. He returned unsuccessful, and then six of the party set out to make a systematic search. More than half an hour elapsed before a shout from one of the searchers announced that water was found. He had found a spring under a shelving bank. Two or three of the men went down to it with the empty canteens. But they hesitated about filling them when they examined the little lake that filled a basin about four feet in diameter and three feet deep. The water was warm and had a milky appearance. One of the men picked up a branch of a tree, one end of which had fallen into the lake. He was astonished to find that the end that was in the water was quite heavy, and on looking at it he saw that it was turned to stone. Several twigs and leaves which the wind had carried into the lake were raked out, and they, too, had turned into stone. These were carried away as curiosities, but no one ventured to drink any of the water. They preferred to go thirsty, rather than take into their stomachs water of such powerful properties. It would be well if similar caution was used in taking into the heart thoughts and desires which harden the nature against God. The poet warns us against sins which "harden all the heart and petrify the feeling," and the Apostle intimates that such a condition is possible.

Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness (Eph. 4 : 19).

A Dog Dies of Grief.

The pathetic death of a St. Bernard dog is reported in the journals of Denver, Colo. The dog was the property of a prominent physician, who died a few weeks ago. The dog could not understand his master's disappearance. He had been accustomed to follow the doctor to the houses of his patients and wait outside during the professional visit. After the doctor's death, the dog lay in the stable, waiting for him to set out on his usual round of visits. Apparently concluding that the doctor had gone without him, he would visit the houses of his patients in turn, and sniff the doorsteps to ascertain if he was within. He would then go to the drug stores that the doctor patronized, and still not finding him, would go home disconsolate. He refused to touch food, and the doctor's hostler believes that he never slept. He wasted to a shadow, and in less than two weeks after his master's death, he died. Such love as this is rare in the world, even among more intelligent beings who have better means of showing it. If Christians had such love for their Master, their lives would be patterned on his and his presence in their hearts would be sought as the supreme joy of their lives.

Whom have I in heaven but thee and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee (Psalms 73 : 25).

An Inventor Wanted.

A Connecticut journal calls attention to the reward awaiting the genius who can invent a certain machine. The growers of sisal hemp, it says, could afford to give a large fortune to the man who could furnish them with an apparatus that could do for them what the cotton-gin has done for the Southern farmers. The Agave sisalona, from which sisal hemp is obtained, grows in Southern Florida, Cuba, Porto Rico, Jamaica, the Bahamas, and Yucatan. The full grown plant has leaves from four to six feet long, which are very thick at the base. The fibres of these leaves are stronger than hemp. When they are separated from the pulp of the leaf and dried and cleansed, they can be used for ropes. These are so tough and strong that they are preferred both by the United States and English Naval Departments to hemp, for their cables. The plant is easily cultivated but the product is limited by the difficulty of separating the fibre from the pulp. The machines now employed are far from effective, but hitherto no one has been able to improve them. Philosophers have found the same difficulty in human nature. The qualities which are good and strong and useful, are so united to those which are weak and depraved, that their efforts to bring good out of evil have failed. It is only when God himself undertakes the work that success is achieved.

I will turn my hand upon thee and purely purge away thy dross and take away all thy tin (Isa. 1. 25).

Died for Her Friend.

A sad fatality occurred at Woodside, Long Island, a few days ago. A young lady living in New York City received a letter one morning, informing her that a friend was seriously ill. She at once prepared to go to her. Her husband begged her to wait until the severe snowstorm had abated, but she insisted on setting out at once. "I am a good nurse," she said, "and perhaps if I go immediately I may be able to save her life. I dare not wait for better weather." Her husband yielded reluctantly, and saw her off. As she left the train at Woodside, she had to cross several tracks to reach the house where her friend lived. Perhaps owing to the storm and her own absorption in her mission, she did not observe a train approaching. It was not scheduled to stop at Woodside, and was going at a rapid rate. The engine struck her and killed her instantly. Her husband, to whom she was married only a year, was almost beside himself with grief when he heard the news. Such an event is one of the mysteries of Providence. One would have thought that a person intent on a mission of mercy would have been safe from such a catastrophe. But it is not by giving immunity from the ordinary accidents of life, that God rewards the good. They suffer as do the wicked, and sometimes it seems more than the wicked, but in the end they will triumph.

Though a sinner do evil an hundred times and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, who fear before him (Eccles. 8 : 12).

A Suit for a Madstone.

An interesting trial is set down for hearing at the approaching term of the law courts of Virginia. The question in dispute is the proper possessor of a famous madstone, which belonged to a lady recently deceased. The rival claimants are her nephews and nieces. Pending the decision of the court, the madstone has been deposited in the vaults of a bank at Leesburg. The history of the stone runs back to 1776, when it was brought to this country from Scotland. It is said, however, to be of much earlier date and to be the identical stone referred to by Sir Walter Scott in The Talisman. It is about two inches long, one inch wide and half an inch thick. One of the claimants says that it has been applied to hundreds of wounds inflicted by mad dogs, and in no single case has it ever failed to adhere and extract the poison from the wound. After a certain period, in some cases twenty-four hours, it falls off of its own accord. It is then immersed in plain warm water, or milk, for about half an hour. At the end of that time the water is thick with green scum. The stone, when taken out, is of its normal color and ready for use. It has been handed down as a precious treasure from one generation to another of the same family, and now that its ownership is in dispute the rival claimants are spending money freely in contesting for its possession. Yet the stone has no intrinsic value, and only in the rare case of rabies is it of any use. How it would gladden the hearts of Christ's servants if the same anxiety were manifested by the world to possess the infallible antidote for the wounds of sin, which are more deadly and common!

Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then, is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? (Jer. 8 : 22).

CHRISTMAS AT THE BETHESDA HOME.

Cheer for Unhappy Ones — Progress of the Good Samaritan Work Among the Homeless and the Fallen.

IN this blessed Christmas season, when sheltered dwellers in happy homes are giving so much attention to making the homeless ones happy, the inmates of our Bethesda Home are not forgotten. Christmas, with its memories of home, of parents and children in happy union lovingly seated around the family table, must be a time of exceptional sadness to the wayward, the outcast, and to the respectable but friendless woman, who has possessed such blessings and lost them; in the life of her who has never possessed them, there is indeed a void. Each season such preparation as is possible is made for rendering the holiday season a cheerful and blessed occasion to the desolate ones gathered around the Bethesda hearthstone. Holly wreaths are hung in place; a modest feast is provided; old inmates—many of them redeemed through its agency — drop in; interchange of small presents and kindnesses; visits and generous remembrances from the lady managers, and other friends; little prayer and praise services, fill the hours with reminders, that on this, Christ's birthday, Christianity does not forget its obligation to comfort and encourage the penitent, and to lighten the sorrows of the unfortunate.

A "PRAISE SERVICE" AMONG HOMELESS GIRLS AT THE BETHESDA, BROOKLYN.

Through generous remembrance of its inmates, our readers who are familiar with the work of the Bethesda Home have contributed to the rescue of many a friendless waif. While the original purpose of the Home is reclaiming fallen women — the class to whom Christ said: "Go and sin no more" — the rehabilitation of the inebriate has come within its scope. Also, much preventive work has been done: for the Home by no means turns from its doors respectable but destitute women. Many of this class are sheltered and work found for them.

The accommodations, though extensive, are frequently taxed beyond their full capacity, and very often mattresses are spread upon the floor rather than turn away unhappy applicants. Miss Meury, the well known rescue missionary, has found the Bethesda Home of the greatest help in her work among fallen and friendless girls; judges of Brooklyn courts, and kind ladies who visit the jails on missions of mercy, all testify to the valuable aid which the Bethesda has rendered in restoring God's estranged children to a true and self-respecting state of womanhood. Women, once inmates, tell others of the Home; many do active missionary work by seeking out troubled companions of their past lives and bringing them under its regenerative influences. A great deal of good is accomplished to and through distressed ones, not inmates, who come in to talk with the matron and her assistant, and to be prayed for; and many instances are reported of answers to prayer. One day a man called to ask the matron if his lost wife was within, and asked Miss Bleekman to pray with him that he might find her. Two days later a letter came, saying he had found her, as he believed, in answer to that prayer; adding: "Henceforth, as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Women come asking prayer that they may get work. Girls, whose work exposes them to temptation and who feel that they are drifting into bad habits, come begging for prayer that their work may be changed or that God will give them strength. The girl just learning to drink, the girl just being dragged into nameless sins, knock at the door, pleading for shelter and a chance to retrace their steps ere it be too late. Applicants are often very young.

One of the most interesting cases ever relieved there—a present inmate, about twenty-four years old—was born in India. Her father was a French Canadian, her mother a Hindu, who died at her birth. She was raised with kicks and cuffs; her father taught her to drink; when she was nine, he died; at thirteen, she worked her way to this country; has made her living since as laundress, waitress, etc.; is bright and clever. Since her admission to the Home, she has mastered the drink habit. Last month, she was baptized a Christian, is truly converted, a happy, frank, industrious girl.

Many former inmates of the Bethesda Home are helps in country homes, whose owners give good accounts of them. Others are at work in the immediate neighborhood of the Home. During the past four months there have been seventy new names enrolled as inmates. It may be said just here that some of the best work of the Home has been done in cases of girls who continued to return after each relapse until firmly established in good habits. Some guests have become valuable nurses in hospitals. A large percentage of the seventy girls mentioned above are known to have good places and to be doing well.

Efforts are made to put each girl entering the Home on a self-supporting basis at once. This is not easy, for it is very difficult to obtain outside work for beneficiaries who come under the head of fallen or homeless women, and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have been an invaluable aid to Bethesda workers. Inmates of the Home do laundry work, lace work, embroidery, crocheting, dressmaking—anything they can get to do. They show, as a rule, a laudable desire to be self-sustaining.

There is ample opportunity for any of our readers interested in this excellent work to co-operate with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in relieving the unfortunate, staying the weak and uplifting the fallen who knock at the doors of the Bethesda Home. Any contributions for the work sent to this journal will be duly acknowledged.

HIGHLAND LIGHT, OFF WHICH THE "PORTLAND" WAS WRECKED.

THE HURRICANE'S WORK.

Disasters on New England's Coast—Stories of Heroism.

THE great storm which swept the New England Coast on Saturday, and which was severely felt in all the Middle States, Nov. 26, and Sunday Nov. 27, left such havoc in its track that it will long be sadly remembered. Over a hundred vessels have been reported lost, including several large steamers. The largest loss chronicled is that of the Portland, with all on board, numbering over 160 persons.

She was a side-wheel steamer of 2,283 tons, belonging to the Portland Steam Packet Company, had weathered many storms, and was considered stanch and true. Exactly how she met her doom will never be known, but an abundance of mournful evidence indicates that she was driven southward, and went down early Sunday morning, not far from Highland Light Station. The keeper of this station is a woman, Miss Small, and she and other keepers along the Cape Cod coast have not had occasion to witness more sorrowful sights than came in the wake of this storm. From Peaked Hill Bars to Highland Station, a distance of three miles, and even as far south as Nauset and Chatham, bodies lying on the sands, part of a steamer's wheel, trunks, barrels, and all sorts of driftwood scattered along the coast testified to the wreck of the Portland and to lesser disasters. The first news brought to Provincetown was when the body of a man with a life-belt around him, bearing the words "Steamer Portland," was brought in by Surfman Bawley of High Head Station.

The city of Portland bears the heaviest share of misfortune. A hundred of the Portland's passengers were residents of that town and its suburbs. Capt. Blanchard was a citizen of Deering, Maine, and had followed the sea all his life, having served eight years as first pilot of the Portland. He was fifty-seven years old, and leaves a widow and three children. There were a number of distinguished passengers on board; among them, Hon. E. Dudley Freeman, member of the Governor's Council, ex-member of the Maine State Senate.

THE LOST S. S. PORTLAND.

During this time of trial and tempest, many heroic deeds have been recorded. Life-savers along the coast did gallant service; ships, able to weather the gale went bravely to the aid of less fortunate vessels. Eight sailors of the Hiram Lowell risked their lives to save the twenty-three passengers of the Narcissus. First officer Grove and four men of the Hiram Winter, put off from their ship in a life-boat, and at the peril of their own lives rescued Captain Jansen and his fifteen men of the Gloucester fisherman Emma M. Dyer; the British steamer Mackinaw rescued six men of the Maynard Sumner, seventy-five miles southeast of Montauk Point; the Wood Island Life-Savers, after several gallant attempts, reached the coaling vessel, Jordan L. Mott; her captain and crew of five had taken to the rigging; the former called out to the life-savers: "I can hold on; save my crew. My father is frozen to death to the mast; do not wait to cut his body down for the crew are freezing." Instances multiply, as reports come in, of how men forgot themselves in trying to save others.

Much uneasiness has been entertained concerning the missing steamer Pentagoet, of the Manhattan Steamship Company, which left New York, Friday, Dec. 26, and was due at Bangor, Me., on Monday.

News from more southern seas show that casualties were not limited to the New England coast.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

A WORK FOR CHILDREN.

How Mothers are Helping Each Other—The Mother Club Movement.

AT this holiday, more sacred to childhood than any other, it is peculiarly appropriate that this page should be graced with sweet child-faces; and that these faces should be those of little ones who promise fair to be leaders in future Mother Congresses, since their parents or grandparents are devoted workers in the Mother movement of to-day.

The shepherds came, and wise men from the East,
They poured their gifts and bent the knee:
The star had led them all the way
To where a little baby lay
On a holy mother's breast.

The star of hope and promise for our race, which began to shine in Judea when Jesus was born still guides wise men of the earth to the cradle of infancy. Even those who are not yet members of the great Christian family are giving attention to child-study and child-culture in marvelous degree, knowing that the only way to make government and society purer and better is to begin with the babies in the cradle, and also with the mothers who rock the cradles. The qualifications of school-teachers and kindergartners, and the dignity of their positions enlarge each year by reason of public demand and recognition; mothers and teachers are realizing the necessity of coming in closer touch: enlightened mothers, since "slumming" became popular, feel their obligations to mothers less fortunate, and to children not so happily mothered as their own. In fact, there is a great awakening of mothers to opportunities of helping and being helped. Every College and Gospel Settlement of any kind, every institutional church, has its mothers' meetings and mothers' club, in which the mothers of the neighborhood gather together, discuss their problems and devise ways to help each other. Physicians, physical culture instructors, kindergartners and preachers are members, and deliver addresses upon what is best to do for children in everyday, practical matters; and information, otherwise impossible to women in reduced circumstances, is at command.

This is the day of organization. Mercantile, athletic, humanitarian, and a thousand other interests are quick to take advantage of the strength that lies in union and co-operation, and it would seem that affiliation on the part of all Mothers' and Home-makers' Clubs with the national centre would be a large mutual advantage, and perhaps, the gain of incalculable strength. The platform, love of childhood, is broad, ignoring all differences of creeds, nationalities and politics; and the National Congress of Mothers earnestly invites affiliation. Mrs. Vesta H. Cassedy, Corresponding Secretary, Washington, D. C., will forward to any one writing for it, a circular stating the simple requirements to that and representation in the next Congress, convening February 14, 1899. A recent letter from Mrs. Birney, the President, says:

The movement is daily gaining strength and numbers, and our next Congress will be of greater inspiration than those which preceded it. I am particularly desirous that the fathers, as well as the mothers, should be enlisted in this cause. We deeply appreciate the generous interest manifested by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in this movement from its inception.

The Boot-black's Christmas.

"Have a shine, Mister?" It was early Christmas morning. A gentleman who had not spent the hours well glanced at his muddy shoes, and muttered with a curse; "If I had a nickel in my pocket I'd like one!" Some one touched his knee, and he looked down at the little boot-black who stood there, saying: "Please, Mister, can I shine 'em for nothin'?" "What do you want to do that for?" The boot-black stammered confusedly, "Well, it's cold, an' I want to keep warm, and I haint got any customers yet—an' I'd like to." For the humor of the thing, he submitted. "The first charity I ever received," he said to himself. A He never got a better a shine in his life. A customer with money in his pocket passed, paused, and went on because he couldn't wait. At another time, the man getting the shine would not have suffered this, but his head ached and he felt too stupid to interfere in anything. When the job was finished, he asked the boy: "What did you do this for?" "'Cause," said the little fellow bravely, "it's Jesus' birthday, and I wanted to do sonethin' for 'im. They said last night down at the Mission that if we did anything for anybody, it was doin' it for 'im—'cause he loves everybody." "O," sneered the man with the headache, "they've got you in their hands, have they?—the—prating—" The child's eyes filled with tears. "I beg your pardon," he said, lifting his hat, "for speaking so of the followers of your Friend."

Years afterwards, a prosperous business man sat in church, with his wife and children around him, and heard a prominent clergyman tell how a little boot-black led him to believe in the reality of the Christian religion.

A Baby Show in China.

"The first Chinese baby show in the world," says The Penang Gazette, "has just been held here. There were two hundred of them. From embroidered slipper to shaven poll, they were arrayed in their best. They wore satin blouses that shone in the sun with a silver shimmer. They wore embroideries of wonderful birds and bees and flowers never seen on land or sea. The little boys were shaven, and the little girls had their hair stiffened and polished and dressed as though for the grandest function, with little bird-cages and fringes of beads and paper atop. There were great tinklings of metal and much shining of green jade. A new fashion in infant headgear showed a halo of stiff pompons that rose above the infant's sombre eyes. Others wore huge rosettes of silk on each temple, like a joss, and one little girl had a mane of black silk queue strings hanging down from the back of her head. Even the baby complexions had been looked after. On the smooth, yellow cheeks appeared the most lovely patch of pink rouge put on quite frankly in the Chinese fashion. The rosebud mouths were touched up, and the narrow brows carefully pencilled."

A CHRISTMAS SONG.

OUR homes are wreathed with holly
And are hung with mistletoe;
The bells are ringing merrily,
To church the people go.

The ruddy fires leap on our hearths,
Our boards are crowned with cheer;
And back and forth speed gracious gifts
'Twixt friends and kindred dear.

In mission halls stand wondrous trees—
All glittering with light,
Bearing love's fruits for friendless ones,
Making their darkness bright.

And all the world is happy,
Because—O long ago—
God's Son was born in Bethlehem,
And loved the whole world so!

—MARY JORDAN.

Christmas Joys

CHRISTMAS is the one holiday which all Christian nations observe in common. Our Fourth of July is not a time of gladness to any nation but ourselves, and England, France, Germany, Russia and other European countries have their own times for national rejoicing, to which other peoples are indifferent. But in Europe, America, and wherever the story of Christ has been told, people are agreed that Christmas, the children's holiday, is a time for everybody to join hands and be glad.

In almost every window in New York City one sees a green holly-wreath, tied with red ribbon, and streets are very cheerful on Christmas Day, while bells are ringing for church, and everybody, in their "Sunday's best," is going to worship. Nearly all the children are bright and smiling. Santa Claus has remembered them. Notes in however large, scrawly and illegible characters that have been hidden conveniently near the grate, or stuck up the chimney, have been marvelously honored. Moreover, under the influence of father, mother and Sunday School teacher, the more fortunate ones have had a hand in making other children happy. Christmas-trees down at the Mission, and baskets left at tenement doors overnight could tell delightful secrets of what the right hand did and the left hand did not know. And thus it is in Chicago, San Francisco and in New Orleans and Tampa, where roses and violets and gray moss mingle with mistletoe, and that ethereal greeness called running cedar lends its feathery grace to garlanded walls and portals. What the far-off Filipinos, who have not heard of Christ, will do, we cannot say, but down in Porto Rico, and even in war and famine-wasted Cuba, Americans, Spaniards and Cubans will surely do what they can to make the children happy.

"Getting ready for Christmas," say many of our little friends, "is as much fun as Christmas." Of course it is! There are the journeys to the woods for greens—as jolly as nutting excursions were in Autumn—visits to shopping districts with mamma and papa, and seeing the wonderful sights in the windows and the great crowds on the streets; making mysterious purchases when backs are turned; then, at home, there is delightful mystery everywhere, and "expectation stands on tip-toe." What delicious smells come from the kitchen; and what chances of "sampling" confections as they are prepared! O, yes! there's lots of fun in getting ready for Christmas! And ought not grown folks to give the children a rising vote of thanks for the privilege of sharing with them the universal holiday—the Christ-Child's birthday? Surely, too, children at Christmas-time, should try to make the grown-up and aged folks happy, as tribute to their King, over whom the aged Anna and Simeon rejoiced so greatly; and who "was subject unto" his parents.

A Kindergartner on Christmas.

"The jollity and fun of Christmas," says Emilie Paulsson, "must be remembered even though we are striving to give the children something deeper and sweeter to associate with the festive season. Christmas time is the time of new toys and extra goodies as well as the time of loving and giving, for the child-heart can hold both conceptions. Indeed, both are natural and wholesome in right measure."

CHAPTER III.

Transplanting.

A WEEK passed, and day after day Evadne sat by her window speaking no word. She knew that she must quit her beloved home and go, as her father had arranged, to that uncle in New England whom she had never seen. But at present she could do nothing. Outdoors the fountain still sparkled in the sunshine and the birds sang, but for her the foundations of life had been shaken to their centre.

Her friends tried in vain to break up her unnatural calm.

"If you would only have a good cry, Evadne," Geoffrey Chittenden said at last, "you would feel better, dear. That is what all girls do, you know."

She turned upon him a pair of solemn eyes, out of which the merry sparkle had faded.

"Will crying give me back my father?"

"Why—no, dear; of course, I didn't mean that. But these things are bound to happen to us all sooner or later, you know. It is the rule of life."

"The law of progression," she said, with a dreary laugh. "I wish the world would stop for good!"

When the clergyman came she met him quietly, and he found himself not a little disconcerted by the steady gaze of the mournful gray eyes. He was not accustomed to dealing with such wordless grief, and he found his favorite phrases sadly inadequate to the occasion. There was an awkward pause.

"Doctor Danvers tells me your father told him some time ago that in the event of his death he wished you to make your home with your uncle in America," he said at length.

Evadne bowed.

"Well, my dear young lady, you will find it in all respects a most desirable home, I feel confident. Judge Hildreth holds a position of great trust in the church, and is universally esteemed as a Christian gentleman of sterling character."

The gray eyes were lifted to his face.

"Shall I find Jesus Christ there?"

"Jesus Christ!" the clergyman echoed her words with a start. "I beg your pardon, my dear. The Lord sitteth upon his throne in the heavens, we must approach him reverently with humble fear."

"That seems a long way off," said Evadne in a disappointed tone. "there must be some mistake. My father told me to make it the business of my life to find him."

"Your father, my dear! Oh, ah, ahem!" His tone seemed to imply that Lenox Hildreth had not known much of Jesus Christ

An indignant flash leaped into the gray eyes. Evadne rose and faced him.

"You must excuse me, sir," she said, quietly. Then she left the room.

And the tears which all the kindly sympathy had failed to bring her, at the first breath of censure, fell like a flood.

Upon the deck of one of the ocean greyhounds a promiscuous crowd was gathered. Returning tourists, in all the glory of tweed suits and field glasses; British officers going home on furlough from the different outposts where they were stationed; merchants from the rich markets of the far East; picturesque foreigners in national costume, and a Bishop, who paced the deck with a dignity becoming his queer clerical hat and knee breeches. There was a continuous hum of conversation, mingled with intermittent ripples of laughter from the different groups which were scattered about the deck.

Among the noticeable exceptions to the general sociability, which seemed to have infused itself among the passengers, were the Bishop, still pacing vigorously up and down, with his hands clasped behind him, and a young girl, who sat looking far out over the waves, utterly heedless of the noise and confusion around her.

She was absolutely alone. The gentleman, under whose care she was traveling, made a point of escorting her to meals, after which he invariably secured her a comfortable deck chair, supplied her liberally with rugs and books, and then retired to the smoking-room with the serene consciousness of duty fully performed—and Evadne Hildreth was thankful to be left in peace. She was no longer the buoyant, merry girl. Her vitality seemed crushed. Hour after hour she sat motionless, her hands folded listlessly in her lap, looking out over the dancing waves.

She had caught the last glimpse of her beloved island in a gray stupor. Everything was gone—father and home and friends—nothing that happened could matter now—but, oh! the dreary, dreary years! Did the sun shine in far away New England, and could the water be as blue as her dear Atlantic, with the gay ripple on its bosom and the music of its waves? She looked at the tender sky as on the far horizon it bent low to kiss the face of the mysterious mighty ocean, which stretched

A sea without a shore.

That was like her life now—all the beauty ended, yet stretching on and on, and on. And she must keep pace with it, against her will—and there was no one to care. She was all alone! Yes, there was Jesus Christ!

She started to find the Bishop's wife speaking to her. Evadne recognized her, for she sat at the next table, and several times she had stood aside to let her pass to her seat. Something about the solitary, pathetic little figure, the hopeless face and mournful gray eyes had won the compassion of the good lady, for she was a kindly soul.

"My dear, you have a great sorrow," she said gently. "I hope you have the consolations of our holy religion to help you bear it?"

Evadne turned towards her eagerly. Her husband was the head of the church. Surely she would know.

"Can you help me find him?" she asked.

"Find whom, my dear? Have you a friend among the passengers?"

"Jesus Christ."

"Oh!" The Bishop's lady sat back with the suddenness of the shock.

"Are you in earnest, my dear?" she asked with a tinge of severity in her tone. "This is a very serious question; but, if you really mean it, you know, I will lend you my Prayer Book."

Evadne smiled drearily.

"Oh, yes; I am terribly in earnest. My father said I was to make it the business of my life."

"Oh—ah—oh, yes, to be sure," said the lady abruptly; that is very proper. Christianity should be the great purpose of our life."

"I do not want Christianity," said Evadne impatiently, "I want Christ."

"My dear, you shock me. The eternal verities of our holy religion must ever be —."

"Do you believe in him?" asked Evadne abruptly, interrupting her.

"Believe in him? Whom do you mean?"

"Jesus Christ."

Aghast, the Bishop's lady crossed herself and began reading the Apostle's Creed.

"That makes him seem so far away," said Evadne sadly. "I do not want him in heaven if I have to live upon earth. Have you found him?" she asked suddenly. "Are you on intimate terms with him? Is he your friend?"

The Bishop's lady gasped for breath. That she, a member of the Church of the Holy Communion of all Saints, should be interrogated in such a fashion as this!

"I think you do not quite understand," she said coldly. I will lend you a treatise on Church Doctrine. You had better study that."

"Charlotte," said her husband, when she reached her stateroom, "I have arrived at an important decision this afternoon. I have finally concluded to take the Sociman Heresy as my theme for the noon lectures. The subject will admit of elaborate treatment, and affords ample scope for scholarship."

"Heresy!" echoed the wife, who had not yet recovered her equanimity. "Why, Bertram, I have just been talking to a young person who asked me if I was on intimate terms with Jesus Christ!"

"Ah, yes," said the Bishop, absently, "the radical tendencies of the present day are to be deplored. Have you seen that my vestments are in order, Charlotte? I shall hold divine service on board tomorrow."

In a neighboring stateroom, a lonely soul, bewildered and despairing, struggled through the darkness towards the light.

The last snow of the winter lay in soft beauty upon the streets of Marlborough as Evadne's train drew into the railway station. Instantly all was bustle and confusion throughout the cars. Evadne shrank back in her seat and waited. Instinctively she felt that for her there would be no joyous welcome. Inexpressibly dreary as the journey had been, she was sorry it was at an end. An overwhelming embarrassment of shyness seized upon her, and the chill desolation of loneliness seemed to shut down about her like a cloud.

A young man sauntered past her with his hands in his pockets. When he reached the end of the car he turned and surveyed the few remaining passengers leisurely; then he came back to her seat. He lifted his hat with lazy politeness.

"Miss Hildreth, I believe?"

Evadne bowed. He shook hands coolly.

"I have the honor of introducing myself as your cousin Louis."

He made no attempt to give her a warmer greeting, and Evadne was glad he did not; but how dreary it was!

Louis led the way out of the station to where a pair of magnificent horses stood, tossing their regal heads impatiently. A colored coachman stood beside them, clad in fur.

"Pompey," he said, "this is Miss Evadne Hildreth, from Barbadoes."

The man bent low over the little hand which was instantly stretched out to him.

"I'se very glad to see Miss 'Vadney," he said with simple fervor. "I was powerful fond of Mass' Lennux," and Evadne felt she had received her warmest welcome.

EVADNE HILDRETH ON HER WAY TO HER NEW HOME.

She nestled down among the soft robes of the sleigh, while the silver bells rang merrily through the frosty air. It was all so new and strange. A leaden weight seemed to be settling down upon her heart, and she felt as if she were choking; but she threw it off. She dared not let herself think. She began to talk rapidly.

"What splendid horses you have! Surely they must be thoroughbreds? No ordinary horses could hold their heads like that."

Louis nodded.

"You have a quick eye," he said, approvingly. "Most girls would not know a thoroughbred from a draught horse. You have hit upon the surest way to get into my father's good graces. His horses are his hobby."

"What are their names?"

"Brutus and Cæsar. The Judge is nothing if not classical."

As they mounted the front steps the faint notes of a guitar sounded from a front room.

"Confound Isabelle and her eternal twanging!" muttered Louis, as he fumbled for his latch-key. "It would be a more orthodox welcome if you found your relations waiting for you with open arms; but the Hildreth family is not given to gush; Isabelle will tell you it is not good form; so we keep our emotions hermetically sealed, and stored away under decorous lock and key, polite society having found them inconvenient things to handle, partaking of the nature of nitro-glycerine, you know, and liable to spontaneous combustion."

He opened the door as he spoke, and Evadne followed him into the hall. She shivered, although a warm breath of heated air fanned her cheek. The mental atmosphere was chilly.

Evadne saw three ladies emerge from an inner room. They were utter strangers to her, but could be no other than her aunt and her cousins Marion and Isabelle.

Marion hurried forward to greet her, followed more leisurely by Isabelle and her mother, who touched her lips lightly to Evadne's forehead.

"I hope you have had a pleasant journey, my dear, although you must find our climate rather stormy. I think you might as well let the girls take you at once to your room, and then we will have dinner."

"Where is the Judge?" inquired Louis.

"Detained again at the office. He has just telephoned not to wait for him. He is killing himself with overwork."

To Evadne the dinner seemed interminable, and she found herself contrasting the stiff formality with the genial hospitality of her father's table. She saw again the softly lighted room with its open windows, through which the flowers peeped, and heard his gay badinage and his low, sweet laugh. Could she be the same Evadne, or was it all a dream?

"WIPING THE FLOUR FROM HER HANDS."

"WE had never made much of Christmas in the little mountain village where I was raised," said Mother Austin, wiping the flour from her hands, and sitting down to wait for her bread to rise for the second kneading. "It was not till that young preacher from the valley was settled among us that we ever considered about it, for when folks are dreadful poor, and you have to work all the time there's daylight, just to get food enough and clothes enough to go round, Christmas and holidays ain't of much account.

"But young Mr. Haverly he had a different opinion, and he began with the children. Long the first o' December he asked 'em to come to the school house early in the evenin's and sing carols, and he set the hull deestrict singin'

"'God rest ye, merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay,'

"'Christ is born in Bethlehem,'

"'Joy to the world, the Lord is come,
Let earth receive her King.'

"My Carrie has a splendid voice, sweet and clear as a thrush's, and pure and high, and Ellen Warrick and Jasper Custis and Molly Deane and Jim McClellan can all of 'em sing pretty well, so twan't very long before the minister had a regular choir, and the Christmas carols sort o' stirred us up and got us out of our rut, and made some of us older ones remember the days when we were young.

"Next thing, the minister and the kids, just the half-grown girls and boys, and some of the leetlest ones tagging on behind, all of them went to the woods after a tree. Father, he let 'em have a sled and a pair of oxen, and they was gone pretty near a hull mornin', but back they come with a beautiful big green tree, spicy and sweet and splendid, and the minister set that up in the school house, and got the young women to string popcorn and put on it, and coaxed me for some of my cotton wadding to imitate snow, and sent to his friends at Deckertown, and they sent him back a great box o' truck, candles as big as the end of my little finger, and dolls and toys for the children, and bits o' picture cards and books, and that tree was dressed up regular Kriss Kringle style.

"Then, when Christmas Eve came, the hull settlement was ready to go to the school house, we hadn't any church then you know, and see the children's fun. Fact is, there wouldn't be much fun in the world if it wern't for the children, and the Master knew what he was talkin' about when he said: 'Except ye become as little children, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven.'

"One must be as easily pleased as a child, and as meek and mild and good natured to have much heaven here below.

"The minister read the dear old story, how the star stood over the place where Mary and the young Child were, while the shepherds left their flocks and the wise men from a far country came on pilgrimage and brought their gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh, and the strange thing was that it seemed as if we'd never heard it till then, and it was all new and beautiful and grand.

"There's a lot in the way folks listen, you know. You can hear a story and be thinkin' about the interest on the mortgage, and how you're goin' to raise it in time, and about how you'll turn your black silk dress inside out and upside down, and make it over new for the third time, and about how fast Ruby wears out her shoes, and whether your son Ned is really falling in love with that simpleton next door, and you don't hear; the Bible words is to you as an idle tale."

My friend paused and attended to her bread. When she resumed, she began:

"Where was I? Oh, yes; in the school house and the minister was readin', and the children sang the carols, and the tree was lit, and the gifts was distributed. And one took hold of another's hand, and we visited, and got real friendly, and we knew that we loved one another, though we are quiet people who don't feel called upon to much palaver, and we knew that our dear Lord was there. And Jenny Martin stood upon the platform and spoke a piece. I liked it so much that I got the minister to copy it for me, and it's here somewhere. You can read it if you like."

She rummaged in the clock, where she kept receipts and packages of seeds, and the letters that came now and then from her married daughter in Dayton, and she found the poem, written in the minister's fine copper-plate English hand. Did I tell you that the minister came to the place from over the sea, and that his mother used to send him an English plum pudding every year? My old friend told me about this, with great pride, for a slice of that pudding used to find its way to a good many homes in the congregation, and they thought it was fine; nothing like it had ever been seen in those hills.

This was the poem:

THE CHRISTMAS LADDER.

Once, in the midnight, long ago,
The angels let a ladder down;
And long it was, and strong, and so
Its foot was set on Bethlehem town.

And on that ladder's silver rounds
Swift up and down the angels went,
And brought unto earth's lowly grounds
Heaven's gifts of peace and good intent.

The watching shepherds on the hill,
They could not see that ladder fair,
But suddenly did music thrill
Around them in the still night air.

The Eastern sages wayfaring,
Beheld a great and golden star,
And so they followed, priest and king,
Until it brought them fast and far,

Where Mary with her little one,
Lay safe amid the fragrant hay;
God's gift to earth, His own dear Son,
Slept in a virgin's arms that day.

So came the glory to our land,
So came the grace of heaven down,
When, though men did not understand,
God's Christ was born in Bethlehem town.

And ever since, that silver stair
Is let through quivering crystal bars,
Through realms of song vibrating air,
Across the snowy path of stars,

And angels flitting to any fro,
Bring peace and love and good intent
To us who tarry here below,
Our Father's star-sown firmament.

"That is very sweet," I said.

"Yes, and if you could have heard Jenny recite it! She looked like a cherub, in her white frock, with her yellow hair."

"Well, to make a long story short," said my dear friend, "we've kept Christmas ever since. Two years ago our minister died. His grave's up on the hill, in the south-west corner of the cemetery, with a cross of gray stone over it, and his name cut in rough letters. But he taught us how to keep Christmas, and now we don't confine it to a celebration in the church—for the dear man got the church built before God called him home; we have it in our homes, and we hang up our stockings, and we let the children believe in Santa Claus all they're a mind to, and we let love and joy come into our homes and abide.

"You see our minister led the way!

"There's Hiram now bringin' home the Christmas tree! See it on the sled? Hear the young ones shout? I tell you there's nothing like Christmas under the canopy.

"But I must bake my bread. Good land o' livin', talkin' to you, I came near lettin' the hull batch get too light?"

"THE HULL SETTLEMENT WAS READY TO GO TO THE SCHOOL-HOUSE."

A HYMN OF COURAGE.

O CHURCH, arise and sing
The triumphs of your King,
Whose name is love.
Sing your enlarged desires,
That broader faith inspires,
Sing with the victor choirs,
And forward move!
Here, on Immanuel's ground,
Redemption's joys abound,
Christ comes a guest;
The cross above us towers,
Its arms outstretched are ours,
We taste the heavenly powers,
Supremely blest.

Beneath the glowing arch,
Immanuel's armies march;
We follow on.
Lead on, O cross of light!
From conquering height to height,
And add new triumphs bright
To victories won.
The world is very blest;
Christ's harvests, east and west,
The field displays;
The church adoring stands,
And with uplifted hands,
Offers, from all her lands,
Eternal praise!

OUR ORPHANS IN CUBA.

A Visitor to the Lee Orphanage Writes of the Good Work Our Readers Have Done There.

REV. W. W. HAMMOND, of Havana, Cuba, President of the White Cross Society of that city, who has recently made a visit to the Lee Orphanage, sends us a most interesting letter, recording his impressions. He writes:

70 INDUSTRIA, HAVANA, CUBA,
November 22, 1898.

For the past three months I have been deeply interested in that grand philanthropic Christian work, the Lee Orphanage, begun by Gen. Lee, and carried on by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The physician in charge, Dr. Sotolongo, placed all the books and accounts of the Orphanage before me for inspection. The accounts are properly entered and balanced monthly. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has sent over $3,000 to this institution, not one dollar of which has been wasted. It has been spent for food, clothing, medicines and running expenses. In addition to the amount sent by you, Dr. Sotolongo has spent over $200 out of his own pocket, and has not received one cent of pay for seven months' arduous labor in the Orphanage. To-day Dr. Guzman showed me a check from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for $500—another donation to this grand institution. This speaks great things for the Christian religion. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, who have never seen these poor, helpless orphan Cubans, are moved by the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ to send considerable over $3,500 to provide a home and medicines for them. Eternity alone will reveal the great good you have done and are doing on this island—the Lord reward you with his choicest blessings.

If Dr. Sotolongo has taken at times nearly four times the usual number into the Asylum, he can hardly be blamed. To turn hundreds of orphans, starving to death, away from his door, requires a harder heart than his. From sixty inmates the number soon increased to about three hundred. And although it must have been a struggle for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers to care properly for them, nevertheless the Lord has enabled you to do it, and hundreds of lives have been saved which otherwise would have perished.

A Greeley or a Talmage, let alone my humble self, could not depict with pen or tongue the sufferings of the Cubans. On Saturday last I visited Admiral Sampson. Around his house there were not less than one hundred poor people, begging for something to eat. Daily he and his good wife feed them. This morning, at 2 o'clock, I was called upon to arrange for the funeral of Mrs. Mary E. Barlow, lately of Evanston, Fla., who died of yellow fever. On my way to the undertakers I saw not less than three hundred homeless persons of all ages and both sexes, sleeping in the park in front of the Inglaterra Hotel. A little girl, eight years of age, told me her pitiful tale. She said she had no home, no relatives to care for her. Her father, mother, two little brothers and one sister, had all been cut to pieces with a machete in the hands of a Spanish soldier. She was away from home and escaped, and now she is begging on the streets. There are hundreds of such cases.

I had a letter from Miss Helen Gould, of your city, saying, "she would be glad to help us in Cuba, but she had so many other calls equally pressing." May the dear Lord bless her in the good work she is doing. And I pray God to raise up Helen Goulds, Rockefellers and Astors for the perishing Cubans. My prayer is, God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers with all the good things heaven has in store for such Christlike work as it has done, and is doing, in Cuba.

Cuba is ripe for harvest. For three months I have been the only English speaking minister here. Hundreds of Cubans who have never seen a Bible, have asked me for one, but I have none to give. Hon. John S. Gray and sister of Detroit, and their families, took up a collection of $24 at their dinner tables, and sent it to me for Bibles, but we want 500, or better yet, 5,000, Spanish and English Bibles and Testaments. We want a home for the aged and infirm, an orphanage for at least 500 children, and a home for destitute girls. In Cuba it costs a girl under eighteen years old over $50 for dispensations and masses if she wants to get married. But if she wants to live a life of shame, and is over twelve years of age, she can do so without parents consent, by paying $5 for a license. Such is Spain's regulation for purity. Your brother in the Master's work, W. W. HAMMOND.

Feathered Mourners.

On Sunday, November 27, as John A. Bloemeke, a young Newarker, was being lowered into his grave, three pretty fan-tail pigeons alighted upon a cross on an adjoining grave, and seemed to be watching the ceremony and listening to the chanting. A number of societies to which he belonged attended the funeral, and everybody was deeply impressed by the appearance of the birds. The undertaker went within three feet of them at one time and they did not fly away. When the funeral party withdrew, the birds flew down from the cross and alighted upon the grave.

Are You Seeking Rest?

A lady in Wales relates this little story: An English friend of hers, a mother, had a child that was sick. At first they considered there was no danger, until one day the doctor came in and said that the symptoms were very unfavorable. He took the mother out of the room, and told her that the child could not live. It came like a thunderbolt. After the doctor had gone the mother went into the room where the child lay and began to talk to the child, and tried to divert its mind.

"Darling, do you know you will soon hear the music of heaven? You will hear a sweeter song than you have ever heard on earth. You will hear them sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. You are fond of music. Won't it be sweet, darling?"

And the little, tired, sick child turned its head away, and said, "Oh, mamma, I am so tired and so sick that I think it would make me worse to hear all that music."

"Well," the mother said, "you will soon see Jesus. You will see the seraphim and cherubim and the streets all paved with gold;" and she went on picturing heaven as it is described in Revelation.

The little, tired, child again turned its head away, and said, "Oh, mamma, I am so tired that I think it would make me worse to see all those beautiful things!"

At last the mother took the child up in her arms and pressed her to her loving heart. And the little, sick one whispered: "Oh, mamma, that is what I want. If Jesus will only take me in his arms and let me rest!"

Dear friend, are you not tired and weary of sin? Are you not weary of the turmoil of life? You can find rest on the bosom of the Son of God.

Sixty Centuries of History.

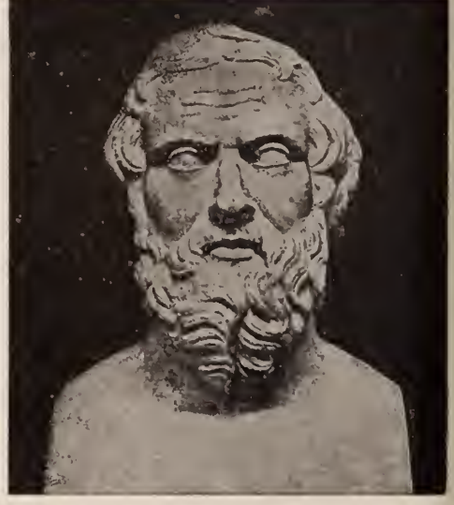
A Remarkable Work Embracing the Entire History of All Nations and All Peoples, and of Each Individual Who Has Contributed to the Making of their History.

Magnificently Illustrated Throughout.

The plan of the work is ideal. It enables one to thoroughly understand the history of the entire world from the beginning to the present day.

It provides the way to become acquainted with the Makers of History from the world's earliest records to Dewey, the hero of Manila; Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac, and all others who won distinction in the late war.

One can here follow Julius Cæsar through his remarkable career, watch with interest the rise and fall of the Roman Empire, dwell awhile in company with the great Nelson, travel side by side with Napoleon through his victories and defeats, realize the influences of Bismark's strong policy for Germany, or follow the brave deeds of our own country's heroes.



HERODOTUS, THE FATHER OF HISTORY.

It also clearly defines the causes which led to the Great Conflicts between nations that mark Turning Points in History.

The necessity for a work that would enable either the Casual Reader or the Careful Student to obtain within a reasonable number of volumes a complete and Authentic Exposition of the Entire World's History has long been apparent.

This necessity has resulted in a work that perfectly Fills All These Requirements. In short, with the aid of this magnificent work one may in a season's reading, or by dipping into the Library for an hour or two every now and then, acquire a wider and firmer grasp upon the history of the world and the men who have made it than could be obtained by grubbing about for a lifetime among the histories of single countries.

The complete work is delivered to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and left with them an entire week—affording an opportunity for thorough examination of the Library before deciding to join the Club.

Under the plan of McClure's History Club, through which the library is being distributed, you may obtain the work at a fraction of the regular price and, if you wish, pay for it a little at a time.

The Club thus provides a comfortable way for you to become the owner of the finest historical library that has ever been published.

The people having shown a remarkable interest in this subject, we advise that you write at once to McCLURE'S HISTORY MAGAZINE CLUB, 141 East Twenty-fifth Street, New York, for full information regarding the novel club plan, the Library itself, and the special terms offered to those who make application for particulars during the month of December.

Anecdotes by Moody

Illustrations and Incidents in the Life of the World's Greatest Evangelist.

A MAN got up in one of our meetings in New York some years ago, who had been pretty far down, but a wonderful change had taken place, and he said he hardly knew himself. He said the fact was, he was a new man in his old clothes.

I saw an advertisement which read like this: "If you want people to respect you, wear good clothes." That is the world's idea of getting the world's respect. Why! A leper may put on good clothes, but he is a leper still. Mere profession doesn't transform a man. It is the new nature spoken of in II. Corinthians 5: 17, "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

For Parents.

Whenever I speak to parents, two fathers come before me. One lived on the Mississippi River. He was a man of great wealth. One day his oldest boy had been borne home unconscious. They did everything that man could do to restore him, but in vain. Time passed, and after a terrible suspense he recovered consciousness.

"My son," the father whispered, "the doctor tells me you are dying."

"Oh!" said the boy, "you never prayed for me, father; won't you pray for my lost soul now?"

The father wept. It was true he had never prayed. He was a stranger to God. And in a little while that soul, unprayed for, passed into its dark eternity.

The father has since said that he would give all his wealth if he could call back his boy only to offer one short prayer for him.

What a contrast is the other father! He, too, had a lovely son, and one day he came home to find him at the gates of death. His wife was weeping, and she said:

"Our boy is dying; he has had a change for the worse. I wish you would go in and see him."

The father went into the room and placed his hand upon the brow of the dying boy, and could feel the cold, damp sweat was gathering there; the cold, icy hand of death was feeling for the chords of life.

"Do you know, my son, that you are dying?" asked the father.

"Am I? Is this death? Do you really think I am dying?"

"Yes, my son, your end on earth is near."

"And I will be with Jesus, to-night, father?"

"Yes, you will soon be with the Saviour."

"Father, don't weep, for when I get there I will go straight to Jesus and tell him that you have been trying all my life to lead me to him."

God has given me three children, and ever since I can remember I have directed them to Christ. I would rather they carried this message to Jesus—that I had tried all my life to lead them to him—than have all the crowns of the earth; I would rather lead them to Jesus than to give them the wealth of the world.

Covetous Till Death.

An English clergyman was called to the death-bed of a wealthy parishioner. Kneeling beside the dying man the pastor asked him to take his hand as he prayed for his upholding in that solemn hour, but he declined to give it. After the end had come, and they turned down the coverlet, the rigid hands were found holding the safe-key in their death-grip. Heart and hand, to the last, clinging to his possessions, but he could not take them with him.

That Ladder a Dream.

A man dreamt that he built a ladder from earth to heaven, and when he did a good deed up went his ladder a few feet. When he did a very good deed his ladder went higher, and when he gave away large sums of money to the poor, up it went further still. By and by it went out of sight, and as years rolled on, it went up, he thought, past the clouds, clear into heaven. When he died, he thought he would step off his ladder into heaven, but he heard a voice roll out from paradise:

"He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

Down he came, ladder and all, and he awoke. He said if he wanted to get salvation he must get it in another way than by good deeds, and he took the other way, which is by Jesus Christ.

The Arrow Hit the Mark.

A society was some years ago established to distribute tracts by mail in the higher circles. One of these tracts, entitled, "Prepare to meet thy God," was enclosed in an envelope and sent by post to a gentleman well known for his ungodly life and his reckless impiety. He was in his study when he read this letter among others.

"What's that?" said he. "'Prepare to meet thy God.' Who has had the impudence to send me this cant?" And, with an imprecation on his unknown correspondent, he arose to put the paper in the fire.

"No; I won't do that," he said to himself. "On second thought, I know what I will do. I'll send it to my friend B——; it will be a good joke to hear what he'll say about it."

So saying, he enclosed the tract in a fresh envelope, and in a feigned hand directed it to his boon companion.

Mr. B—— was a man of his own stamp, and received the tract, as his friend had done, with an oath at the humbug; and his first impulse was to tear it in pieces. "I'll not tear it either," said he to himself. "Prepare to meet thy God" at once arrested his attention and smote his conscience. The arrow of conviction entered his heart as he read, and he was converted.

Almost his first thought was for his ungodly associates. "Have I received such blessed light and truth, and shall I not strive to communicate it to others?" He again folded the tract, and enclosed and directed it to one of his companions in sin. Wonderful to say, the little arrow hit the mark. His friend read. He also was converted; and both are now walking as the Lord's redeemed ones.

The Others Were Sorry.

A Sunday School teacher wished to show his class how free the gift of God is. He took his silver watch from his pocket and offered it to the oldest boy in the class.

"It's yours, if you will take it."

The little fellow sat and grinned at the teacher. He thought he was joking. The teacher offered it to the next boy, and said:

"Take that watch; it is yours."

The little fellow thought he would be laughed at if he held out his hand, and therefore he sat still. In the same way the teacher went nearly round the class; but not one of them would accept the proffered gift. At length he came to the smallest boy. When the watch was offered to the little fellow, he took it and put it into his pocket. All the class laughed at him.

"I am thankful, my boy," said the teacher, "that you believe my word. The watch is yours. Take good care of it. Wind it up every night."

The rest of the class looked on in amazement; and one of them said: "Teacher, you don't mean that the watch is his? You don't mean that he hasn't to give it back to you?"

"No," said the teacher, "he hasn't to give it back to me. It is his own now."

"Oh—h—! if I had only known that, wouldn't I have taken it!"

The Duty of Rendering Home Attractive...

MADE EASY BY THE

IMPROVED

Gram-o-phone

The best thing of the kind I know of to entertain one's family and friends."—HON. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

AMONG THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers there must be many parents with whom it is, or ought to be, a constant study how to make home attractive, especially to the young people.

To find in one instrument of music all the merits of every other, besides those which no other possesses, including the marvelous power of accurately and naturally reproducing speech, is indeed a wonder that never grows old. The Ram's Horn is right when it calls it "The greatest contribution made by science to the entertainment of the world."

Its character changes with every selection, It is a cornet, a banjo, a xylophone, an orchestra, a full band, a quartette, a chorus, or a single voice—makes stump speeches, delivers grand orations—is humorous, pathetic or devotional—all according to the record.

These records, of which there are many thousands, are on flat indestructible discs. They are made exclusively by experts from actual and genuine performances, given for the purpose by the most celebrated instrumentalists, bands, singers, actors and orators in the world. All but a few of the early records are signed by their makers.

The point which it is most difficult to make understood by those who have never heard them is that they are not imitations at all, but Reproductions—the real thing—natural as life itself—and necessarily so from the scientific fact that they are the result of an exact repetition of sound waves vibrated by the originals.

STEPS TOWARDS FAITH.*

FIRST, face your doubts squarely: look them in the face. I believe most of those who are unsettled need this advice. They tend to hide their doubt away, and try not to think of it. It may be wrong sometimes to doubt; but it is certainly wrong to keep your doubt always in the dark because you are afraid to look at it. It may be hard to face some questions; it certainly is hard, and wearing, and insecure to dodge and avoid these questions because they are troublesome. It is true that ugly things show just as they are in the light, but it is just as true that they are worse in the dark, because they do not show what they are. To try to get rid of a doubt by hiding it away, is like trying to get rid of sorrow or hunger by not thinking of it. This may do for a while, but sooner or later the feeling comes back again with redoubled energy.

"I know not. One at least I knew
In many a subtle question versed,
Who touched a jarring lyre at first,
But ever strove to make it true.

"Perplexed in faith, but pure in deeds,
At last he beat his music out.
There lives more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds.

"He fought his doubts, and gathered strength,
He would not make his judgment blind;
He faced the spectres of the mind
And laid them: thus he came at length
To find a stronger faith his own."

A step toward faith is a desire to believe. Perhaps you cannot have the true, strong faith. But do you want to have it? That is one of the first things. Would you like to believe strongly and truly? Would you like to have a positive faith and a working realization of the unseen and eternal? If you do want this, there is the greatest hope and help for you. For intellectual and spiritual faith is one of those things of which the promise is sure, "Ask, and ye shall receive." The man who really wants it will get it, if he wants it enough to work and wait. Think what faith is, what it has done, and what it can do. What a power it is! What security it brings! What happiness it secures! Do you want it?

Another step toward the beginning of a true faith is that you bring your very unbelief to God, if you can. You know that there is some great power within you. Bring your mental or spiritual doubt to him. Do not try to pray to him as a man of faith ought to pray. If you do not believe this or that about God, it is not right to pray to him as if you did believe it. If you do not feel him as a reality, as a friend, it is wrong to pray to him as if you did, because you think that you ought to feel in that way; but come to him honestly. Bring your mental doubts to him. Faith and unfaith may be struggling in you. Do not bring the one to God and hide the other away. Bring them both. Cry, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Then, even though you have gone so short a way towards the true faith, into your darkness will come a little ray of that light from God that shines for the just man, the honest man, and makes his path like the shining light, that shineth more and more into the perfect day.

IN "THE LAND OF MANANA."†

THE American steps ashore and into a volura, a small victoria, pulled by an asthmatic horse. The streets of any city are full of humiliations for the proud, but on the way to his hotel, this proud American finds Havana's streets full of sights that more than humiliate. They are sights that inspire indignation against the inhumanity that causes them. These narrow streets are full of abject misery. The American's carriage brushes against indescribable poverty. He has been accustomed at home, to see streets filled with evidence of wealth. So this new thing, this awful suffering, appals him. Whole families are huddled together on the pavements. Their home is a gutter. Little, naked children hold skeleton hands for a centavo. Human beings, reconcentrados, wrecks; that is the history of these families. Americans will find all Cuba strewn with wrecks. For months to come they will block the channels of trade, just as marine wrecks obstruct navigation.

The volura turns into another street, and the American beholds a man milking a cow in front of a doorway. This is the typical milkman of Havana. He takes his cow from door to door, giving to each housewife the exact quantity of milk desired. The days of this milkman's prosperity are numbered. In a few weeks, milk wagons, gorgeous in coats of paint of many colors, will be rushing from door to door through the streets. The American milkman will have supplanted the Cuban and his cow.

The carriage rolls on, or rather, rolls and pitches on, like a ship in a storm. For the street, like the sea, has billows and troughs. But the American, remembering how his own streets are not paved, feels at home. The street is not wide enough for carriages to pass each other. The sidewalk is so narrow, that even lovers walk in Indian file. The American is only ninety miles from the United States shore, yet, here are streets more foreign in appearance than those he once traveled three thousand miles to see in Europe. To enjoy these Havana streets, a man must have an eye for the picturesque and the leisure to lounge. The American simply notices that the houses are only two stories high, looks reproachful, and deplores the waste of sky space. If he has been in Havana before, the Yankee remarks the absence of Spanish soldiers in the streets. The sword has gone, but the mantilla is left. All the mantillas are black. Almost every woman in the street wears mourning, for war is a robber of husbands and sons and brothers. These women are sad-eyed and composed. Their grief is too deep for tears.

Suddenly the American realizes that with all the rocking and pitching of the carriage, but little headway is made. And he stares at the wheezy horse as if it were a species of snail.

Eventually he arrives at the hotel, and is shown to a room with a stone floor, a high ceiling and a dearth of water and towels. He rings. He rings again. In fifteen minutes, more or less, a boy appears. Water and towels, please. Fifteen minutes later the boy comes with water, and twenty minutes after the water comes the towels; the American having broken the bell meanwhile with his frantic ringing. The Yankee's troubles have begun. He is in the land of manana, of tomorrow, of any time excepting now.

SAINT PAUL'S DEATH SONG.

(II. Tim 4: 6-8).

AT the bound of life, I am waiting
For my Master's loving call;
I am ready to be offered—
On his altar laid my all.

Only waiting for his signal,
My departure is at hand,
When the Lord's own voice shall bid me
With his chosen ones to stand.

The good fight is fought and ended,
Finished is my earthly way,
I have kept the faith in Jesus,
Shining bright till perfect day.

Now laid up for me in glory,
Is the crown the Lord shall give,
As he calls me to his presence,
In the heavenly home to live.

Oh, the place of joy so blessed!
Safe within the Father's home,
Waiting still for all who love him,
When his voice shall bid them come.

THE GOSPEL IN CHINA.

Heroes and Triumphs of Christianity in the Celestial Empire.

Probably no nation has presented so many difficulties in the way of the missionary as China. Yet the vastness of the field has always urgently appealed to the hearts of men of missionary spirit. It is estimated that there are not less than three hundred millions of the Chinese, and by some it is believed that the estimate is too low by one-half. How to win such a nation for Christ? It is a problem of stupendous interest. It was made more difficult by the action of the Roman Catholic church, whose missionaries entered the country in the sixteenth century. They labored there for a century and a half, but in the end made themselves so hated by their interference in political matters that in 1736 they were expelled. The pioneer Protestant missionary was Robert Morrison who was sent out by the London Missionary Society in 1806, and in 1813 gave the people the New Testament in Chinese. In 1823 the whole Bible was published in the Chinese language. In 1813 William Milne arrived in Canton and commenced his labors and soon afterward William H. Medhurst went out. The stories these noble pioneers told of the opportunities for labor that there were in China stirred the Christian church throughout the world. Brave men undeterred by the danger and opposition offered themselves. Rev. E. C. Bridgman, Rev. David Abeel, Dr. John Kerr, Dr. John Talmage, Rev. J. N. Boone, Mr. Dean, and many others went out from America, and joined the English missionaries in their labors. All the denominations lent their aid, but the great work of evangelizing China, was in 1865 scarcely begun. In that enormous population of 300,000,000 there were only ninety-five missionaries. But in the next year the China Inland Mission, an undenominational society was organized by Dr. J. Hudson Taylor, and a wonderful impetus was given to the work. That society alone has now nearly 700 missionaries in the country, and churches containing about 5,000 persons. It is estimated that through its labors fully 20,000 men and women have been brought to Christ. When it is remembered that it was not until 1814 that the first native Chinese convert was baptized, we may well exclaim in grateful wonder, What hath God wrought!

The Blind Man and the Lantern.

I remember reading of a blind man who was found sitting at the corner of a street in a great city, with a lantern beside him, writes Mr. Moody. Some one asked what he had the lantern there for, seeing that he was blind, and the light was the same to him as the darkness.

"I have it so that no one may stumble over me," the blind man replied.

Dear friends, let us think of that. Where one man reads the Bible, a hundred read you and me. That is what Paul meant when he said we were to be "living epistles of Christ, known and read of all men." I would not give much for all that can be done by sermons, if we do not preach Christ by our lives. If we do not commend the Gospel to people by our holy walk and conversation, we shall not win them to Christ.

"CAMP JEWETT" CLOSED.

Over 100 Invalid Soldiers Cared for at Our Children's Home Within Two Months.

AFTER two months of active service as a Convalescent Home for our sick soldier boys, invalided home from Cuba or Porto Rico, "Camp Jewett," at Upper Nyack, has been closed for the season. This camp is well known to our readers as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, where for the last five summers the little waifs of the tenements and the slums, have spent the pleasant outings so generously provided by our friends. Through the kindness of Major Jewett, the Women's National War Relief Association was permitted to use the buildings for the benefit of the sick "boys in blue," and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave the use of the furniture and general equipment of the Children's Home for the same purpose. As the outside work of the War Relief Association is now ended, the Home has been closed, and the last of the inmates, now fully restored to health, either returned to their regiments or sent to their own homes.

Fully 100 soldiers have been cared for since the camp opened. In this good Samaritan work, the ladies of the association enjoyed the hearty co-operation of the good people of Nyack, who thoughtfully provided many delicacies for the soldiers and visited the camp frequently, cheering the men alike by their presence and their sympathy.

Prior to the closing of the camp, the Chief of the Medical Staff of the association sent the following letter to the proprietor of this journal:

WOMEN'S NATIONAL WAR RELIEF ASS'N, CAMP WALWORTH, 316 E. 15th ST., NEW YORK, Nov. 28, 1898.

Dear Sir:—As the work of this association will end Dec. 1, we have ordered Camp Jewett closed on the 30th inst.

On behalf of the association, allow me to express our appreciation of your generosity in placing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Home at our disposal, and the many other ways in which you have assisted in making this the most successful of our convalescent homes.

Yours sincerely,
A. E. GALLANT,
Chairman, Medical Committee.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthly appetite and thorongh digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but today I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

And this Beautiful Picture... "SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN," all for 30 Cts.

SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN.

Our Premium pictnre is an accnrate copy of Plockborst's famous painting, "Suffer Little Children," one of the masterpieces of religious art. It is made by a photographic process which admirably reprodnces the exquisite beauty of the original painting, and is printed on fine paper, 19 x 24 inches in size; all ready to frame. It is superior to many pictures sold in stores at fifty cents or more, and would be an ornament in any home and of the greatest helpfulness and influence for good. When framed it makes an inexpensive and most appropriate Christmas gift.

The AMERICAN MESSENGER has been published since 1842, now goes into over 50,000 substantial homes every month, and is worth many times its cost. It is a non-sectarian religious monthly for all the family, devoted to the upbuilding of a sturdy Christian character, and full of practical every day Christianity. Among the contributors for 1899 are the following forceful and able writers: Rev. Dr. Theo. L. Cuyler, President Patton, of Princeton University; Dr. A. F. Schauffler, Francis E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor Society; Dr. Gerard B. F. Hallock, Rev. J. L. Campbell, D.D., Mary Lowe Dickinson, Mrs. Julia McNair Wright, Mrs. E. P. Allan, and many others.

A new and attractive serial will begin early in 1899 to continue throngh the year. Helpful departments on the Christian Life, Christian Effort, The Family Circle, The Sunday School Lesson, Miscellany, Poems, Short Stories, etc., are found in every issue. Established in 1842; pnblished monthly, 20 large pages. The Thanksgiving and Christmas numbers will be sent free to every new subscriber whose name is received before December 31, 1898.

Subscribers say: "The beautiful pictnre far exceeds my expectations." "We find the paper to be overflowing with good reading." "The beautiful picture is a very fine presentation of this fine painting." "The picture is grand." "I want two more." "The paper merits highest commendation."

THE WAIFS' CHRISTMAS TREE.

Mrs. Bird Planning a Treat for the Poor East-side Children.

THIS letter from Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, the "Mother of the Bowery," and founder of the Clinton Gospel Settlement, will be read with interest by all who have helped her heretofore in her Christlike work among the inhabitants of the slums and tenements:

"To the readers of 'The Christian Herald':

"We had not realized how very soon Christmas day would be here, until some of the little, sad faces in the tenements about us began to inquire eagerly: 'When is that big Christmas tree coming in the Bowery Mission?' And the faith of these little street waifs has given me courage to once again plead for the East-side children. Last year at the hour appointed to open our doors, the Bowery, in front of our Mission, was one mass of hundreds of frozen, starving, little ones, the 'least of all' God's children, and, yet by numbers, strong enough to temporarily stop the travel on the greatest thoroughfare of the world.

"We shall, if possible, this year prevent a repetition of this scene—although some of our little flock are now all ready to start at once for the Bowery, so as 'to be sure to get there in time.' The vision of that Christmas tree which, filled to overflowing last year, threw a new impulse into the lives of some of these street waifs. We have never heard the name 'Santa Claus' from any of the children coming to our Settlement. It is all settled in their hearts that it is Christ's friends who provide these good things. It is our hope to give on Christmas day something to brighten the lives of those who live without any sunshine in their homes. If in answer to our prayers, you are led to help us with our Christmas tree this year, we shall consider your gifts a sacred trust, and seek to dispense them to the most needy. Gratefully in His service,

"SARAH J. BIRD."

ARE YOUR LUNGS WEAK?

To Every Sufferer from Catarrh, Lung Weakness or Consumption a Great Specialist Sends His New and Wonderful

TREATMENT FREE.

Nearly everybody you meet will regard it as a kind of insult to be asked if they have weak lungs. All seem to have a solid faith in the soundness of their own breathing machine. In cases of trouble they will admit there is a "heavy cold," "a touch of bronchitis," or even "a spell of Asthma," but as to weak or unsound lungs, never, NEVER. Even the poor consumptive who scarcely speaks without coughing, whose cheeks are wasted, hollow and bear the hectic flush of doom, will assure you with glistening eyes that his cold is on the mend and he will be all right when the weather changes.

This is a sad and pitiable form of delusion. It is not our business here to discuss the reason of it. Its prevalence, however, is beyond all doubt, and we feel that we are right in holding it responsible for a neglect of serious lung troubles in ourselves and others—that it is almost criminal.

How many a poor bread-earner there is who keeps on and on at his daily toil, taking cough medicines by fits and starts, but never quite curing his cough, while this same cough is but a symptom of decay that is eating into his lungs, and will in time cause their destruction. Thus does a wife observe her husband, or parents witness the struggle of a darling child, the youth or the maiden who was to rejoice their later years, while no steps are taken to battle with the evil until consumption has seized on one more victim. It is simply terrible to think how far we may be guilty by our indifference to the lung troubles of those near and dear to us. It is also a sad thought that we may hug a delusion as to our own health that we only get rid of when life itself must pay the forfeit.

Let us quit the distressing subject to come to what is practical. Nobody can afford to think lightly of lung troubles. Nobody can afford to be mistaken about their possible dangers. Nobody can afford to neglect them or "let them wear out," or "get better in the spring," or any other tomfoolery that leads only to wreck and ruin. Lung troubles don't move backward. Weak lungs don't grow strong by themselves—you must heal them and strengthen them and rid them of the very earliest germs of disease or you are simply committing a form of suicide. Either you must cure your lung troubles or THEY WILL KILL YOU.

That's the whole situation in a nutshell.

Never was there a cure for lung troubles equal to the newly discovered Dr. Slocum treatment. This forms a system of three remedies that are used simultaneously, and supplement each other's curative action. The treatment has immortalized Dr. Slocum's name. It cures weak lungs, bronchitis, asthma, coughs, consumption, catarrh and every other ailment of the pulmonary region. It destroys every germ that can affect the respiratory system, and even in advanced stages of lung trouble positively arrests the tubercular growth, while it also builds up the patient so that his system is enabled to throw off scrofula, rheumatism and other wasting diseases. Thousands of cured cases already prove these claims. Thousands of grateful people bless the discovery.

Free to... Christian Herald Readers.

The Dr. Slocum Treatment is Medicine Reduced to an Exact Science by the World's Most Famous Physician.

Dr. Slocum wants everybody to know the surprising merits of his system. He has arranged to give a free treatment (three bottles of the cure) to all sufferers who will apply to him by letter, mentioning The Christian Herald. Full instructions for use accompany each treatment. Your correspondence on the subject is strictly private and your three free bottles come to you in a plain package. Surely if you have weak lungs you will be glad to get a free treatment that is offered in such a generous spirit.

Write to Dr. T. A. Slocum, 98 Pine St., New York City, giving full address.

Delay only makes your trouble worse.

HE CARETH.

Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you.—I. Pet., 5:7.

WHAT can it mean? Is it aught to him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can he be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
Around his throne are eternal calms,
And strong glad music of happy psalms,
And bliss unruffled by any strife.
How can he care for my little life?

And yet I want him to care for me
While I live in this world where the sorrows be.
When the lights die down from the path I take,
When strength is feeble and friends forsake,
When love and music, that once did bless,
Have left me to silence and loneliness,
And my life-song changes to sobbing prayers,
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares.

When shadows hang o'er me the whole day long,
And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong;
When I am not good, and the deeper shade
Of conscious sin makes my heart afraid,
And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its course to help me through,
And I long for a Saviour—can it be
That the God of the universe cares for me?

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above.
He me defends when I cannot fight,
He comforts me in the gloom of night,
He lifts the burden, for he is strong,
He stills the sigh and awakes the song;
The sorrow that bows me down he bears,
And loves and pardons, because he cares.

Let all who are sad take heart again;
We are not alone in our hours of pain:
Our father stoops from his throne above
To soothe and quiet us with his love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high,
And we have safety, for he is nigh.
Can it be trouble which he doth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord does care!

CHRISTMAS TRUTHS.

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society and the Epworth League for December 25th. Luke 2 : 8-20.

FOR nineteen centuries men have been preaching the truths taught by Christmas, and have not yet exhausted the topic. Even to unbelievers in the divinity of Christ, the event that we celebrate must appear the most momentous in history. From that manger-cradle have come forth the energies which are even now transforming the world. The truths taught by Christmas are to millions the most precious truths in the whole region of thought. They include the infinite love of God: the sublime compassion of the Creator for a sinful race: the marvelous condescension of Christ: his self-abasement, his humility, his self-sacrifice and his divine power. From all these inexhaustible themes there are lessons which touch us in every part of our lives. Do we seek deliverance from the power of sin? It is to that cradle that we turn to see how it was wrought for us. Do we seek power to rise out of the sensuality and animalism of our nature and live as becomes the sons of God? It is in that cradle that we find the power in the very might of God embodied in human flesh. Do we need an example of purity and heavenliness? It is there that we find the Being who in human form could resist all temptation and overcome evil. Do we need to learn the principles of brotherhood? It is there that we see the sweetest friendliness and helpfulness, which drew to him the children and the troubled and the sufferer and the repentant. Do we tremble as we approach the grave and ask with the patriarch, "If a man die, can he live again?" It is in that cradle that we find One who has said, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

BIG CUT IN PRICES

HALF-RUSSIA $12 4 Vols.

Since the close of our famous Introductory Sale of the only genuine ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, nearly two years ago, we have been fairly besieged by requests, from all over the United States and Canada, to make a special, low-priced edition of that greatest of all reference libraries, and thus place it within the reach of people in moderate or even poor circumstances. Such a course would have compelled a cheapening of either materials or workmanship, which we have not deemed wise—not even in so worthy a cause. Nor could we afford to make an open offer at a sweeping reduction in the price of a gigantic work, like this, costing more than $750,000, to recover which investment will require many years of constant selling at regular prices. But, yielding at last to the irresistible pressure, we now propose to celebrate the Christmas season of 1898 by distributing just 1,000 sets of our world famous Dictionary and Cyclopædia at less than one-quarter the prices at which the genuine edition is now being sold every day. These books will be taken from our regular stock, latest revision. Paper, printing, binding, illustrations and contents precisely identical with our regular $40 to $70 sets, except that some of the bindings are very slightly worn or defaced, leather corners a trifle crooked, possibly scratched here and there by careless handling. These defects do not reduce the practical value of the books one penny's worth; but we cannot offer them as perfect stock. With the exception noted, every set is and years of arduous labor by more than 100 of the world's greatest scholars, scientists and specialists. JUST AS THEY LOOK When in Book Case

The genuine Encyclopædic Dictionary needs no introduction to the intelligent readers of this paper. It has been adopted for use in the public schools of American cities and towns from Maine to California. Of the thousands of cordial indorsements received from prominent men and influential newspapers we can quote only the following IMMORTALITY.

FOILED by our fellow men, depress'd, outworn,
We leave the brutal world to take its way.
And "Patience!" in another life," we say,
"The world shall be thrust-down, and we up borne."

And will not, then, the immortal armies scorn
The world's poor routed leavings? Or, will they
Who failed under the heat of this life's day,
Support the fervors of the heavenly morn?

No, no! The energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun;
And he who flagged not in the earthly strife—

From strength to strength advancing—only he
His soul well knit, and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.

—MATTHEW ARNOLD.

A Far Western Orphanage.

Mr. C. B. Hysom of Lowell, Wash., writes:

On May 31, a number of our leading citizens formed an incorporation for the purpose of building an orphan's home, which is much needed here. We have acquired forty acres of land for horticultural purposes, and hope soon to obtain some three acres of land (a full block), in the city of Everett, Wash., for building, grounds and nursery, with a garden. We will build as the Lord prospers us. We have some cash on hand. Among our organizers are John A. Davis, State Senator; J. A. Falconer, Mayor of Everett, Wash.; Rev. F. E. Drake, Pastor First M. E. Church; Rev. W. H. Jones, of M. E. Church; W. G. Swalwell; William Swalwell; Rev. Mr. McKinley, Baptist. I was ordained to the ministry in 1876.

For Converting the Regiment.

A soldier in a very wicked and godless regiment was brought to Christ through the influence of his wife. He began to pray that God would open a way for him to be exchanged into a regiment where less evil associations would surround him. One day a comrade came to him in tears and sorrow, telling him that his changed life and his struggles to live right in the midst of temptation had awakened in himself a desire to know Jesus. The first convert went home to his wife and said: "Wife, God has kept us here for a purpose. Let us no more pray to leave the regiment, but to convert it." Sometimes in our homes, in our business, we are surrounded by evil associations, and are praying to be delivered, when perhaps our very struggles and trials to live right in the face of temptation are leading souls to Christ.

FREE

To the Readers of This Paper.

For rheumatism that foe of mankind, I have a simple remedy which cured me after many years of suffering and has since proven its wonderful curative power in thousands of apparently hopeless cases, in fact so pronounced have been the cures, that multitudes of former sufferers consider it nature's antidote for rheumatism. Many a bedridden person, also some who walked on crutches, regained their health through this marvelous cure and in order that every similarly afflicted reader or their friends may learn about it I will gladly mail them a trial package with direction for use and other information free even if more than 15,000 persons should apply. Distressing cases of rheumatism of 2 to 40 years standing yielded to the benign influence of the remedy of which I mention a few: In Pittsburg, Pa., it cured a druggist whose rheumatism dated back as far as the civil war. In Kenosha, Idaho, it cured a man who was bedridden for 17 years. In Lincoln City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Seaver, after she suffered for years notwithstanding employing 7 physicians. In Seguin, Texas, it cured a man who was afflicted 40 years. In Amsterdam, N. Y., it cured a lady who suffered intense pains from pain. Mr. F. L. Carey, of York Center, N. C., was cured at the Christian Endeavor Well, after suffering untold agonies for many years. Mr. N. H. Packard, of Newtonville, Mass., says that through the kind Providence of the Lord he was directed to this wonderful remedy and was quickly cured after many years of suffering.

Hundreds of letters of above nature besides the sample testimonials can be seen at my office. No one should delay but write for a free trial package. Mail your request to Prof. John V. Smith, 1000 North Dunbar Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

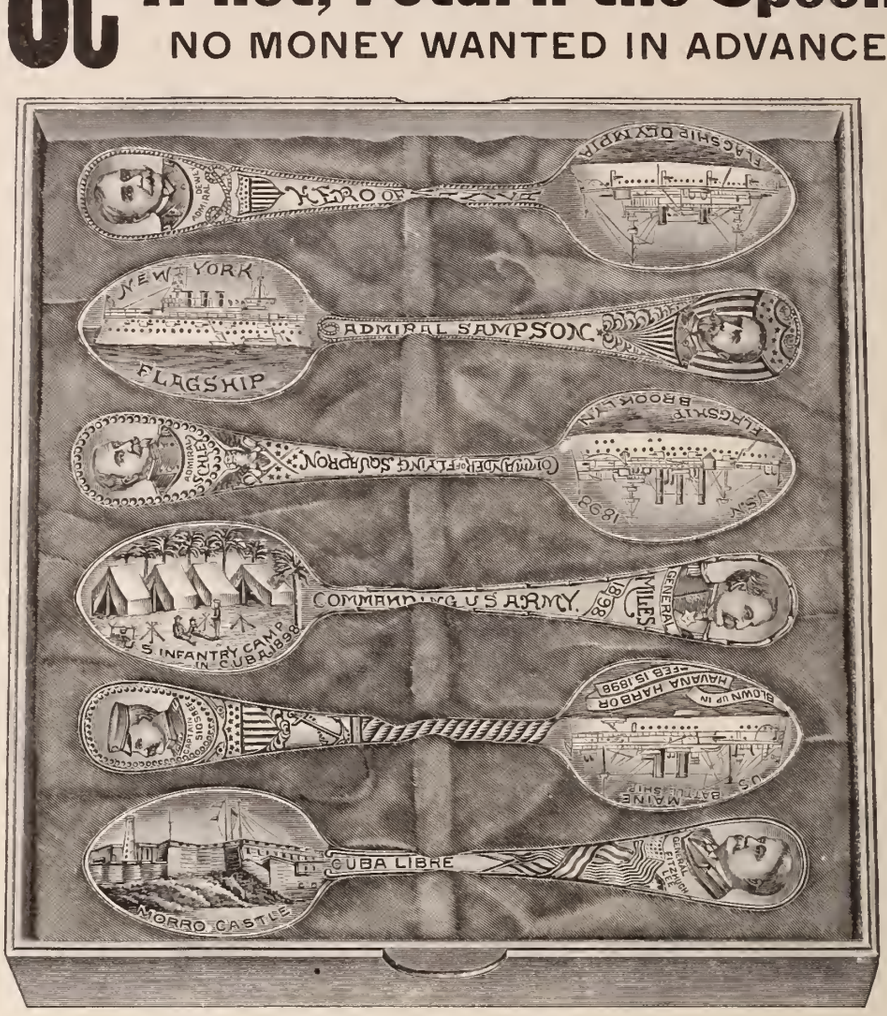
If not, return the Spoons
NO MONEY WANTED IN ADVANCE.



This offer is open to every subscriber to this paper in the United States: Send us your name and address—a postal card will do—say you're a subscriber to this paper, and that you accept our Memorial Spoon Offer. Immediately on receipt of this order, we'll mail, postpaid, a full set of six of these spoons. If you find them the most exquisitely beautiful specimens of the silversmith's art you ever saw, and worth $3, remit SEVENTY-EIGHT CENTS, as payment in full, in 30 days; if not entirely pleased, return the spoons immediately.

Henceforth we shall sell all our silver-plated ware direct to the user. The exorbitant profits of jewelers, which have kept the best of silver-plate out of reach of common people, must be abolished. Furthermore, it is our purpose to apply our "Pay-if-you're-pleased" policy to this department of our business with the same fearless confidence that we have shown in the sale of our other products. We have unbounded faith in the inherent honesty and discriminating judgment of the American people. That's why a Quaker Valley guaranty is the strongest ever written. You hold your money till you receive and inspect the goods. Our silver-plated ware is just good enough for us to to place behind it this kind of a guaranty.

Each of these spoons is of a different design, exactly as shown in illustration—after-dinner coffee size. They are warranted the very best coin-silver plate on a base-plate of nickel silver, and will wear for years. In fact, with ordinary use, they should last a lifetime and be a precious heirloom to future generations when the late war shall have become a radiant page in our national history. Better order to-day. The stock is limited.

REMEMBER, A POSTAL CARD WILL DO THE BUSINESS.

Important Announcement

We have a statement to make which we think will interest every reader. Dr. J. W. Blosser has devoted many years to the Gospel Ministry, having surrendered a lucrative medical practice for this work. He has, however, continued as a specialty, the treatment of catarrhal diseases of the respiratory tract, and has cured thousands of cases of Catarrh, with a special compound which he began using in his practice twenty-three years ago, and has since improved and perfected.

We assert positively and unequivocally that it will cure Catarrh. We do not say that it will cure every case, but, according to actual observation, it cures ninety-five per cent. of those who use it properly.

It is a pleasant, harmless remedy, yet powerful in its effect. It is applied directly to the air passages by inhalation, and is absorbed into the blood, making the treatment constitutional, as well as local. It completely eradicates the disease from the system, and makes a radical and lasting cure. We know of many who were cured years ago and are still free from the disease.

We will be pleased to mail a sample free to any person who is afflicted with any diseases of the respiratory tract. For one dollar, we will send you a quantity sufficient for one month's treatment. Please read the advertisement below.

O, the happy Christmas time,
Gay with carol and with chime!

Now the curious children peep,
As from little beds they creep.

While they slept, a starry tree
Blossomed most mysteriously.

And their dear old Santa's head
Smiles from holly, green and red.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Reader, Lincoln, Neb. Why is not the year 1900 a leap-year?

The Calendar year, as you are doubtless aware, is intended to correspond with the time it takes for the earth to make one journey in its orbit around the sun. As this is about 365 days and a quarter, the calendar reckoning is brought near to the solar, by making every fourth year a leap-year of 366 days. But it is not quite exact, as the length of the solar year is 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 50 seconds. This, you see, is 11 minutes and 10 seconds less than a quarter of a day. So that if 25 days were added in a century, which would be done by making every fourth year a leap-year, the calendar reckoning at the end of a century would be ahead of the solar reckoning by 18 hours, 36 minutes, and 40 seconds. The reckoning is brought nearer by omitting the leap-year once in a century; and this is done in the closing year of the century. So there will be no leap-year between 1896 and 1904. But neither is this exact. A whole day in a century is too much to subtract, by nearly 6 hours. So the closing year of every fourth century, is made a leap-year of 366 days. Thus the years, 2000, 2400, 2800, etc. will be leap-years. By this system, the difference between solar and calendar time will not amount to a day in 5,000 years.

Miner, Abingdon, Va. Can you tell me how many people set out for the Klondike last season, and what proportion reached it?

Exact data can not be had, but by conservative estimate 50,000 people started for the Yukon gold fields, and about 30,000 reached their destination. It is also said that each man spent $500 or more. This estimate, however, is probably an exaggeration, as many started without a proper outfit.

Janet P., Trenton, N. J. When and under what circumstances did Discovery Day, Flag Day and Liberty Day become national holidays?

June 29th, 1892, Congress resolved that President Harrison issue a proclamation making October 21, 1892 (Discovery Day), a national, but not annual holiday, in celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. Flag Day was first recognized on June 14th, 1894, by order of the Governor of New York, at the request of the Sons of the Revolution. In 1894 the Legislature of Massachusetts abolished Fast Day as a legal holiday and appointed instead "Liberty Day" (April 19th), to commemorate the defeat of the British at Concord.

William M., Trenton, N. J. Carols are songs of love and adoration, and those sung at Christmas are in commemoration of the song of the angels to the shepherds of the plains of Bethlehem. In olden times, the bishops and clergy of the English Church used to sing carols on Christmas Day, but the duty is now relegated to paid choristers.

J. L. B. Are intoxicating liquors sold at our army camps to the soldiers by men detailed by their superior officers for this purpose? If not by them, by whom is it sold?

We believe so; in some quarters, at least; but for more certain and specific information, we refer you to Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, 210 Delaware Avenue, N. E. Washington, D. C., who has made a special investigation of the matter.

C. W. G., San Marcos, Texas. Can you explain why it is that soldiers in the land and marine service of the United States are denied the right of suffrage?

In time of war, every elector of the State, in the actual military service of the United States (army or navy), who is absent from the state of his residence on the day of election, is entitled to vote at any general or special election held in the State in this manner: He, by an instrument executed by him not more than sixty days previous to such election authorizes or empowers any elector of the town or city where he resides, on the day of election, to cast for him his vote or ballot, in the manner prescribed by Chapter 253 of the Law of 1864.

C. A. Y., New York, writes:

I have just read in your paper of "a soul won by a hymn," and relate another incident of the same sort. A young man was singing songs with me, and afterwards hymns. We were singing the hymn "Come to Jesus Just Now," and as we sang the verse "don't reject him," I placed my hand on his arm. He instantly stopped singing. The next morning he said he had not been able to sleep for the words were ringing in his ears, "don't reject him," and before noon of that day he was rejoicing in a dear Saviour's love. This may encourage one who cannot speak to a friend to know that even a pressure of the hand with prayer may help to save a soul.

Our "boys in blue" are duly grateful to the Y. M. C. A. workers who have labored among them spiritually during the last three or four months. Their kind remembrances are conveyed to us in many letters like the following, lately received:

Editor of "The Christian Herald"

Mr. H. A. Howell, Army Secretary Y. M. C. A., just before we left Jacksonville, Fla., came down from Camp Wikoff and began work in the Third Nebraska Regt. From the first his heart was in it, and he spared neither time or effort in making it a grand success. Hundreds of the boys, not only from the Third Nebraska, but also from the Second Louisiana, look back with pleasure to the reviving meetings in the Y. M. C. A. tent of our regiment at Jacksonville and at Savannah, under his management.

H. B. ELLIS,
Co. B, Third Neb.

Student, Waterbury Ct. How old is the palace of the Vatican, and whence does it 'derive its name?

It was begun by Pope Symmachus, but the present cluster of buildings is the result of many additions. It stands upon a hill on the left bank of the Tiber, which in ancient times was called by the same name. Aulus Gellius declared that the name was derived from Vaticinium, or from an oracular deity of the ancient Romans, called Jupiter Vaticanus, who was worshipped there.

Joseph McD., Tenafly, N. J. Where did the phrase, "the great majority," as applied to the dead, originate?

It is probably borrowed from the idea suggested in Job 3: 13-15, from which source, also, Bryant doubtless obtained some of his inspiration in writing his Thanatopsis. The phrase, "death joins us to the great majority," occurs in an essay by John Foster, published in 1805. The phrase, "silent majority" is of more recent date.

Jessie R., Vincennes, Ind. How did Cuba get its present name, and did it ever have any other?

Cuba, or "Kooba," is a Carib word of uncertain meaning. Columbus gave the island the name of Juana, in honor of Prince John, son of Ferdinand and Isabella. Later it was called Fernandina, and afterward Santiago. Still later it was re-christened Ave Maria, but none of these names held, and the original Indian appellation remains to the present time.

Anxious, Dayton, O. Our circle here would be glad to learn the facts concerning the recent outrage on American missionaries in China, in which Dr. Lowry was involved.

The troubles began immediately after the assumption of supreme power by the Dowager Empress. On Sept. 30th, Bishop Cranston and family, accompanied by Dr. Lowry and his daughter, were mobbed in the streets of Pekin. Dr. Lowry pluckily defended the party and was badly injured, two of his ribs being broken. He is president of the Pekin University.

Mrs. Annie R., Green Park, Pa., writes:

Seeing an account of the oldest Bible, in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Nov. 9, I have to say I have an older one than any of those mentioned. The preface is signed "Chester, June, 1708." It is just the Old Testament, and it is in two volumes, and they make a large book, as there are so many authors' notes.

Possibly some reader may have a still older Bible than that mentioned above.

Mother, Dansville, N. Y. When does "Indian summer" begin?

At different times in different latitudes, thus: In Maryland it generally begins early in December, while in the New England States it arrives about the middle of November. Tradition among the Indian tribes declared that "a second summer of nine days comes just before winter begins."

Alexander P. O'D., Buffalo, N. Y. What is the difference between mean and apparent time?

The difference between "mean" and "apparent" time is the difference between the time as shown by a good clock and that indicated by a sun-dial. The greatest difference is in November, at the beginning of which month the sun is somewhat more than sixteen minutes slower than the timepiece. There are days in December, April, June and September when the sun and the clocks agree.

E. T. Ransom, Indianapolis, Ind. What has the war cost us up to the present time, including the expenditure on naval and military operations in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines?

In his report just completed, Secretary Gage states the figures thus:

National defence (army)	$ 7,034,112.3[illegible]
Cuba and Philippines (army)	600,034.0[illegible]
Increase in Pay, Subsistence, Quartermaster, Ordnance and Engineer's Department and Signal Service, aggregate	28,000,000.0[illegible]
National defence (navy)	20,622,415.2[illegible]
Auxiliary vessels	352,010.0[illegible]
Increase in various naval bureaus necessitated by the war, aggregate	3,500,000.0[illegible]

These figures do not represent the total cost of the war by any means, as the increased expenditures involved run into every department of both branches of the service. Besides, the cost of the home camps and hospitals, the equipment of volunteer regiments, etc., should be included in estimating the cost of the war.

Reader, Albany, N. Y. Does the phrase, "nations shall be born in a day," occur in the Bible?"

No. It is based upon the passage in Isaiah 66: 8: "Shall a nation be born at once?" There are many other notable passages popularly credited to the Bible, which do not appear there. Among them being these:

"The merciful man is merciful to his beast"—based on Prov. 12: 10. "Cleanliness is next to Godliness"—origin uncertain. "Money is the root of evil"—based on 1. Tim. 6: 10. "Temper the wind to the shorn lamb"—From Sterne, see Isa. 27: 8. "In the midst of life we are in death"—From a hymn by Luther.

Eva de G., Memphis, Tenn. What are the flowers that have a spiritual interpretation and which are used on religious occasions?

The rose and lily of the valley are emblematic of the Saviour; the laurel, victory and glory; the ivy, immortality; snow-drop and marigold, purity and truth; violet, modesty; pansy, charity; rosemary, the tomb; holly, ivy and laurel are used together at Christmastide; lilies, passion-flowers, pansies and violets, at Easter.

Referring to a recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG, concerning the earliest camp-meetings, Mr. J. W. Ritchey, Liberty Prairie, Ill., writes:

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church was born in a camp-meeting revival. In 1797 Rev. James McGready was holding a meeting at Red River, Kentucky. A family who had recently moved from North Carolina, desired to attend the meeting, and having no acquaintance near the place they went and camped. Mr. McGready observed the good results from this camping, and published far and near the notice that the meeting in July, 1800, would be a "camp-meeting." Campers responded, and with their wagons encircled all the place when the meeting began. John McGee visited and preached in McGready's meeting in 1799 (not earlier and probably one year later). The revival in McGready's church began in 1797, before McGee left North Carolina, and, at the meeting which McGee first visited it was in full power before he ever took any part. (See history of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church by B. W. McDonald, D.D., LL.D.).

This would seem to establish, beyond doubt, the date of the first camp-meeting—a subject lately discussed in THE MAIL-BAG.

J. R. C., Baltimore. Where can I find in the Bible the following: 1. The giant with six fingers and toes. 2. The first tent-maker. 3. The first musician?

See II. Sam. 21: 20, and Gen. 4, 20, 21.

Mrs. J. G. W., Vernon, Tex. Write to National Temperance Society, Reade Street, N. Y.

A. F. W., Unity, Me. Three syllables—Rosevelt.

E. R. S., Rochester, N. Y. Algebra should have been included.

O. B. M., Bedford, Ind. The statement is absurd. There was no rope used.

Reader, Md. Write to Bromfield and Co., publishers, New York, for Columbia's War for Cuba, price $1.

H. W., Closter, N. J., writes: "The Gould Memorial Church at Roxbury, N. Y., mentioned in your columns, is not a Presbyterian, but a Reformed Church."

S. S. F., Wilmington, N. C. Address to Santiago, Cuba. There is considerable delay in handling mail matter in Cuba at present, which may account for non-delivery.

J. J. Jones. The Government is undoubtedly doing all that lies in its power to carry out its plan of relief in Cuba, as our dispatches, published in another part of this issue, show.

The aggregate weight of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD mail matter sent out from our offices in New York City during the past three weeks, exceeded six hundred thousand pounds.

READY TO OCCUPY HAVANA

The Surrendered City will Celebrate an American Christmas this Year—Our Little Wards at the Lee Orphanage

THIS Christmas will be a memorable one in Havana, and indeed in all Cuba: but especially so in the capital, as it will be marked by the beginning of American occupation. For the first time in its history, the city will observe the ancient festival under American auspices. Where last Christmas the yellow flag of Spain floated haughtily, the Stars and Stripes will now wave, if not over all the city, over at least that portion of it which has already been surrendered. As for the rest, it is merely a matter of days, when the flag of our free republic will be found aloft everywhere throughout the "ever-faithful isle." Already the first contingent of Gen. Lee's force of occupation has arrived, and the remainder of the army will follow, so that before the dawn of the new year, the beautiful city will have passed peacefully into the control of the new regime.

Cheering reports have been received from the conductors of the Lee Orphanage in Havana, whose little inmates were among the keenest sufferers during the war, owing to the impossibility, for a time, of communicating with them or sending them supplies. These orphans, who have been sustained by the generosity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, are now comfortably cared for and happy, despite their terrible experience during the weeks when our fleet lay before Havana, and the famine-stricken city was cut off from all communication with the other cities of the island and the outside world.

In a letter from Havana, dated November 26th, Dr. Rodolfo Guzman, our correspondent and representative, acknowledges receipt of a remittance of $500 for the support of the Orphanage, and encloses some valuable and interesting information concerning the work and its management during the last three months. Following are the children now in the care of the Orphanage:

These orphan boys and girls, as will be observed by the list, have been gathered from over a score of different towns and villages, where they were found helpless and destitute, bereft of parents either by the war or famine. They are of all ages, from the wee toddler of three to the young lad or girl of fourteen or fifteen. Had it not been for the generous support of friends extended through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, they, too, would in all probability have perished with the tens of thousands who have died in Cuba within the last eight months. Dr. Guzman explains that, during the siege, the police, acting under the instructions of Gen. Arolas, made a search in the house in Estrella street, in which he resided, and where he kept valuable papers relating to the Orphanage. These papers were abstracted, and some of them have not yet been returned. Enough were preserved, however, to keep his orphanage records intact.

HAVANA AND ITS NEW MILITARY CHIEF, MAJ.-GEN. LEE, OF THE ARMY OF OCCUPATION

This new photograph of Havana was taken specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, from the roof of the highest house in the city, the residence of Senor Cardalla, the Vanderbilt of the Cuban capital.

A cargo of relief supplies, sent to Cuba under government auspices, has been distributed among the needy at Matanzas, Cardenas, Sagua, Caibarien, Remedios, Santa Clara, Santo Domingo, and other towns where suffering prevailed. The official report states that: "At each place the commissioner appointed citizen committees to arrange for the sending of laborers into the country districts, from which they were brought by Weyler's reconcentration order. Agricultural implements and seeds will be furnished to them. The sick and incapable in the various towns were cared for, and work provided for many women and children. Rations were left in sufficient quantities to meet all demands for from three to five months. The insurgents co-operated with the commissioner, the soldiers helping to build new homes for the reconcentrados. Senora Ona a wealthy women of Sagua, offered money and lands on which to build an orphan asylum. The offer was accepted and the details were left to the mayor and a number of citizens." Supplies for the sick were left at the hospitals in Sagua and Remedios. The steamer Comal with another cargo was daily expected.

Cubans, both in their own land, and in the United States, have discussed with much appreciation that portion of the President's Message which relates to the future of Cuba. On this subject the Message said:

As soon as we are in possession of Cuba, and have pacified the island, it will be necessary to give aid and direction to its people to form a government for themselves. This should be undertaken at the earliest moment consistent with safety and assured success. It is important that our relations with this people shall be of the most friendly character, and our commercial relations close and reciprocal. It should be our duty to assist in every proper way to build up the waste places of the island, encourage the industry of the people and assist them to form a government which shall be free and independent, thus realizing the best aspirations of the Cuban people. Spanish rule must be replaced by a just, benevolent and humane government, created by the people of Cuba, capable of performing all international obligations, and which shall encourage thrift, industry and prosperity, and promote peace and good will among all the inhabitants, whatever may have been their relations in the past. Neither revenge nor passion should have a place in the new government. Until there is complete tranquility in the island and a stable government inaugurated, military occupation will be continued.

This is universally accepted as an earnest of the good faith of the United States government toward the Cuban people, whom it is desired to afford the opportunity for self-government whenever they shall demonstrate their fitness for the experiment. Meanwhile the American occupation of the island will continue until these conditions are realized. Steps are now being taken to organize proper police protection for Havana and all the important cities of Cuba. It is expected that the Cubans themselves will give earnest and energetic co-operation in the work of pacification, and inducing the scattered population to return to their homes and occupations.

For some time to come, the support of a portion of the Cuban people, especially in those provinces affected by the war, must devolve upon the American authorities. With the expected revival of native industries, and the resumption of agricultural labor, the suffering among the people of Cuba will disappear.

LITTLE ORPHANS AT VAN

Dr. Raynolds Writes of the Educational and Relief Work in the Old Armenian City

IN a letter received last week from Dr. G. C. Raynolds (who was associated with Dr. Grace Kimball in the noble relief work at Van, Armenia, during the massacres and subsequent famine), he gives some interesting information regarding the progress of educational work among the Armenian orphans. It will be remembered that when the balance of the Armenian Relief Fund was divided, an appropriation was made for the support of Dr. Raynolds' orphan work. He writes:

"Yesterday's post brought your favor of October 1, with its inclosure of the second quarterly instalment of the grant so kindly made us from the balance of the Armenian Fund. I desire to renew my most hearty thanks for this generous gift.

"I inclose some photographs I have recently had taken. One of the pictures shows a part of one of the five companies into which our two hundred boys are divided.

"This orphanage work is one which has most entirely taken possession of my heart, but it is only one of the departments of relief that are under my care. We are still carrying on the industrial work which Dr. Grace Kimball so efficiently started, thereby enabling more than 700 women to earn enough by spinning to give some food to over 2,000 souls. Besides this, some 600 looms are kept at work, providing for the support of some two thousand more. This department is mainly supported by the ladies of the Woman's Armenian Aid Society in England. Besides the 350 children in the orphanage, we have, ever since the massacre, provided a dole of bread daily to about as many more orphans, whom we have not room to receive into the buildings. Save for a few exceptional cases, these last have comprised the number who have received free aid during the last summer. The promise of the harvest was not fulfilled in these parts, while in the regions south of us the crop was almost an entire failure. The price of breadstuffs, instead of declining with the incoming harvest, has advanced, so that the proportion of those who are able to supply their needs is very much less than we had reason to hope before the harvest.

"The Koords, I am sorry to say, are not being kept in subjection. One powerful chief holds a large section of the country practically under his personal sway, acknowledging no fealty to the government, holding back the grain from the market, and robbing and pillaging at his own will. Dr. Belck, a German savant, now our guest, traveling in these parts in search of cuneiform inscriptions, etc., was robbed by this chief's men, shot at, at short range, left for dead, and only saved by his skill and presence of mind in falling and feigning death.

"Unless free aid is rendered, there is likely to be much hunger during the winter. G. C. RAYNOLDS."

MASTER OF THE SITUATION

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Zechariah 2: 4, ... } Run, speak to this young man

THERE was no snow on the beard of the prophet of my text, and no crows'-feet had left their mark near his eyes. Zechariah was a young man, and in a day-dream he saw and heard two angels talking about the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem. One of these angels desires that young Zechariah should be well informed about the rebuilding of that city, its circumference and the height of its walls, and he says to the other angel, "Run, speak to this young man." Do not walk, but run, for the message is urgent and imminent. So every young man needs to have immediate advice about the dimensions, the height, and the circumference of that which, under God, he is to build, namely, his own character and destiny. No slow or laggard pace will do. A little farther on, and counsel will be of no advantage. Swift-footed must be the practical and important suggestions, or they might as well never be made at all. Run at the pace of five miles the hour, and speak to that young man. Run, before this year of 1898 is ended. Run, before this century is closed. Run, before his character is inexorably decided for two worlds, this world and the next. How many of us have found out by long and bitter experience things that we ought to have been told before we were twenty-five years of age. Now I propose to tell you some things which, if you will seriously and prayerfully observe, will make you master of the situation in which you are now placed, and master of every situation in which you ever will be placed. And in order that my subject may be climacteric, I begin on the outside edge of that advice, which will be more and more important as the subject unfolds.

Now if you would be master of the situation, do not expend money before you get it. How many young men irretrievably mortgage their future because of resources that are quite sure to be theirs. Have the money either in your hand, or in a safety deposit, or in a bank, or in a United States bond before you make purchases, or go into expensive enterprises, or hitch a spanking team to a glittering turn out, or contract for the building of a mansion on the Potomac or the Hudson. Do not depend on an inheritance from your father or uncle. The old man may live on a good deal longer than you expect, and the day of your enforced payment may come before the day of his decease. You cannot depend upon rheumatism or heart failure or senility to do its work. Longevity is so wonderfully improved that you cannot depend upon people dying when you think they ought to. They live to be septuagenarians, or octogenarians, or nonagenarians, or even centenarians, and meanwhile their heirs go into bankruptcy, or tempted to forgery, or misappropriation of trust funds, or watering of railroad or mining stock, go into the penitentiary. Neither had you better spread yourself out because of the fifteen or twenty per cent. you expect from an investment. Most of the fifteen or twenty per cent. investments are apt to pay nothing save the privilege of being assessed to meet the obligations of the company in the affairs of which you get involved. Better get three and a half per cent. from a government bond than be promised fifteen per cent. from a dividend which will never be declared, or paid only once or twice, so as to tempt you deeper in before the grand smash up, and you receive, instead of a payment of dividends, a letter from the president and secretary of the company saying they are very sorry.

If you have to wait a year, or five years, or ten years, or most of your life time, then you had better wait rather than spend money you expect to get. Then after you get it, do not spend it all. Never spend a dollar until you have fifty cents that you do not spend. In the Government service in this city, how many splendid women who are the daughters of men who spent all they got and then sneaked out of life to leave their daughters penniless, to be looked after by some kind senator or other friend who might solicit for them a position on small salary, but enough to keep them from starvation and the poorhouse! Such men do not die; they abscond. I cannot understand how such spendthrift and reckless and improvident men dare, at their decease, appear at the door of heaven seeking admission, when they have left their families in the tophet of want and mendicancy. Such men do not deserve a throne and a harp and a mansion, but an everlasting poor-house. From no disappointed or disgruntled state of mind do I give this counsel, for life has been to me a glad surprise, as it has been to most people a disappointment. I expected nothing of advantage or opportunity, and so everything has been to me a matter of pleased amazement; but I have seen so many men ruined for time and eternity by going into expenditure, with nothing to depend upon except anticipation, that if I had power to put all warnings into one clap of thunder, I would with that startling vehemence say to all young men what John Randolph said in yonder Senate Chamber, as he stretched his long finger out toward some Senatorial opponent, and with shrill voice cried out, "Gentlemen, pay as you go!"

Do not say you have no chance, but remember Isaac Newton, the greatest astronomer of his day, once peddling cabbages in the street; and Martin Luther, singing on the public square for any pennies that he might pick up; and John Bunyan, mending kettles; and the late Judge Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court, who was the son of a charcoal-burner; and Turner, the painter, who was the son of a barber; and Lord Clive, who saved India to England, shipped by his father to Madras as a useless boy whom he wanted to get rid of; and Prideaux, the world renowned scholar and theologian, scouring pots and pans to work his way through college; and the mother of the late William E. Dodge, the philanthropist and magnificent man, keeping a thread and needle store; and Peter Cooper, who worked on small wages in a glue factory, living to give five hundred thousand dollars for the founding of an institute that has already educated thousands of the poor sons and daughters of America; and Bowditch, the scientist, beginning his useful learning and affluent career by reading the books that had been driven ashore from a shipwreck at Salem. There is, young man, a great financial or literary or moral or religious success awaiting you if you only know how to go up and take it. Then take it, or get ready to take it. The mightier the opposition the grander the triumph when you have conquered. There is a flower in Siberia that blooms only in January, the severest month of that cold climate. It is a star-shaped flower and covered with glistening specks that look like diamonds. A Russian took some of the seeds of that flower to St. Petersburg and planted them, and they grew, and on the coldest day of January they pushed back the snow and ice and burst into full bloom. They called it the "snow flower," and it makes me think of those whom the world tries to freeze out and snow under, but who, in the strength of God, push through and up and out, and bloom in the hardest weather of the world's cold treatment, starred and radiant with a beauty given only to those who find life a struggle and turn it into a victory.

Again: If you would master the situation, when angry do not utter a word or write a letter, but before you speak a word or write a word, sing a verse of some hymn, in a tune arranged in minor key and having no staccato passages. If very angry, sing two verses. If in a positive rage, sing three verses. First of all, the unhealthiest thing on earth is to get mad. It jangles the nerves, enlarges the spleen, and sets the heart into a wild thumping. Many a man and many a woman has in time of such mental and physical agitation dropped dead. Not only that, but it makes enemies out of friends, and makes enemies more virulent, and anger is partial or consummate suicide. Great attorneys, understanding this, have often won their cause by wilfully throwing the opposing counsel into a rage. There is one man you must manage, or one woman you must control, in order to please God and make life a success, and that is yourself. There are drawbridges to every castle by which you may keep out of your nature foreign foes, but no man has a defense against himself unless it be a divine defense. Out of the millions of the human race there is only one person who can do you permanent and everlasting harm, and that is the being that walks under your own hat and in your own shoes. The hardest realm that you will ever have to govern is the realm between your scalp and heel. The most dangerous cargo a ship can carry is dynamite, and the most perilous thing in one's nature is an explosive temper. If your nature is hopelessly irascible and tempestuous, then dramatize placidity. If the ship is on fire and you cannot extinguish the flames, at any rate keep down the hatches. When at some injustice inflicted upon you, or some insult offered, or some wrong done, the best thing for you to say is to say nothing, and the best thing for you to write is to write nothing. If the meanness done you is unbearable, or you must express yourself or die, then I commend a plan that I have once or twice successfully adopted. Take a sheet of paper. Date it at your home or office. Then put the wrong-doer's name at the head of the letter-page, without any prefix of "Colonel," or suffix of "D.D.," and begin with no term of courtesy, but a bold and abrupt "Sir." Then follow it with a statement of the wrong he has done you, and of the indignation you have felt. Put into it the strongest terms of execration you can employ without being profane. Sign your name to the red-hot epistle. Fold it. Envelope it. Direct it plainly to the man who has done you wrong. Carry the letter a week, or two weeks, if need be, and then destroy it. In God's name, destroy it! I like what Abraham Lincoln said to one of his Cabinet officers. That Cabinet officer had been belied and misrepresented until, in a fury, he wrote a letter of arraignment to his enemy, and in tersest possible phraseology told him what he thought of him. The Cabinet officer read it to Mr. Lincoln and asked him how he liked it. Mr. Lincoln replied, "It is splendid for sarcasm and scorn. I never heard anything more complete in that direction. But do you think you can afford to send it?" That calm and wise and Christian interrogation of the President stopped the letter, and it was never sent. Young man, before you get far on in life, unless you are to be an exception among men, you will be wronged, you will be misinterpreted, you will be outraged. All your sense of justice will be in conflagration. Let me know how you meet that first great offense and I will tell you whether your life is to be a triumph or a failure. You see, equipoise at such a time means so many things: It means self-control. It means a capacity to foresee results. It means a confidence in your own integrity. It means a faith in the Lord God that he will see you through.

Again: If you would be master of the situation, put the best interpretation on the character and behavior of others. Do not be looking for hypocrites in churches, or thieving among domestic servants, or swindlers among business men, or malfeasance in office. There is much in life to make men suspicious of others, and when that characteristic of suspicion becomes dominant, a man has secured his own unhappiness, and he has become an offence in all circles, religious, commercial and political. The man who moves for a committee of investigation is generally a moral derelict. The man who goes with his nostrils inflated, trying to discover something malodorous, is not a man, but a sleuth-hound! The world is full of nice people, generous people, people who are doing their best—good husbands, good wives, good fathers, good mothers, good officers of the law, good judges, good governors, good State and National legislators, good rulers. Does some man growl out, "That has not been my experience, and I think just the opposite?" Well, my brother, I am sorry for your afflictive circumstances, and that you had an unfortunate ancestry, and that you have kept such bad company, and had such discouraging environment. I notice that after a man has been making a violent tirade against his fellow-men, he is on his way down, and if he live long enough he will be asking you for a quarter of a dollar to get a drink or a night's lodging. Behave yourself well, oh, young man, and you will find life a pleasant thing to live, and the world full of friends, and God's benediction about you.

Again: If you would be master of the situation, expect nothing from good luck, or haphazard, or gaming adventures. In this time, when it is estimated that gambling exchanges money to the amount of about eighty million dollars a day, this remark may be useful. There come times in many a man's life when he hopes to get something for which he does not give an equivalent, and there are fifty kinds of gambling. Stand aloof from all of them. Understand that the gambling spirit is a disease, and the more successful you are, the more certain you are to go right on to your own ruin. Having made his thousands, why does not the gambler stop, and make a safe investment of what he has gained, and spend the rest of his life in quiet, or less hazardous style of occupation? The reason is, he cannot stop. Nothing but death ever cures a confirmed gambler. Doctor Keeley's gold cure rescues the drunkard, and there are anti-tobacco preparations that will arrest the victim of nicotine, and religion can save any one except a gambler. The fact is, he is irresponsible. Having got the habit in him, he is no more responsible for keeping on, than a man falling from the roof of a four-story house can stop at the window of the second story. Here and there you may find an instance where a gambler has been reported, or reports himself, as being converted, but in that case the man was not fully under the heel of the passion. The real gambler is a through passenger to death and perdition. The only use in referring to him is in the way of prevention. He began by taking chances on a bookcase or a sewing machine at a church fair, and ended by getting a few pennies for his last valuable in a pawn-broker's shop. The only man who gambles successfully is the man who loses so fearfully at the start that he is disgusted and quits. Let him win at the start, and win again, and it means farewell to home and heaven. Most merciless of all habits! Horace Walpole says that a man dropped down at the door of a club-house in London and was carried in, and the gamblers began to bet whether he was dead or not, and when it was proposed to bleed him for his recovery, the gamblers objected that it would affect the fairness of the bet. What noble men they must have been!

Again: If you would be master of the situation, never adjourn until to-morrow what you can do to-day. The difference between happy and inspiring work and wearying and exhausting and dispiriting work is the difference between work behind you and work before you. But always wait until you feel like it, wait until circumstances are more propitious, wait till next week, or wait till next year, and the probability is the work will be only half done, or never done at all. Postponement is the curse of a vast population. After awhile all the things that ought to have been done previously will rush in upon you, and it being too much for your brain and nerves, you will be a fit subject for paralysis or nervous prostration. How many battles have been lost because the general did not strike quick enough, and the enemy had full time to gather reinforcement? You intend some time to write that important letter. You intend some time to make that business call. You intend some time to finish that book. You intend some time to preach that sermon. Where is some time? What is some time? Does it walk, or does it float about you? Will it happen to come? No! Some time is never. There are no stragglers in the days and months and years. If one day should refuse to keep step, and become a straggler, it would wreck the universe. Promptness!

Up to time! To-day! Now! You will get only what you win. There are accidents, like the printer's mistake, which caused Louis Napoleon to be called "Napoleon III." A Parisian editor, at the time that Louis Napoleon, by base strategy, turned the republic into a monarchy, wrote in derision the word "Napoleon," followed by three exclamation points. These exclamation points the printer mistook for the letter "I" three times written, and hence he was called "Napoleon III." But promotions by accident are not to be depended on. Depend on getting nothing except that which, under God, by your own industry and good sense you achieve. That was a good maxim of olden time. "Get thy spindle and distaff ready, and God will send thee flax." Especially do our young men need to get ready, as within the past few months the world has unfolded before them opportunities such as we never dreamed would come so soon. Putting aside the political question as to what ought to be done with Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, the whole world, for the first time, is open, and the question now is, what our young men will do with the world. China, the richest of all lands for metals and, with five hundred million of people, is made our neighbor, and the commerce of the United States is to be quadrupled in the life of the present generation, and what advantages commerce, advantages mechanism, and art, and literature, and the professions. The American plow, the American hammer, the American pen, the American printing-press, the American bargain-counter, are soon to have their opportunity in every island of the sea and every continent. Young men! You need to be wiser, braver, better men than we have ever been to meet the crisis.

Again: If you would be master of the situation, and I name it last, because it is the most important, for you know that which is last mentioned is apt to be best remembered, I charge you get into your heart and life, your conversation and your manners, your body, mind and soul, the near six thousand-year-old religion of the Bible. Why so? Because the large majority of people quit this life before twenty-five years of age, and the possibility is that if you do not take possession of this religion, and religion does not take possession of you while you are young, you will never come into alliance. Mrs. McKinley, the mother of our President, said to me at the White House, "I am living on borrowed time, for I am over eighty years of age." My reply to her was the reply I make to you. "All those who are over fifteen years of age are living on borrowed time, since the majority of people go out of the world before fifteen years of age."

Heraclitus, according to Plato, said that no man bathes twice in the same river. But suppose you live to be octogenarians, do you not see that postponement is an awful waste of nerve and muscle and brain. What is the use of your pulling a heavy load all your life, when you can have two of the white horses that St. John saw in heaven harnessed to your load? Suppose you have a great mill-wheel to turn. You can put that mill-wheel where it will be turned by a millrace of water one foot deep, poured by a small brook, or you can put it along the deep and swift St. Lawrence, which will roll through the millrace tons of water every second of time. Are you going to run your life by the shallow drippings of earthly influence or by the rolling rivers of Omnipotent power? Are you going to undertake the work of life with nothing but your own brain or arm, or with your own brain and arm backed up by all the terrestrial and all the celestial forces of the Almighty? I make as great an offer as was ever made by man. I offer you God! He tells me to make that point-blank proposition. If you want them you can have them on your side for the earnest asking.—Omniscience, Omnipresence, Omnipotence! Can you imagine a greater contrast than a young man undertaking life alone,—life, with all its confrontments of temptation and obstacle,—and a young man undertaking life with every wing of angel and every thunderbolt of heaven pledged for his defense and advancement: the difference between a young man alone, and a young man befriended by the Maker and Upholder of the Universe? The battle of life is so severe that no young man can afford to decline any help, and the mightiest help is God. One night in the year 1741 Count Lessock went to escort the Princess Elizabeth of Russia to a throne which was then unoccupied. She halted, she hesitated, she wondered whether she had better go to the palace and mount the throne of all the Russias. Then Count Lessock drew on a paper two sketches, the one of herself and the Count in disgrace and on the scaffold, and the other of herself on a throne amid huzzahing subjects. When she saw plainly that she must make a choice, she chose the throne. I put before the young men of Washington and the young men of America, the choice between overthrow and enthronement. You may have what you will. Will you be the slave of passion, and sin, and death, or a conqueror empalaced? The Spanish proverb was right when it said, "The road of By and By leads to the town of Never."

More young men would take this advantage which I speak of if they did not have the notion that religion puts one into depressing process. They have heard, for instance, the absurd preachment, "You ought to live every day as though it were your last." Such a lachrymose man I would not want anywhere around me. On the contrary, you ought to live as though you were going to live a great while in this world, and to live forever in the next world. There is no smell of varnish of coffin-lids in our genuine religion. Get in right relation with God through Jesus Christ, and you need not bother yourself the rest of your life for two minutes about your death or about your funeral. Here is a manly religion, one that will extirpate from your nature all that ought to be extirpated, and irradiate it with every virtue, and make it glow with every anticipation.

Neither would I have you adopt that other absurd preachment, that the things of this world are of little importance as compared with the next world. On the contrary, you cannot sufficiently appreciate the importance of this world, for it decides your next world. You might as well despise a school house because it is not a university. In the school house we prepare for the university. If this world is of such little importance, I do not think the first-born and the last-born of heaven would have spent thirty-three years down here to redeem it.

Do not postpone to the fifties or even the forties of your life that which you can be and do in the twenties or thirties. If you do not amount to much before forty years of age, you will never amount to much. Jefferson wrote the Declaration of American Independence at thirty-three years of age. William Pitt was Prime Minister of England at twenty-four. Raphael's great paintings were all finished before he was thirty-seven years of age. Cortez was thirty-one when he overcame Mexico. Grotius was Attorney-General at twenty-four. Gustavus Adolphus expired at thirty-eight. At twenty-seven Calvin published his immortal Institutes. Alexander the Great died at thirty-seven, and lesser men get armed for the chief good or evil of their lives before they reach their mid-life.

Young man, start right, and the only way to start right is to put yourself into companionship with the best friend a young man ever had,—Christ the Lord. He will give you equipoise amid the rocking of life's uncertainties. He will support you in day of loss. He will direct you when you come to the forks of the road and know not which road to take. He will guide you in your home life, if you are wise enough to have a home of your own. If you live on to old age, he will make the evening twilight as bright as, and perhaps brighter than, was the morning twilight, and when your work on earth is done the gates of a better world will open on expansions and enthronements and felicities which St John describes, sometimes as orchards, sometimes as shaded streets, and sometimes as a crystalline river, and inhabitants always tearless, and songful, and resplendent, so that the mightiest calamity of the universe is the portion of that one who fails to enter it.

Young man, seek only elevating and improving companionship. Do not let the last scion of a noble family, a fellow with a big name but bad habits, for he drinks and swears and is dissolute, take your arm to walk down the street, or spend an evening with you, either at your room or his room. Remember that sin is the most expensive thing in God's universe. I have read that Sir Brasil, the Knight, tired out with the chase, had a falcon on his wrist, as they did in days of falconry, when with hawks or falcons they went forth to bring down partridges, or grouse, or pigeons, and being very thirsty, came to a stream struggling from a rock, and releasing the falcon from his wrist, he took the bugle which he carried, and stopping the mouth-piece of his bugle with a tuft of moss, he put this extemporized cup under the water which came down, drop by drop, from the rock until the cup was full, and then lifted it to drink, when the falcon he had released, with sudden swoop dashed the cup from his hand. Enraged at this insolence and violence of the bird, he cried, "I will wring thy neck if thou doest that again." But having filled the cup a third time and trying to drink, a third time the falcon dashed it down. Then Sir Brasil with his fist struck the bird, which fluttered and looked lovingly and reproachfully at him and dropped dead. Then Sir Brasil, looking up to the top of the rock whence dripped the water, saw a great green serpent, coiled told above fold, the venom from his mouth dropping into that from which Sir Brasil had filled his cup. Then exclaimed the knight, "What a kind thing it was for the falcon to dash down that poisoned cup, and what a sad thing that I killed him, and what a narrow escape I had!" So now there are no more certainly waters that refresh than waters that poison. This moment there are thousands of young men, unwittingly and not knowing what they do, taking into their bugle-cup of earthly joy that which is deadly because it drips from the jaws of that old serpent, the devil, and the dove of God's Spirit in kindly warning dashes down the cup: but again it is filled and again dashed down, and again filled and again dashed down. Why not turn away and slake your thirst at the clear, bright, perennial fountain that breaks from the Rock of Ages, a fountain so wide and so deep that all the inhabitants of earth, and all the armies of heaven, may stoop down and fill their chalices?

JESUS AND THE LITTLE CHILD

A Great Painter's Life-Work

Tissot's Wonderful Representation of the Life and Times of Jesus

FOR many months past the art world of two continents has been discussing with mingled feelings of surprise and delight the remarkable productions of J. James Tissot, a French artist. Tissot's peculiar genius seems to have been indeed consecrated, and he has accomplished in a comparatively brief period, what no other artist has ever attempted in a life-time, in reproducing on canvas the life and manners of the Holy Land in the time of Christ.

In a recent article in The Review of Reviews, Clifton Harby Levy says of Tissot and his paintings:

He went to Palestine, there to study the places associated by Scripture and tradition with the name of Jesus. He stayed there two or three months, making sketches which he thought would suffice for paintings dealing with Jesus and his disciples. He was on the point of returning to Paris, when he looked over his drawings and saw how few and unsatisfactory they were. He determined to make a hundred, but when those were completed their paucity again impressed him. He would make a hundred more; but even then he was unsatisfied. It was only after he had finished three hundred and sixty-five paintings in oil and water color, and had, while ten years had elapsed, made a hundred and fifty pen-and-ink sketches, that he felt content with having done his best to tell the story of Jesus as it had never been told before.

Mr. Tissot made a careful study of the Gospels. He had read them so often that he knew them by heart, but he felt that without the background of the country and its customs, they were often incomprehensible. He tried to free himself from all prejudices and dogmas. He wished to know "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," and present it by the power of paint and pencil to the Christian world. With this end in view he remained in Palestine for ten long years, following the steps of Jesus as closely as he could that he might catch the spirit and atmosphere of Him he was trying to trace. He could not give a contemporaneous life of Jesus, but he could, at least, try to come as near to it as possible. So he studied every ruin. He talked with the rabbis in Jerusalem; he conversed with Turk and Syrian, learning all of the traditions so carefully treasured up in the Orient.

He trod, as far as could be ascertained, the very places where Jesus walked, and on the hallowed soil he posed his living models—men and women who, with costume and custom unchanged by the centuries might fitly represent the figures of the past. In the consecrated enthusiasm of his art, he has reproduced, with a realistic fidelity that has astonished the critical world, the scenes and incidents of the Gospel history, with figures full of character, and amid such surroundings as no other painter ever drew. His figures are those of the real people of Palestine of the first century.

These remarkable paintings, which are now on exhibition at the American Art Gallery in New York City, are being widely discussed. It is understood to be Mr. Tissot's intention to present them to some public institution where they will be fitly preserved to posterity. We have been privileged to reproduce one of the canvases on this page—that which illustrates the incident related in Mark 9: 35, 36, 37: "And he took a child and set him in the midst of them," etc. Beneath the drawing Mr. Tissot has written: "There is a legend extant which says that the child which Jesus took upon his lap was no other than Ignare, later Bishop of Antioch, and a martyr."

CHRIST, THE TRUE LIGHT

S. S. Lesson for January 1. John 1: 1-14. Golden Text, John 1: 4

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

JOHN the Apostle was the evangelist of Christ's divinity. While the evangelists, Matthew, Mark and Luke, commence respectively with his earthly pedigree—his birth, and the birth of his forerunner, John the Baptist—this evangelist sees far back into past eternity: "In the beginning was the Word." To the Apostle John, his Lord filled past and future. While St. Matthew knew him as the King of the Jews, St. Mark as the Servant of God, and St. Luke as the Son of man, this evangelist knew him as the Eternal Word, who spoke and it was done, who commanded and it stood fast (Ps. 33: 9). John saw him as the Father's Message and Messenger in One. That Word which was with God, which was God, which was in the beginning with God, by whom all things were made, and without whom nothing was made that was made—that he, still upholding all things by the word of his power, should become flesh and dwell among us, spoke out the mighty volume of the Father's heart. He was, he is, he still will be, the Word of God. It is foretold that in that supreme day when the marriage of the Lamb shall be celebrated, "His name is called the Word of God" (Rev. 19: 13). How wondrous is the revelation to a soul when the Word of God reveals the Person of Christ sent of the Father, and Christ himself in person opens the written Word to the soul! It is indeed a turning "from darkness to light," a passing "from death unto life" (Acts 26: 18; John 5: 24).

"In him was life." He is Life: life which cannot cease to be. "Because I live ye shall live also" (John 14: 19); he has "abolished death, and brought life and incorruption to light through the Gospel" (II. Tim. 1: 10, R.V.). It was through death he destroyed him that had the power of death, even the devil (Heb. 2: 14), by becoming obedient unto death. (Phil. 2: 8). He made a way through death, and though condemned to die by the sin of every man, for he tasted death for every man (Heb. 2: 9), yet he took again the life he had laid down, and proved that he could not be holden of death (Acts 2: 24), and could not see corruption (Acts 2: 31). And thus he has made the way for us. As we take our place with him, crucified with Christ, he brings into us his own life. "Not I live, but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. 2: 20). In him was life before he became Man, and when he did become incarnate the Father dwelt in him, and did the works, and whoever saw him saw the Father (John 14:9, 10).

"And the Life was the light of men." Again and again our Lord said of himself, "I am the Light of the world," "I am come a light into the world" (John 8: 12; 11: 35, 36). Who is there that can see things as they really are until the Lord Jesus Christ has come into his heart? No man can see his own sinfulness but in the light of Christ's suffering and death, revealed by the Holy Spirit. Who can understand God's dispensations in the world, in the church in his own family, in his own being, until the blood of Christ, his atonement and intercession, and his wondrous purposes of grace for us in the future, light up the whole? The life of the God Man is indeed the light of men, and all are in darkness until they awake from this sleep and arise from the dead, and Christ gives them light (Eph. 5: 14). But they who do not awake, who will not come to the light, comprehend not, although the light which illuminates others, "shineth in darkness."

"There was a man sent from God whose name was John." Would that as much could be said of every preacher and every foreign missionary; a man sent of God must be a power! "The same came for a witness, that he might bear witness of the light, that all men might believe through him. He was not the Light, but came that he might bear witness of the Light" (R.V.) It is the most exact description of every true evangelist or missionary: a witness who can tell what he has seen and heard; not what he thinks, but what he knows of Jesus. This witness of Jesus leads other men to believe.

The world, as a whole, would have none of Christ. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. "Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people" (Isa. 60: 2). "He came unto his own [things], and they that were his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the children of God, even to them that believe on his name" (R. V.). The world, as a whole, will not be converted until Christ shall reign. Till this day Satan is the prince of this world, and represents the claims of Christ as those of a usurper. The prince of darkness blinds the minds of them that believe not, by persuading them that God's demands are unjust, unkind and unreasonable; that God has made them with a sinful nature, and then expects them to hate sin; that he has created them with a bodily frame, and a mental constitution, which necessitates that things material shall be paramount with them, and yet expects them, against nature, to seek first the kingdom of God, which is not of this world.

But the enemy of souls, in his subtle reasoning, would altogether hide or ignore the wondrous truth that the Word which was from the beginning "was made flesh and dwelt among us," for the very purpose of lifting us up from our nature into his. By the plea of rationalism on the one hand, and of sacerdotalism on the other, he seeks to deceive. Rationalism denies our natural depravity, and ignores that walking according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, of which Paul speaks (Ephesians 2: 2), and justifies the "fulfilling of the desires of the flesh and of the mind" (verse 3), seeking to prove that goodness is inherent in us. Sacerdotalism, on the other hand, allows our natural corruption, but teaches that through the offices of a fellow-sinner, born in sin as we are, who administers baptism and the Lord's Supper, we can be restored to and kept in the favor of God. And hundreds of thousands are thus deceived. But Scripture is clear indeed. "As many as received him to them gave he power [right or privilege] to become the children of God, even to them which believe on his name" (R.V.). To believe on his name does not necessarily include faith in any special church, and is not connected necessarily, at the moment of believing, with either sacrament, it is the utter and unreserved confidence of one person in another, the sinner in his Saviour. And with this comes an utterly new nature. "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Born of God, out of the being of God! No wonder Paul says, "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature, old things have passed away; behold all things are become new, and all things are of God" (II. Cor. 5: 17, 18). There is power in such a life: for whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world.

AFTER WINTERSTEIN'S FAMOUS PAINTING

JESUS AND JOHN THE BAPTIST

LESSON POINTS

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

SHORT, simple, familiar words are used in this lesson, but the meaning is profound. Probably there is no passage in any book that in so small a space opens so wide a vista of thought. We know well what is meant by life, by light, by a son, but used as John uses the words, the human intellect strives in vain to grasp the meaning. John has nothing to say about this prologue in the chapters that follow; but in his first epistle he recurs to the subject and amplifies it. Yet there is a connection between his prologue and his Gospel. As he tells us (20: 31) his idea in writing the Gospel was to induce the belief that Jesus was the Son of God. To this end, he does not write the life of Christ, as the other Evangelists had done, but presents a series of incidents in that life and certain utterances of Christ, which together, had produced that belief in him and the other Apostles. This prologue, therefore, presents his conception of Christ's nature and being, which he proves to be true by the incidents that he proceeds to relate. He conceives of Christ first as the Word. God is a spirit, but he expresses and reveals himself through a medium, as the spirit of man reveals itself to others by the words it utters. Such a revelation of God, John says, there always was. It "was in the beginning with God." It moved in creation, but the mighty forces of nature could tell us only of power; they could tell us nothing of God's love and tenderness. So a further revelation was necessary; and the Word which had created, became life and the life became light. It lighted every man, but the darkness continued. It did not apprehend the light that was shining. So the Word that had become life and light, became flesh. Revelation could come to men, only by something like themselves. Thus Christ revealed God to men as far as it was possible for the nature he had assumed to reveal him. The result was transformation of character. Whosoever perceived and welcomed this revelation of God was changed in being; he received power to himself become a son of God. That is John's conception of the mystery of the Gospel: God was in Christ revealing himself to the world.

The Word. If a man has a friend who is very dear to him, he does not dwell so much on his friend's appearance, as on the words he utters. It is the companionship, the interchange of thought, which constitute the friendship. If his friend removes to the other side of the world, his letters still keep up the friendship. They reveal, or express, the man that he loves. Thus the word is the medium by which the spirit of his friend, which is invisible, becomes known to him. So Jacob, overcome by contrition at Peniel, declared that he had seen God, and so the prophets say that "the word of the Lord came" to them. It is a revelation of the invisible. We do not see the wind, but we know that there is wind by the moving dust and leaves which are blown hither and thither. Words, mere words, we sometimes say, as if they were of no account; yet words may have great results. The words of Demosthenes stirred the people to fight Philip. A few words indiscreetly uttered now might provoke a war between France and England, or between France and Germany.

To bear witness of the light. John the Baptist understood his mission. There was need of a stirring up of the whole nation, which was benumbed by formalism and mere triviality. His preaching was to be a preparation, a call to personal repentance, so that when Christ spoke he might address people who had realized their need of a Saviour. A famous novelist tells of a young man, the son of a noble father, whose heart he had broken by misconduct. The father longed to forgive him, but he knew that forgiveness would do mischief. The young man would continue in his evil courses. The father consulted his brother about his son, and told him exactly how he felt. This brother, a kind and wise man, visited his nephew and persuaded him to go on a journey with him. He introduced him to men in distinguished positions who knew his father, and let him see how that father was respected. Then he told him about his father's goodness, and the noble deeds he had done, and the fine traits of his character which the son had never recognized. Gradually he produced the impression that it was a cruel and disgraceful thing to grieve so good a father, and by-and-bye he saw the young man weep over his past crimes. Then he was in a condition in which pardon would do good, and the son went home to ask for it.

AN UPHEAVAL IN KOREA

Reformers Now in Control at Seoul, and the Capital Torn with Riot and Excitement—A National Crisis in the "Hermit Kingdom"

KOREA is again in the throes of a social and political upheaval. Cable dispatches announce that serious riots have occurred at Seoul, the capital, in which several Koreans were killed. The disturbances seem to have been the outcome of agitation caused by the Independence Club, the new factor in Korean affairs, whose followers have been making remarkably rapid progress for some time past. It is opposed to the corruption of the palace officials, and to the adherents of the old regime generally. These continued disturbances make the ultimate absorption of Korea by Japan all the more probable.

Mrs. Rosetta S. Hall, our missionary correspondent in Korea, sends the following letter, which is exceedingly timely, in view of the present troubles:

"In Seoul, September 11th, occurred the attempted poisoning of the Emperor and Crown Prince. As usual, reliable information seemed impossible to be obtained. The suspected party, Kim Hongniuk, formerly Russian interpreter and for a short time Governor of Seoul, proved to be the instigator in the recent plot to poison the Emperor and Crown Prince. October 10th, he and the two he had placed in the Imperial kitchen to do his bidding were hanged. Their bodies were exposed later in the public square by order of Sin Kuisun, the Minister of Law, and it is said they were horribly mutilated by an infuriated mob. The wife of Kim Hongniuk was exiled; although she denied having any knowledge of the plot, the court held it to be impossible that she should have been ignorant. Before Kim Hongniuk was sentenced, the thirty-four Privy Councillors met and memorialized the Emperor to reintroduce the five modes of punishment devised by ancient kings, viz.: tatooing, cutting off the feet or nose, decapitation and quartering of the criminal, and killing his family and relatives. Only two of the councillors opposed this barbarous memorial, and they were members of the Independence Club. Against the memorial of the Privy Councillors the Independents at once sent their written protest, saying that such a memorial dishonored the Emperor and endangered the life and liberty of the people, making the country an object of contempt and disgust in the eyes of the civilized world. Mr. Sin, Minister of Law, who is also President of the Privy Council, replied that 'hanging a criminal is not sufficient to appease the anger of gods and men, or to terrorize conspirators.'

EMPEROR AND CROWN PRINCE

"And the Confucian friends of Mr. Sin went a step further and memorialized the Throne against the Independence Club, and Mr. T. H. Yun, its president. This memorial states that the Independence Club was started by Soh Jaipil (Dr. Jaisohn, now in Washington, D. C.), and An Kyensu; and further says: 'As long as the Independence Club is not abolished there will be no peace in the Government. We therefore humbly beg that Your Majesty will revoke your permission given to the Club, and banish those of its members who are infatuated with the seductive opinions of the association. We pray also that the Government be commanded to abolish the new laws derived from unrighteous sources, and re-institute the ancient laws, so that all those who are mentioned in the confession of a traitor may be punished, they and their families and friends.'

"The Independence Club then proceeded to memorialize the Emperor direct—demanding the dismissal of the barbarous Privy Councillors and Minister of Law, Sin. They sent in their memorial thrice, and as many times were bidden by the Emperor to retire. They respectfully but firmly held their ground in front of the palace gate night and day, from October 7th to the 12th, when their petitions were granted.

"It is said that the representatives of foreign powers sent in their strong protest to the Korean Government against the re-introduction of tortures, etc., which were abolished in 1894.

THE ROYAL THRONE-ROOM AT SEOUL

"Oh, that Korea would learn that 'The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom,' and 'Happy is that people whose God is the Lord.'

From this letter, and other indications, it is evident that the affairs of the "Hermit Nation," as Korea has been called, are in a most unsatisfactory condition. Whether the reform element will be able to control or not it is impossible to conjecture with any degree of confidence, and there would seem to be good grounds for the apprehensions of Japanese interference at no distant date. That progressive and warlike empire has long had a jealous eye turned on Korea, and should Russia, China, or any other power attempt to take advantage of the present troubles to gain a foothold there the Mikado's Government might be expected to take instant steps looking to the absorption of the perturbed and unhappy little kingdom.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor and upon the various sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it, and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

A USEFUL LIFE ENDED

Mr. Cheyne Brady, the Famous Writer of Gospel Tracts, Called to His Reward

AMONG the names of eminent servants of Christ who have passed, during the year, from the church on earth to the church in heaven, is that of Cheyne Brady, a writer, whose work has been signally blessed of God to the conversion of many souls in many lands. The tracts and leaflets which have issued from his pen have gone into every English-speaking country, and many of them have been translated into foreign tongues, and have had wide circulation.

Mr. Brady was an Irishman by birth, and was eighty-two years of age. He was educated for the legal profession, and for many years held a responsible office in the Irish courts of law. It was not until 1859 that he became known as a decided Christian. In that year a revival of religion began in Ireland, which continued for about three years, bringing into the church of Christ an unusual number of the highly educated professional men of the country. Among them was Mr. Brady, who was then in his forty-third year.

He was noted for his dignified, courteous, refined manner and for a good fellowship which made for him many warm friends. He lost no time in making his change of heart known and urging his friends to give themselves to Christ. The first fruit of his labor was a gentleman associated professionally with him in the courts. Other friends were won and Mr. Brady extended his efforts, devoting to Christ's service every evening after the courts closed for the day. In 1867 he resigned his office, and from that time forward he was constantly busy in religious movements. He traveled through his own country and England, telling everywhere in forcible, pointed language, with apt illustrations, and with the logical acumen acquired in his legal practice, the way of salvation. Afterwards he crossed to the continent and traveled through France, Germany and Switzerland, not staying long in any one town, but always finding an opportunity to speak for the Master.

In 1868 he wrote a short tract which was widely circulated. It was the means of doing great good, and Mr. Brady heard with devout thankfulness, from many quarters of remarkable conversions being wrought through its instrumentality. Other tracts were written, and Mr. Brady discovered the special talent which God had given him for service. From that time to the end of his life, his pen was busy. Though each production was short, it was the result of careful work and many prayers. He would go over his manuscript again and again, striving after greater clearness and more forceful presentation of the truth. He wrote nearly two hundred of these silent preachers, and their circulation aggregates several millions. They were eagerly sought by preachers and Christian workers in this country and across the Atlantic, and some of them have been translated into ten languages. He was residing at Cannes, in Southern France, when the summons came to go up higher. He was quite resigned, and to the last was full of faith and joy.

A Baby Drunkard

THE youngest alcoholic patient ever received into the Gouverneur Hospital, New York, was recently admitted. She is ten years old. Two policemen picked her up on the street, dead drunk, and sent her there in an ambulance. When found, she had a nearly empty brandy-flask in her hand. Her mother had given her twenty-five cents to spend, and the child had run out among her companions of the street and called gleefully: "We'll all go on a spree! Let's all get drunk." They suggested candy, but she said: "No candy for me! I want whiskey!" She persuaded a thirteen-year-old boy to purchase the whiskey for her, and the bartender who sold it has been arrested. The children did not share Mary's potations, but formed a line and followed her most unsteady steps until she fell senseless, crying: "Mary's drunk! Mary's drunk!" Her parents, worthy working people, are heart-broken. "We cannot account for Mary's action," they say. "She had never tasted liquor to our knowledge." Proximity to bar-rooms, the sight of older people going in and out suggested this evil thing to the child. The accursed system which licenses bar-rooms and permits the sale of poison to children is to blame. God speed the day when children may tread our streets in safety! A more powerful argument against the liquor traffic was never penned.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER

IN issuing the following list of topics for the approaching week of prayer, the Evangelical Alliance calls attention to the fact that in the fifty years which have elapsed since it became the custom to consecrate the first week of the year to special prayer, signal blessings have been granted in response, and that this year there is greater need of prayer than ever, because of the new responsibilities resting on our Government. The call to prayer is signed by the Presidents and Secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States, and for Great Britain, Canada, Germany, Denmark, Egypt, Belgium, Greece, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Switzerland, India and the Argentine Republic.

Holiday Sports

AT this season of the year give the children a good time. During all the coming holidays make things lively for the youngsters. The whole tendency of our times is to abbreviate the frolicsomeness of youth. We have no boys and girls nowadays; they are young gentlemen and ladies. They scarcely get out of the cradle before upon them comes an avalanche of books. The rigid proprieties of life crowd up to the verge of the high-chair at the table. The children who will be men and women fifteen years from now will not start life with a surplus of spirits with which some of us were endowed by the outdoor romps and recreations of life in the country. Life is a struggle even for those most prosperous, and the chief work of the first twelve years of it ought to be gathering up a reservoir full of strength and exuberance that could supply all the years subsequent.

Of course parental supervisal must forbid the small cruelties and the meannesses which sometimes creep into children's fun, but I think one of the great mistakes of home life in our time is the lack of sympathy for the joys of juvenescence. In almost every day and in every household there ought to be the "children's hour." It is a sad thing in a man's life when the boy dies out of his temperament. It is a sad time in a woman's life when the girl dies out of her disposition. If we had more of the holiday in our hearts our life would be happier and more useful, and childhood in our homes would be a bright experience. But in many a prosperous household there is little provision made for the entertainment of life under fifteen years of age. By day the children are at school, and at night the father comes home tired and with patience gone, and soon after tea the children see the shadow of bedtime approaching. All may go well even with such small allowance of merriment, but when the great burdens of life come down upon the shoulders of the young people, will they be able to endure the weight? The other night, in Central Pennsylvania, the train halted for a long time close beside some great iron works. By the glare of the furnace I saw the workmen busy. At the point where I sat in the train I could see only the motion of the workmen's arms, though not what they were doing; but their elbows worked with the regularity and precision of machinery, forward and backward, forward and backward, until it seemed as if human flesh and bones must give way under such wear and tear of exertion. I never was so impressed with the fact that to a vast multitude of people life is a drudgery—lifting, lifting, pushing, pushing, digging, digging, pounding, pounding, if not in one occupation, then in another; if not in one sphere, then in another. Blessed are those who enter upon active life with a large supply of superfluous energy. Childhood is the time for its accumulation. The ball-playing, the lawn-tennis, the croquet, the coasting down the hillside, the snowballing, the skating, and the holidays are the means of multiplying the resources of life and good cheer and courage so requisite to the right discharge of the hard work of a lifetime.

Aid For Needy Cubans

IT is welcome news that after many delays—probably to a large extent unavoidable—our government is at last urging forward with energy the work of relief in Cuba. Soon we may hope to hear that the suffering among the pacificos and the remnant of the reconcentrados has been assuaged, and that the destitution which has prevailed throughout a very large section of the Cuban provinces is a thing of the past. Much, however, remains to be done before this desirable result is attained. Recent letters from Havana, Manzanillo, Trinidad de Cuba, Matanzas, and other points indicate conditions of great distress, and in some cases representations have been made to the Department of State at Washington in their behalf, which will doubtless result in supplies being forwarded with due dispatch. Let us trust that the proverbial tardiness of official methods may not, in this instance, delay the Samaritan work, and thereby rob the gift of much of the value which attaches to relief quickly rendered. The sum officially appropriated for the purpose is abundant for all needs, and its prompt and judicious expenditure will avert much suffering. It has been the intention of the Administration, from the outset, to make this one of its most important duties in dealing with Cuba; and as, in consequence of the war, much precious time has already been lost, the need of urgent measures now is all the more imperative. Food for the hungry in the towns and villages, tools and seeds for the agriculturists who have returned to their desolated homesteads and farms, and such other assistance as is needed to restore the working population to a normal condition of self-support—this is the duty to which our government is now addressing itself and which it will conscientiously fulfil.

Do Not Boast

THERE are men who once said they never could be tempted to intemperance. They had no mercy on the drunkard. They despised any man who became a victim of strong drink. Time passed on, and now they are the victims of the bottle, so far gone in their dissipation that it is almost impossible that they ever should be rescued.

So there have been those who were very hard on all kinds of impurity, and who scoffed at unchastity, and who said that it was impossible that they should ever be led astray; but now they are in the house whose gates are the gates of hell! It is a very dangerous thing for a man to make a boast and say, "Such and such a sin I never could be tempted to commit." There are ten thousand hands of mercy holding us up; there are ten thousand hands of mercy holding us back, or we would long ago have gone over the precipice, and instead of being amid the respected and the good, our song would have been that of the drunkard, or we would be "hail fellows well met" with the renegade and the profligate. Oh, the restraining mercy of God!

BOYS AND GIRLS

THE possession of parental power involves responsibility, and wherever there is responsibility, there is duty. As before said, the best education of children begins in the home, not in the school, and between the nursery and the school-room, there is valuable ground for parents to occupy. This is the time we should teach children to read aloud, and in so doing, learn them to speak clearly, to enunciate distinctly and to modulate the voice. This is the time when they should be encouraged to write letters to each other, a far better way of acquiring penmanship, than by copying some platitude in a ruled book. For few things cultivate the young mind better than the exercise of putting into writing anything they want to say. The composition may be odd, the spelling incorrect, but the effort will never be thrown away.

In like manner the first rules of arithmetic are best taught by small objects—even by pieces of paper torn up and made into sums—for they give a child something more than an abstract idea of what figures mean. To come into a room quietly, and yet without slouching; to hand a lady a chair, to sing a song, to do a score of little courtesies to their elders and to visitors are in the curriculum of a parent's first duties to their children. Of course as mothers, we all teach our girls to use a needle skilfully; but not only girls should have this instruction. Many a time in a boy's and a man's life, the knowledge of how to sew up a rent, or put on a button, is of great service. Every good sailor-man can use a needle and thread, and he is no less brave and manly in consequence.

Little children have strange dreams of their own, that they tell to no one—haunted places in the woods, and queer corners in the barns, and first memories of snow and wind and flowers that make them almost poets. If they have not a sympathetic father and mother to talk to, they hide these fancies secretly away; but if they do talk of them to any of us, God forbid that we should ever treat such confidences with irony, or with any want of grave and proper interest! And yet, in this stage of a child's life, their individuality can not be given too much rein. Obedience in all things to parents is the first, and the last, and the most important lesson. There was once a wonderful child in Jewry, and the only thing which we are told concerning his childhood is, that "he was subject unto his parents," as if that single virtue was a guarantee for all that ought to distinguish a lovely childhood. And children naturally love discipline. They like to be controlled and guided, and if no injustice enters into the strictest discipline, they never resent it. Children know well when their parents love them, and they cling to a father and mother with a deathless loyalty, who is at once strict and just and affectionate.

The tendency of modern life is to throw the whole responsibility of a child's career upon the mother. This is in direct opposition to the teaching of that Book which we all profess to revere. In its pages it is Abraham and Isaac, not Sarah and Isaac; and it is Eli, and not Eli's wife, who is reproved and punished for their son's wickedness. Though the mother's influence is not overlooked in the Bible, the father has a position with regard to the children our modern life does not give him. But the father's influence is most important, both over girls and boys. The love of a good father for his daughters, and the love of good daughters for a good father is an affection that, for strength and graciousness, is beyond all comparison; and in the same way it is only a father that can make desirable to his boys many little acquisitions and duties they would regard as effeminate if recommended by women only. Also a boy's obedience to a father mingles with its love some elements of reasonable deference and respect not so evident in their obedience to their mother. It is a fact we must all acknowledge, that a father cannot possibly delegate his care and interference for his children to any other human being, and be innocent; that is, if it be possible for him to do his own duty.

Even in the holidays a father's care and oversight is of importance. He should see that his boys have hobbies. It saves them from temptation. Boys who have some natural or scientific hobby seldom come to harm—a canoe, a camera, a cabinet, a violin, etc., any sensible hobby whatever it costs is cheaper than a vice. And if reading is the attraction, books are cheap enough; far cheaper than the races. Besides which, fathers and sons may now take their vacation together. They can boat, and fish, and wheel in company, and politics, civic government and social science may wisely be made the topics of their conversation, and even discussion. Any good father will not mind such a trial of wit and intelligence, nor be much disturbed if the younger heads have the best and freshest views.

Girls are a more variable quality than boys, and a mother understands the picturesque irregularities of her daughters better than any one else. Fortunately, a girl's education is now far more sensibly conducted than it used to be. It is a humiliating thing to acknowledge, but yet it is a fact that girls have hitherto been educated with reference to the supposed likings of men rather than to their own development. Great mistakes have been made in consequence, for it is never possible to say how much brains men like with beauty. Very learned women never can be sure that they please very learned men. It takes a philosopher to really admire a lovely girl in white lace, who corrects him in a mathematical problem or a classical quotation. No man likes the feeling of inferiority in the presence of a woman, and yet the best female education of to-day must bring about a revolution of feeling in this direction.

Girls do not now go through a course of "finishing" for matrimony. They expect to have their natural aptitudes cultivated, their physical strength and beauty developed, and whatever cunning there is in their brains, or ten fingers, to be made mistress of. They look for an education that will be "good" for bread to eat, and raiment to put on; and that will fill their space with deeds, and not with lingering years. And the wise mothers will not regard the sentiment as revolutionary and unwomanly; they will see that it is the need of the age, the evolution of a nobler life, and give all the aid and sympathy possible. For a woman developed on every side—heart, conscience, character, brains, fingers, strength, beauty—has taken hostages from Fortune. Sorrow will not crush, neither will prosperity weaken her. She has discovered her strength, and knows how to use, and how to control it. And thus, at last, she has "power upon her head."

BRIEF NOTES

Natives of Porto Rico and Cuba are already enrolled as students at Hampton and Tuskegee.

The new Secretary of the American Bible Society, who succeeds the late Dr. A. S. Hunt, is Rev. William Ingraham Haven, of Brookline, Mass.

Canon Wilberforce, preaching recently in an English cathedral, warned his hearers that no rescue work, no attempts at social reform would avail so long as the common sale of intoxicating liquor was permitted.

Austrian Protestants are aggrieved because the imperial authorities, at the instance of the Roman Catholic bishops, have withdrawn from the British and Foreign Bible Society the privilege of selling Bibles within the empire.

The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York, is to be used for church services, beginning Jan. 1. The cathedral will not, of course, be finished for a long time but the crypt has been finished, and services will be held there.

An effort is being made in Boston, Mass., to get all the churches to unite in Christian work for the neglected population in the city. The organization is on the pattern of the Federation of Free Churches which has so successfully grappled with the problem in England.

Rev. C. H. Yatman's services in Albany, N. Y., have affected the whole city. Local journals say that not in many years has there been a movement so wide-spread and profound. Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, in which the meetings were held, was crowded daily to its utmost capacity.

The Methodist Episcopal General Conference of 1900 will meet in Chicago. At the recent meeting of the Conference Committee, whose duty it is to select the place of meeting, representatives of Minneapolis and Chicago were present to urge the claims of their respective cities, and after a long discussion Chicago was chosen.

Gen. Kitchener's proposal to erect in Khartoum as a memorial of Gen. Gordon, a college which with its endowment shall cost half a million dollars, is meeting with enthusiastic support. The Queen contributed $1,250 and other illustrious persons have given large sums. Already about two-thirds of the amount required is in hand.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman is conducting a series of union evangelistic meetings in Mount Vernon, N. Y. Eight of the churches are co-operating in the movement. Besides the usual week night meetings, seventy-five neighborhood prayer-meetings were held in homes in the various parts of the city as a preparation for the work of Dr. Chapman.

The Independent, of New York, has just celebrated its fiftieth birthday. Dr. R. S. Storrs, who was one of its editors in its first years, and Dr. William Hayes Ward, its present editor, tell in the anniversary number the history of the journal. It deserves all the congratulations it has received for the many services it has rendered to the cause of righteousness during its long and brilliant career

The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Protestant Episcopal Church have received a gift of forty thousand dollars from a lady who does not wish her name disclosed. She wishes the money to be used, not hoarded, and to be applied where it will do most good. She makes the gift now instead of leaving it by will, as she had intended, in order to preclude the possibility of litigation.

Chaplain Hunter of the Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who is now in Manila, writes that the people of the Philippines would give a hearty welcome to American missionaries. They realize that they have been priest ridden and are rejoicing that there is a prospect of the tyranny ending. There is nothing, he says, that they desire more than good schools for their children whose education in Catholic hands has been neglected.

The Deems Bible Class for strangers, held in the Church of the Strangers, West Fifty-seventh street, New York, every Sunday morning at ten o'clock, is largely attended. As its name implies, it is specially intended for visitors to the city and for new residents who have not yet settled in a church home. Parents in other cities whose sons or daughters are coming to New York to live, should write Dr. D. Asa Blackburn, the pastor of the church, and he will see that the newcomer is invited to attend and made welcome.

A Fire Among "Sky-scrapers"

OF late years, New York has become addicted to the construction of "sky-scraping" edifices, so tall that they stand out like great land-marks all over the business part of the city. Seen from the rivers, these structures present the appearance of an irregular array of towers, not unlike the turreted castles of mediæval times. They are, in reality, great business hives, some twenty and even thirty stories in height, and each with hundreds of occupants, engaged in every conceivable line of trade. All of these buildings are claimed to be fireproof; yet their extreme height, and the difficulties certain to be encountered by the firemen in fighting any conflagration at such an altitude, have been a cause of much uneasiness to the authorities. On Sunday night, Dec. 4, the city was startled by a sudden outbreak of fire in a building on the southwest corner of Broadway and Warren Street. With incredible speed, the fire leaped to the Home Life Insurance building, adjoining on the south—a "sky-scraper" of the most pronounced type, and soon the upper stories were a mass of flames. Still another "sky-scraper"—immediately adjoining on Broadway—was next involved, and the two great piles of iron and masonry were soon blazing like lofty beacons, lighting up the lower part of the town, the river and the bay. As it happened, a furious wind and rainstorm was raging at the time, the wind having a hurricane velocity, and fanning the fire to still greater intensity. Never before had the citizens of the metropolis witnessed such a weird and awful conflagration. The flames roared at a height hundreds of feet above the sidewalks, and the firemen were well-nigh powerless. After almost superhuman efforts, and many narrow escapes from death, the firemen got the flames under control, and a great disaster was averted. This experience has demonstrated the danger and folly of constructing buildings of higher altitude than the danger line, i. e. 150 feet, the height to which a modern fire-engine can throw a stream of water. Both of the structures were considerably higher than this, the Home Life being 290 feet, and the adjoining structure, which also suffered slightly from the fire, 179 feet. As such Babel-like structures are now admitted to be a menace to life and property, the city authorities will probably adopt such restrictive legislation as is necessary to compel builders to discontinue the construction of "sky-scrapers" hereafter. Such legislation would be a recognition of the principle that a man cannot do as he pleases with his own, but must take his neighbor's safety into consideration. It is much to be wished that the principle were carried further, and that men realized that they ought not, by conduct or example, do anything that would be a moral injury to their neighbor.

We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves (Rom. 15:1).

Our Nation's Yearly Budget

In his annual report, sent to Congress simultaneously with the President's Message, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates the expenses of conducting the National Government for the next fiscal year at $593,000,000, an increase of nearly $130,000,000 over last year. This is an average of $6.50 per capita for every man, woman and child in the United States, on the basis of a population of 90,000,000. The increase is mainly due to the enlarged appropriations for the army and navy, which will now be placed on a much more extensive footing than formerly—an immediate result of our sudden colonial expansion, involving the use of a larger military and naval establishment than at any former period of our history as a nation. Still another item in the annual budget is the addition of $4,000,000 to the Pension list. These figures afford a foreshadowing of the permanent cost of maintaining the position and prestige of a great naval and military power, for as such we are now ranked among the nations of the world. With a judicious and honest administration, the augmented burden will not bear heavily upon our people. Glory and power, however, have their disadvantages; and the present condition of the European nations, with their gigantic military and naval establishments, which are an oppressive burden upon their national industries, warn us what may be expected in our own land if we allow ourselves to be influenced to an undue degree by the spirit of worldly power and conquest, forgetting that righteousness is the only guarantee of abiding national greatness and glory. It would be a bad day for this nation when its confidence was based on its army and navy, and not on the justice of its cause. As a Christian nation, we may say with the Psalmist:

Some trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will remember the name of the Lord our God (Ps. 20:7).

A Doubtful Decision

A singular case has been tried in a law court in California. It is the claim set up by the heirs of a man who murdered his two sisters, for their estate. It appears that their father left his property to his son and two daughters to be divided share and share alike. If either died without issue, the other two were to divide that share, and if two died without issue, the survivor should have the whole estate. The unnatural brother coveted his sisters' shares and murdered them, believing he would escape detection; but the fact that he was the only person who would profit by their death, directed suspicion to him and he was arrested, tried, and convicted. The courts have been required to decide whether his heirs should receive the fruits of his crime, and they have decided that the will of the father of the family being absolute, the heirs of the murderer must inherit. This decision is opposed to the decision of New York jurists, and it also appears to be opposed to justice and common sense. No man ought to be allowed to derive benefit, in his own person or in that of his heirs, from his crime. Our public policy should be in line with the principles of God's government, one of which is that crime shall not enrich the criminal, but bring destruction upon him:

They lurk privily for their own lives. So are the ways of every one who is greedy of gain; who taketh away the life of the owners thereof (Prov. 1:18).

Unnecessary Deaths

A journal devoted to sanitary questions publishes an extract from a speech recently delivered by Dr. Hill of Cambridge University, England, to a convention of physicians and surgeons. This eminent statistician told his hearers that about one million babies were born annually in England. Statistics showed that if the usual rate prevailed, 30,000 of the million would die violent deaths from accident, 30,000 would die unnecessarily from consumption, and 120,000 more from other absolutely preventable causes, such as small-pox, measles, and scarlet fever. Only 45,000 would be allowed to live out their natural lives, and only about one in twenty would die because the physical machine was worn out. One-fourth of all the diseases which destroy life are absolutely preventable, and fifteen years would at once be added to its average duration if the practice of hygiene were placed on a level with its theory. Dr. Hill attributed the greater number of the diseases over which the individuals affected by them have personal control, to mistakes in eating and drinking. Sad as is this fact and grievous as it is that so many die who might live on if they were more prudent, there is a fact infinitely more deplorable. How many there are who go to eternal death when everlasting life is offered to them freely through Christ!

Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life (John 5:40).

Peace with Spain

The gratifying news comes from Paris that the American and Spanish Commissioners have arrived at an agreement, and a treaty of peace has been signed. Though according to diplomatic custom the articles of the treaty will not be published until it is in the hands of the Senate, its main provisions can be named with some degree of confidence. It is understood that Spain finally and completely evacuates Cuba, and gives up all claim to sovereignty over the island, the United States undertaking to pacify it and give it a stable government. Porto Rico is given absolutely to the United States. The Philippine Islands also are surrendered to us, but the United States will reimburse Spain to the extent of twenty million dollars for improvements she has made which are of permanent value to the inhabitants. The terms of the treaty of course are not satisfactory to Spain. She hoped that the astute men she sent to negotiate with our representatives would have been able to make better terms; but Judge Day and his colleagues assumed from the beginning a dignified attitude which admitted of no haggling. They declined to argue about sentimental or historic issues, but calmly and resolutely informed the Spanish Commissioners what were the terms on which their country could have peace with the United States, and in these terms there was no abatement. That the terms are humiliating is true, and Spain might have saved herself this humiliation and the loss of the Philippines if she had made the concessions we demanded at the outset, which would have averted war. Her statesmen, however, were too proud and arrogant to make them, and Spain has therefore to bear the consequences, which are just such as the wise king said would result from such conduct.

Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof when thy neighbor has put thee to shame (Prov. 25:8).

A Gigantic Combine

One of the greatest "combines" yet heard of in the business world has just come to light. It contemplates the consolidation of the interests of the largest eastern and western flour mills, including those of New York, New England, and the vast concerns in Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Duluth, and Superior, under a general management, with a united capitalization of $100,000,000. Negotiations with this end in view have been in progress several months, and are likely to prove successful. A number of English capitalists are partners in the scheme, and a representative of the American interests recently visited England, for the purpose of securing the consent of the foreign stockholders. It is estimated that the combined output of the mills included in the combination will be not less than 96,000 barrels of flour per day, and that they will consume 500,000 bushels of wheat daily. While such a "combine," rightly conducted, might be of great advantage to the producers, it also contains appalling possibilities as an agency of oppression and extortion. It is a question of the highest moment for our legislatures to decide whether private individuals should have it within their power at any time to monopolize the commodities of life. Other great trusts in ice, gas, telephones, tin-plate, and coal are even now in process of formation. At different times, state legislatures have enacted laws against "combines" and corners in order that the people might have protection against the extortions of unscrupulous traders. While it is not known that the new "combine" has any such purpose in view, yet it is universally recognized that all movements to control the necessaries of life have in them an element of public danger. From time immemorial, capitalists have yielded to the temptation to get possession of the food the public must have, and to hold it until scarcity forces up prices. The wise king, however, warned such people of the consequences of their cruel course:

He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him: but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it (Prov. 11:26).

SILENT INFLUENCE

The Young Men's Christian Association Parlor and its Effect on Christian Character

NEW and beautiful buildings of the Y. M. C. A. adorn almost every large city. The institution, which was begun in a boys' prayer-meeting in a clerk's private room in a house in St. Paul's Churchyard, London, has become a palace home for young men of right purpose in all Protestant lands.

Little has been written about the parlor of this institution. All life follows suggestion, and the writer, who has frequently attended Young Men's Christian Associations, in the Sunday afternoon lecture courses, has been led to see how that parlor preaches. The room often becomes the parlor of the clerk at the critical time of life, when his slender salary only affords him a lodging-room among strangers.

I recently met a man in the youth of middle age, who had been signally prospered in life. I said to him:

"To what influence do you attribute your success?"

"To the silent influences of the Y. M. C. A. parlor."

"And how, if you will allow me to trace your steps?"

"I was brought up on the farm. I came to the city as a clerk, and took a room in a tenement house. I knew no one in the city outside the store. I was full of the desire to do well in life; to make the most of my powers.

"The social atmosphere of the parlor in my boarding-house depressed me. It offered me no inspiring ideals. I went to the Y. M. C. A. all alone, and sat down in the parlor. I had had temptations, and I resolved to overcome them here, at the very beginning of my new life.

"The walls of the parlor were filled with pictures, mottoes and useful information in frames. Among the mottoes was, 'A high aim is curative.' I grasped the idea. I had heard my father again and again say, 'Overcome evil with good,' and 'He that overcometh shall inherit all things. On the wall was a framed list of churches, which offered special hospitality to young men. I noted down one of them. It was a suggestion, a guide board to a long way in life. So I was led to spend my first Sabbath in a church in the city. I was cordially met there, and entered at once in its work as a teacher. In teaching I was taught. In that way I made my choice of social life.

"There were framed notices of evening classes on the wall. I studied the list, and again found in it suggestion and direction.

"I took one of these courses of study. It gave me an honorable advantage in my business, and as promotion in business follows capability, I was promoted in my business at the end of the first year. The evening class led me to follow the same instruction in a high grade evening school, and I was again promoted on account of the value that my studies gave me. I then sought private instruction, and, from a clerk, was made an overseer of a department in the establishment. I made inventions, and established a business of my own. The government needed my work, and I am to-day prosperous.

"I owe my success under the leading of the Spirit of God to the influence of the Y. M. C. A. parlor and reading-room, which I entered alone and companionless. My life simply followed the suggestions that I found there."

Let the rich men help sustain the young men's parlor—it is God's parlor.

Imperial Post Cards

It is a well-exploited fact that the Kaiser and Kaiserin have never permitted cares of state or the distractions incident to high position to interfere with attention to each other and to their children. One of the prettiest stories that comes back to us of their journey to the Orient is this. The Empress, during the whole of her trip to the Orient, has sent the imperial children from every new place pictorial post cards.

When leaving the port of Constantinople Her Majesty forgot to post them, and she caused the imperial yacht Hohenzollern to stop, and went ashore herself to carry out her promise. The excuse of the Empress for the delay was: "I promised the children." Her Majesty's post card sent from Therapia to her little folks at Potsdam read: "Loving greetings to you all. Papa and all on board are well. (Signed) MAMMA."

A REFUGE FOR SLAVES

Arrival of Dowkontt, Henderson, and Neipp, the New Helpers at Lincoln, the Philafrican Pioneer Colony in the Dark Continent

LETTERS recently received from Lincoln, the station established in West Central Africa by Mr. Heli Chatelain for the reception and education of emancipated slaves, are full of encouraging news. Mr. Chatelain and his four colleagues, who have been laboring there for a year past, were rejoicing over the arrival of their three friends, Drs. Dowkontt, Henderson, and Mr. Henry Neipp who, as already reported in this journal, have gone out to help them in their arduous work. "Their coming," says Mr. Chatelain, "is encouraging to my faith, for it shows that when I was looking to the Lord for just such helpers, the Holy Spirit was working mightily in their hearts." The whole party had been working steadily to build a hut for the new arrivals, and it is now completed, and is as comfortable as it could be made in so short a time. The new comers were fully aware that in the African wilds they could not expect the comforts of civilization, so there are no complaints about the accommodations and the hardships and privations of their new sphere.

SCENES AT LINCOLN, THE PHILAFRICAN COLONY IN AFRICA

1. THE THREE NEW HELPERS. 2. MR. HELI CHATELAIN RECEIVING NATIVE VISITORS. 3. SAWING LUMBER FOR BUILDING.

Dr. G. Harry Dowkontt, who is the eldest son of Dr. George D. Dowkontt, of New York, the medical director of the International Medical Missionary Institute, writes that it involved nine days' steady walking to reach Lincoln from Benguella, where they left the steamer. They were refreshed for their journey by a Sunday spent in prayer and praise. There was so manifest an outpouring of the Holy Spirit that there was not a doubt in the mind of anyone of the trio that the Divine approval was given to the undertaking. The carriers who had come to the coast to carry the supplies that the young men were bringing to the settlement, showed the results of Mr. Chatelain's work. As they marched under their burdens, they sang, in their own language, such hymns as, "Jesus, Keep me Near the Cross," and "Fierce and Wild the Storm is Raging," which, with many others, have been translated into Umbundu. Other caravans journeying in the same direction, joined the travelers for mutual protection, until, before reaching Lincoln, there were in all a hundred carriers, belonging to different parties, going to the Boer farms and various places farther inland. Thus, the good news of the Gospel was communicated by Christian song to many who had never heard it. The new arrivals who, of course, are not yet able to speak to the people in the Umbundu language, have learned the Umbundu hymns and have already visited neighboring villages to sing them. The people listen intently and are very grateful for these visits. They are beginning to understand something of the principles on which the effort at the Mission station is based. They have given Mr. Chatelain the name of "Kahenda" which means "the compassionate man," a tribute to his uniform kindness and helpfulness which he thoroughly appreciates. It shows that the natives have been quick to discriminate between the party at Lincoln, and the whites who have gone to Africa with no motive but to defraud and demoralize the people. The proverb which the natives use, "We are the flesh and the whites are the knife" sufficiently indicates their perception of the difference between the principles of the ordinary traders and those of the missionary band.

Already the little colony is able to report material progress along the line of its organization. The much-needed water power for grinding corn and sawing lumber has been secured by the building of a dam, and Mr. Lea has been experimenting with models of water wheels. A new store-house has been built, and Mr. Chatelain incidentally lets in a little light on some of the privations of the settlers, by mentioning that it has wooden doors, which are a great advantage. The old store-house had doors of matting, and it was therefore necessary to keep a careful watch at night to prevent depredations on the property stored there. The wooden doors will permit of a sound, undisturbed sleep for those who are responsible for the safety of the tools and cloth which are used for trading purposes. When the mail left, the colonists were beginning the erection of permanent dwelling houses, as the grass huts at present used are in constant danger from fire.

Every day justifies the wisdom of selecting the site the colony occupies. It is in all respects convenient, and, while it is within easy reach of other villages, it is sufficiently isolated to make the work done there distinct from the ordinary colony, and keep its unique principles and purposes from being confused in the native mind with the enterprises of other white men. That this has been done, was evident from the native behavior in a recent trouble. There had been talk for some time of cattle having been stolen by natives, from some of the white settlers in the neighborhood, and a raid was threatened to punish the thieves. The natives came to Mr. Chatelain and begged him to interpose for their protection. He set out immediately, but was unable to prevent the raid. The fact, however, that the people appealed to him showed that they regarded him as their friend, and though his effort to save them from spoliation was futile, his making it was appreciated by the defenceless people. Such matters, however, demand great tact, for it is important to the little colony that it should maintain friendly relations with both the whites and the natives. Mr. Chatelain has made them understand that he will not be mixed up in their quarrels, but that any service he can render as a man of peace will be cheerfully performed.

The letters of the colonists pathetically ask that their friends in the home-land will not forget them. They beg especially for their prayers, that they may be guided and directed in their difficult position, and that the enterprise to which they are giving their lives may be blessed of God. The need for it is more clear than ever. There is reason to believe that not less than half a million slaves die annually from the cruel raids on the villages, and little short of fifty millions are now in bondage. Mr. Chatelain's hope is to make the colony a refuge for such as can be set at liberty, and to train and educate them so as to fit them to support themselves. Hitherto, the European Powers who are piedged to suppress slavery and prevent slave-raids in their respective spheres of influence, have been embarrassed by the difficulty of dealing with slaves, who might be set at liberty. Far away from their native villages, which too often the slave-raiders have burned, they are a burden on the hands of their deliverers, who do not know what to do with them. If it were known that a colony existed, where the poor creatures would be welcomed and cared for, there would be more encouragement to set them free. This is the object which Mr. Chatelain and his colleagues seek to achieve. It is so thoroughly humanitarian that it has a claim on the sympathies and prayers of every Christian. Incidentally, the need of the colony for money is also admitted. So much more could be done to prepare it for its work and to extend its operations, if funds were at command. A wagon is urgently needed and tools of all kinds, which it would be very gratifying to supply if money could be had. In the meantime, the brave little band is toiling on in faith, sure that as they have given their lives to the work, God will take care that eventually all their needs will be supplied. Any contributions for the work which may be sent to this office, will be gratefully acknowledged in these columns.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

CHRISTMAS FANCIES

What Shall We Do with Santa Claus?—A Question Receiving Much Public Attention

A LARGE number of letters addressed to "Santa Claus, North Pole," or some other equally indefinite locality, pass annually through the mails of our large cities: and naive requests are sometimes answered by those considerate proxies, U. S. post officials, or people to whom they hand such letters, and who often happen to be folks who make a business of giving Christmas presents. This sending of letters through the mail to Santa is not altogether a happy custom, for—unluckily for juvenile confidence in the myth—there is no provision in our postal service for delivery at the North Pole, nor indeed at any of Santa's supposed residences: so there is no guarantee against childish disappointment. More sure of response are letters hid in a niche by the fireplace, after having been read aloud for papa's and mamma's criticism. So many letters are written and such multitudinous demands are made, however, that even by this route requests fail of complete fulfilment—a fortunate matter in cases where everybody and the furniture would have to move out of the house to accommodate things moving in.

The myths surrounding our beautiful Christian holiday are legion. In Spain the children set shoes outside windows and doors on Christmas Eve, because of a legend that "wise men going to Bethlehem may drop gifts into little shoes they find along the way." Austrian children set lighted candles in the windows that "the Christ-Child in passing may find his way well lit." Of all the myths attaching themselves to Christmas, the dearest to the child-heart, and the most universal, are the Greek and Russian St. Nicholas, the French Noel, the German Kris Kringle—the world-wide Santa Claus, whose name in some form is heard in childhood's silvery babble almost everywhere.

What shall we do with Santa Claus? Parents, teachers, mother-clubs, are discussing the question pro and con, more openly and abundantly than ever before. On the one hand, it is considered a pity to destroy a pretty myth and gift-game that has given, and continues to give, much wholesome fun to young generations: on the other, the position is well taken that truth is too precious to be sacrificed even to so beautiful and beneficent a fantasy.

Parents could explain to the child that the story of Santa is a legend—a pretty fancy, which will become clearer to them as they grow older. It is not necessary to the enjoyment of the little folks that they should be led into the error of supposing that it is any thing more than a fairy tale: the gifts they hope to receive will be none the less appreciated if they come through that mysterious channel whose tender love and sacrifice the child will learn all about by-and-by. Let the source of the gifts, meanwhile, be a mystery, if you will, but let it be an innocent mystery, so that when the disclosure does come—as come it will to every child in time—it may not come with the shock of a revelation of falsehood and duplicity, but rather as the divulgement of an innocent piece of pleasantry.

The Kindergarten Review sums up the matter thus:

> The fault lies not in Santa Claus but in ourselves. We put too little fun and fantasy into our telling of the story. We must not seek to make reasonable or to prove what was never intended to be so treated. In telling about Santa Claus, you and the children are enjoying a play of fancy together; and if you make it truly a play of fancy for them, they will understand readily enough the difference between that and an earnest talk. Beware of dangerous asseverations. Don't tell any lies. Don't say that Santa Claus really does live. Don't say that the story is true. Don't try to ensure that the children shall believe the story. The impress of truth, which is so scrupulously not to be given in the telling of the Santa Claus myth, should be put upon the true Christmas tale as lovingly and deeply as possible.

Christmas in India

Christmas eve in Calcutta is very gay, we are told. All the big European shops keep open till twelve at night. Crowds of people go from shop to shop, meeting friends and spending money. The roads are crammed with traffic, and the shops are brilliantly illuminated outside and in. It is amusing to observe the way in which Indian domestic servants view Christmas. They seem to believe that plum pudding has some direct connection with the religious origin of the festival, and if you fail to have one, they secretly mistrust that you are falling away from grace. All over India some sort of recognition of the great event will be made, and the natives are inclined to have some slight participation in the joys of "Kismas." It is the Eurasian woman's great occasion for donning new clothes. Be the Eurasian woman ever so poor, she will strive and save so that she may have "new things" to wear on Christmas morning. It is pathetic and inexplicable, this peculiarity of Christmas-keeping Eurasians. Out-door creations, especially among the wealthy Europeans and half-castes (or Eurasians), are prominent features of holiday festivity.

A School-girl's Christmas in Dresden

Snow, snow, everywhere, wrote an American school-girl of a typical Christmas in Dresden: snow in the market-places, in the great, wide school-yard, and falling in big white flakes. Sleigh-bells jingling, church-bells chiming, school-girls looking wistfully out of windows, while some penned plaintive letters home. Such a big house, heated with funny little white-tiled stoves. For several days Fraulein was making exasperating preparations—exasperating because no one was allowed to see what was going on behind locked doors. Our gate-bell jingled all the time, and bundles piled in. The girls were taken uptown by good "Fraulein" in a pack, two and two. Such a wonderful "uptown"—the market-places were filled with pine trees set on cross-pieces instead of their own roots, and looked like miniature forests in the heart of the city. Market women sat around in groups over "peat-fires," and torchlights threw a glare over the whole strange scene. Christmas Eve. Fraulein gave orders that every girl should come to tea dressed in her best, so down we tramped—happy school-girls with the Christmas joy in our hearts! After tea, locked doors were thrown open, and such a wondrous sight met our gaze! Two tremendous Christmas trees, radiant with pretty trinkets, tinsel and candles, filled one end of the room. Around were the little tables at which we said our lessons, all strange to us in their holiday dress and covered with Christmas gifts. Before we entered the room, Fraulein handed each girl a sheet of music, and on it were the words which we sang:

> O blessed Saviour! O holy night!
> The bright star is there to guide us with its light.

A "Lucky Guinea"

Baroness Burdett-Coutts, the famous philanthopist, treasures a coin which came into the possession of her grandfather in a curious way. Banker Coutts did not dress so well as he might, and the consequence was that his threadbare appearance appealed to a benevolent old gentleman, who took him for a decayed tradesman and gave him a present of a guinea.

Next day the gentleman encountered Mr Coutts at the house of a mutual friend where both were dining, and felt great confusion over having tendered alms to the banker. Mr. Coutts told him that he valued that guinea—the only alms he had ever received—highly, and should keep it as a "lucky guinea." After his death his widow kept it until she gave it to Sir Francis Burdett. It was bequeathed by him to his daughter, the Baroness Burdett Coutts, who prizes it very highly.

WRITING A LETTER TO SANTA CLAUS

A LITTLE WOODLAND STORY

(At Christmas Time).

'TWIXT banks gemmed with wild violets,
In balmy spring the brooklet ran,
And songbirds caroled overhead.

"O, LITTLE BRIDGE! O, ICY BROOK!"

But now, snow-covered archways span
The icy waters of the brook,
And, by the tuneful voices fled,
One might believe the birds were dead!
But no! the flowers are but asleep
Beneath a blanket of white snow,
And spring will lift it when 'tis time,
And wake our pretty blossoms up,
Our birds will come from distant clime,
The merrier for their long sojourn;
And God will fill our joyful cup
The fuller for this resting-time—
The fuller for the days we mourn.

O, little bridge! O, icy brook!
O winter stillness of the wood!
Ye tell a simple tale to me that by my faith is understood:
Our hopes, our loves, our times are safe; God keeps them all, and God is good.

—GOODLOE HARPER.

Mrs. McKinley's Christmas Shopping

New York City was made quite proud when the first lady of the land came to the metropolis to buy Christmas presents; and the pleasure of resident friends aiding her was much enlarged by their interesting privilege. Mrs. McKinley is somewhat of an invalid, and the weather was unfavorable: so she sat in the long, beautiful drawing-room of the McKinley suite at a leading hotel, while packages of all sorts and sizes poured in: and Mrs. Abner McKinley, Miss Mabel McKinley, and other ladies in her party, shared with her the pleasure of inspection. The room looked like a Christmas bower with its decorations of miniature fir trees, great palms, chrysanthemums, and red roses: and the sparkling fire at one end, near which sat Mrs. McKinley, the presiding genius, looking very flushed and pretty with the excitement of her kindly task. Her purchases were of gifts useful as well as pretty, for relatives and intimate friends. Mrs. McKinley is most gracious to the little children of the poor, and before these purchases for her nearest and dearest, their treasury of Christmas gifts had been supplied from Washington stores, and many a waif in our national capital will have occasion to bless our first lady of the land.

Sang Robbie and Kate Christmas Eve, and Christmas morning they coaxed Henry, the hired man, to let them carry each an extra bundle of hay to Bossy; and insisted on giving Dobbin an additional ear of corn with their own hands. They polished Fido's collar, tidied Goldie's cage, gave Bossy her breakfast, and fed all the chickens, interpreting wags, and purrs, and songs, and cluckings into thanks; and receiving the very hearty approbation of mamma and cook, whose labors were lightened.

SOUL-SAVING IN THE TOMBS

Gospel Work in America's Greatest Municipal Prison Graphically Described

By REV. J. J. MUNRO
Chaplain

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the demolition of the old Tombs Prison in New York—that gloomy, forbidding edifice, which the municipal rulers of a long-past generation planned in the architectural style of an Egyptian temple—there has sprung up into existence a new Tombs Prison, which is the greatest criminal barracks in America, and one of the largest in the world. This mammoth building is not yet wholly completed, and the illustration on this page (taken from the architect's drawings), shows it as it will finally appear. At present, a portion of the old building is still used for prison purposes; but soon the last vestiges of the historical structure—scene of so many tragedies and grave of such a multitude of buried hopes—will have vanished altogether from sight. In this great prison, where 25,000 offenders are incarcerated annually, there is an unparalleled field for evangelical effort. Rev. J. J. Munro, the Chaplain of the Tombs, describes this Gospel work in the article below, which he has prepared specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whose readers will appreciate the labors that are being put forth by a band of godly men and women for the redemption of the erring multitudes who have sinned both against God and their fellowman.

The Tombs Described

"The old Tombs was considered in former years one of the most unique buildings in New York. It was situated in the lower part of the city, between Franklin and Leonard streets, fronting on Centre street. Its quaint Coptic architecture, solid masses of masonry and sunken, squattish appearance, made it a spectacle of wonder to all visitors who came to the metropolis. The present site of the Tombs, as well as the Criminal Court Building to the north of it, was once a fresh water pond called the 'Collect,' extending as far east in a circle as the Five Points Park. In the early history of Manhattan this pond supplied the city with drinking water. When the city began to extend as far up as Canal Street, a large amount of money was spent in draining off and filling up the Collect Pond, after which it became a valuable piece of property. The erection of the Tombs building began on this lot in 1835, and was completed in 1838. The front of the old building represented an Egyptian tomb, said to have been suggested to the architect by a cut in Stevens' book of travels, which was very popular in New York in those days. It was said that this building, when completed, was the purest specimen of Egyptian architecture outside of Egypt.

"The plot of ground on which the present building is erected is of so wet and swampy a character that the workmen, in laying the foundations for the structure, were compelled to drive seventeen hundred piles before they could deposit the concrete on which the stone foundation rests.

25,000 Criminals a Year

"The ever-fluctuating character of the Tombs prison population is shown in the fact that no less that 25,000 persons pass through it in the course of a year. Among this number are found criminals of every age, and all grades of depravity and social standing. It includes also hardened men and women who have spent years behind prison bars. Many of them are well known to the police, as their pictures are to be found in the Rogue's Gallery.

"When these persons are released from our penal institutions, and are found wandering through the city without any occupation or fixed abode, they are frequently arrested by the police and lodged in the Tombs for the sake of protecting society. Others are here who are not yet hardened, but have been leading reckless and 'crooked' lives, but in the unexpected moment Nemesis laid hold of them and put them in the toils, no doubt for good reasons.

"But the saddest thing of all is to see so many young men and boys of tender years in the Tombs. I have found from careful investigation that in nine cases of ten, bad company is responsible for this condition of affairs. I do not find very many Sabbath School scholars or Bible students in this prison—especially among the boys.

"As a rule, those who come here have had no restraint at home, and no Christian example set before them. Some of these boys and young men know as little of Christ and the Gospels as they do of Plato or Aristotle. But when they reach the Tombs they have time to reflect on their past life and bitterly regret the steps that led to their downfall, and for days these little fellows make their eyes red with weeping.

The Tombs Mission Organized

"To meet the pressing needs of the time, the society known as The Gospel Mission to the Tombs was organized in this city over twenty-two years ago. A band of Christian ministers and laymen, representing the various evangelical denominations, was formed, who took to heart the moral and spiritual needs of the poor unfortunate men and women who are compelled to spend any length of time in this prison. After organization, they selected an ordained minister of the Gospel and set him to work as chaplain, giving all his time to the work, preaching on the Lord's Day and visiting during the week. The late Dr. Howard Crosby, for many years pastor of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, was the first president of the society, and he was intensely interested and actively engaged in the cause until his death.

THE NEW TOMBS PRISON, NEW YORK

(From the Architect's Drawing, as the Building will Appear when Completed.)

"Perhaps it would be well to mention here in detail what is being done to reach and save those who are confined in the Tombs. The chaplain starts out believing that there is hope in the Gospel of Jesus Christ for the vilest sinner and the most hardened character. He may be saved if he will but accept Jesus as his divine Saviour. The Gospel promise is, 'Whosoever will may come and take of the water of life freely.' 'And him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.' It is not our business to find out what brought them here, but simply present to the erring ones the transcendent merits of Christ's righteousness.

Sinful Hearts Deeply Touched

Thus, following in the footsteps of our Blessed Master, we preach the Gospel lovingly and tenderly. Not infrequently we have encouraging evidence given us that the old Gospel is taking hold of the prodigal, and that he has come to himself and his Father's house. Here are two cases which may be considered typical of many. A young man before going to the reformatory said to me:

"'Chaplain, I have done wrong many times. I see my folly now, but I am determined, God helping me, to live a new life. Pray for me.'

"Another young man, who had been a member of a Harlem church, at the suggestion of the chaplain fell upon his knees and began praying for himself thus:

"'O Lord, I have sinned against thee a great many times. Pardon me for Jesus' sake. Do Lord give me another chance. I mean to do better, God helping me, next time.'

"A dozen other cases might be mentioned among the boys and young men where they have given evidence of taking a stand for Christ, which we trust they will never recede from.

"The recent occupant of a cell was a man about forty years of age. It was his first offense, but the few days he was incarcerated gave him time to review his life. As I looked through his cell door I said:

"'My friend, I am sorry to see you here.'

He spoke up quickly and said:

"'I deserve to be here. I am a wrong-doer. I have sinned a great many times.'

I was startled to hear him make so many admissions. I said:

"'You don't mean to say you are guilty of any offense? Some of your neighbors claim they are innocent.'

"'Well, sir,' he said, 'I am guilty; drink has been my ruin, and as soon as I get into court I shall plead guilty and I'll take my punishment.'

"The work in the Tombs begins Sunday morning soon after nine o'clock with a service of song in the women's prison. This is followed by prayer and several brief addresses. After twenty or thirty minutes, the chaplain leaves a few workers here and then hastens to the new prison where are the ten-day prisoners awaiting transportation to the Island. There are several tiers of cells here where many other prisoners awaiting trial can hear the Gospel. Half an hour is spent here, then the chaplain goes to the main prison, where he holds a regular service in the hearing of 200 to 250 prisoners. When the service is well under way—say 11.15 o'clock—several of our workers retire to the boys' prison, where a special service is held in their behalf in the little chapel. This work has been in charge of Mr. Samuel Wertheimer for several years past, and is conducted with success.

"These four services on Sunday morning from nine to twelve noon are times of seed-sowing—casting the seed on the waters to return after many days. Results are not seen now—only in eternity will results be seen. The prisoners are changing all the time while the courts are in session. Some are being discharged from custody or sent to the various penal institutions for a term of years.

REV. J. J. MUNRO
(Chaplain of the Tombs.)

During the week the chaplain has personal interviews with the prisoners, and wherever impressions have been made he seeks to bring them to a decision for Christ. He also distributes during the week reading matter of various kinds, tracts and copies of the Scriptures—all of which are highly appreciated. No Christian work mentioned in the New Testament is more commended by our Lord and Master, than the work of visiting prisons. Of course, there is a marked difference between the dungeons of Christ's time and the austere comforts of a modern prison. Even now, the prospect of the Master saying in the great day to those who are supporting this work by their means, 'I was in prison and ye came unto me,' or 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me,' sends a thrill of ecstatic joy through their souls, and will be a blessed compensation for all their sacrifices and self-denial.

"Of the present management of the Tombs, under the administration of Warden James J. Hagan and his courteous subordinates, the chaplain can speak only in the highest praise.

The Volunteer Gospel Workers

"The volunteer workers who have aided my highly esteemed predecessor and faithful brother, the Rev. Sidney G. Law, who has been laid aside on account of physical infirmities, are of the best kind. I desire, also, to express my hearty thanks to my honored friend and brother, Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D.D., Superintendent of the City Mission; to Dr. Klopsch, of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and Agent Arnold of the New York Bible Society, for valuable donations of tracts, periodicals, CHRISTIAN HERALDS, and copies of St. John's Gospel, received for distribution.

"The work is sustained by voluntary contributions from churches and individuals. Mr. George E. Sterry, 79 Pine street, New York, is the Treasurer of the Gospel Mission to the Tombs.

"REV. J. J. MUNRO."

The New Tombs Chaplain

Rev. J. J. Munro, who was recently chosen Chaplain of the Tombs, is of Scotch parentage. He came to this country when a young man—more than a quarter of a century ago—studied in New York City and afterward entered Union Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in the class of 1880. He was ordained to the Gospel ministry the same year in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, by the Presbytery of New York. Soon afterwards he was sent to Minnesota as a home missionary, where he labored faithfully for several years. The result was that two new churches were erected and dedicated free from debt, where none had ever been before. These churches—Luverne and Beaver Creek, in the Presbytery of Mankato—are to-day in a flourishing condition, and centres of spiritual influence. Coming East, Mr. Munro married a young lady with whom he had been associated in Christian work, Miss Emma L. McClintock, daughter of Capt. Andrew McClintock, of New York. She is his constant helpmeet and faithful companion. He preached the Gospel several years in Onondaga, St. Lawrence and Essex Counties, New York, and also spent five years in New England in the state pastorate as well as performing evangelistic and Christian temperance work. God has owned and greatly blessed him in his temperance and revival labors, and given him souls for his hire. In his new labors as chaplain of the Tombs, the prayers of God's people will ascend that the work may be still further made instrumental in the ingathering of precious souls.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

SUMMARY OF THE STORY

In Barbadoes, Lenox Hildreth, a New England gentleman of learning, culture and wealth, was living with his only daughter, Evadne, a beautiful girl, who, at the opening of the story is sixteen years of age. Mr. Hildreth, though charitable and kind, was an infidel, but in his later years turned in faith and love to Christ. He intended telling his daughter of the change, but a sudden seizure of illness found him with the disclosure not made. With his dying breath he enjoined her to make it the business of her life to seek Christ. The girl, whom he had reared a pagan, could not understand his injunction. After his death, she removes to the home of her uncle, Judge Hildreth, at Marlborough, in New England, to whom, as his only brother, Lenox Hildreth confided her and her large fortune. On her way, intent on obeying her father, she asks a fellow-passenger, a bishop's wife, how she can find Christ; but the lady thinks her irreverent and does not satisfy her. Arriving at Marlborough, she receives a formal welcome from her uncle's wife and daughters.

CHAPTER IV

New England Neighbors

A DAY full of light! Warm and brilliant. Flooding the wild fields of timothy and clover and fresh young grain with glory, falling with a soft radiance upon the comfortable mansion of the master of Hollywood Farm, with its spacious barns and long stretches of stabling, and throwing loving glances among the leaves of its deep belt of woodland, where the river sparkled and soft rugs of moss spread their rich luxuriance over an aesthetic carpet of resinous pine needles. A beautiful country, but visitors from the neighboring town of Marlborough commented as they drove through it on the wildness of the scene and compared it, not to its advantage, with the well-kept lawns and trim hedgerows of their own district, which to Evadne, newly settled there, seemed oppressive by their decorous, orderly tidiness.

Near the limits of Hollywood, where the road led to Marlborough, the forest made a sudden curve to the right, and the river, turned from its course, rushed laughing and eager over a ridge of rocks, which tossed it in the air in sheets of silver spray.

Standing there, leaning upon a gun, a boy of about seventeen looked long at a squirrel whose mangled body was staining the emerald beauty of the moss with crimson gore. His face was earnest and troubled, while the expression of sorrowful contempt which swept over it made him seem older than he was. It was a strong face, with deep-set, thoughtful eyes, which lit up wondrously when he was interested or pleased. His mouth was sensitive, but his chin was firm, and his brown hair fell in soft waves over a broad, full brow. People always took it for granted that John Randolph would be as good as his word. They never reasoned about it. They simply expected it of him.

He began to speak, and his voice fell clear and distinct through the silence. "And you call this sport?" There was no answer save the soft gurgle of the river as it splashed merrily over the stones. "You are a brute, John Randolph!" And the wind sighed a plaintive echo among the trees.

He was silent, while the words which he had read six weeks before, and which had been ringing a ceaseless refrain in his heart ever since, obtruded themselves upon his memory: "It is the privilege of every one to become like Jesus Christ."

"Well, John Randolph, can you picture to yourself Jesus Christ shooting a squirrel for sport?" He tossed aside the weapon he had been leaning upon, with a gesture of disgust, and, folding his arms, looked up at the cloud-flecked sky.

"Are you there, Jesus Christ?" he asked wistfully. "Are you looking down on this poor old world, and what do you think of it all? Men made in God's image finding their highest enjoyment in slaughtering his creatures. Game preserves where they can do it in luxurious leisure: fox hunts with their pack of hunters and hounds in full cry after one poor, defenceless fox, and battle-fields where they tear each other limb from limb with Gatling guns and shells: and yet we call ourselves honorable gentlemen, and talk of the delights of the chase and the glories of war. Pshaw! what a mockery it is!"

Stooping suddenly he laid the squirrel upon his open palm and gently stroked the long, silky fur. He lifted the tiny paws with their perfect equipment for service and looked remorsefully at the eyes whose light was dimmed, and the mouth which had forever ceased its merry chatter. A great tenderness sprang up in his heart towards all living things, and lifting his right hand to heaven he exclaimed, "Poor little squirrel, I cannot give you back your happy life, but,—I will never take another!"

Then he knelt, and scooping out a grave, laid the little creature to rest at the foot of a tree in whose trunk the remnant of its winter store of nuts was garnered. When at length he left the spot the tiny grave was marked by a pine slab, on which was inscribed:

"Here lies the germ of a resolve.

July 17, 18—."

He walked slowly along the fragrant woodpath, looking thoughtfully at the shadows as they played hide and seek upon the moss, while through the trees he caught glimpses of the sparkling river, which sang as it rolled along. When he reached the border of the woodland he stood still and swept his eyes over the landscape. Hollywood was the finest stock farm in the country, and every year which had elapsed since he had come, a little lad, after his father's death, to live with Mr. Hawthorne, had made it grow more dear. He loved its rolling meadows, its breezy pastures, and its fragrant orchards: its beautifully-kept grounds and outbuildings appealed to his innate sense of the fitness of things, while its air of abundant comfort made it difficult to realize that the world was full of hunger and woe. He loved the green road where the wild roses blushed and the honeysuckle drooped its fragrant petals, but most of all he loved the graceful horses and sleek cows which just now were grazing in the fields on either side, and the shy creatures, with the subtle instinct by which all animals test the quality of human friendship, took him into their confidence and came gladly at his call and did his bidding.

When he reached the end of the road he stopped again, and leaning against the fence adjoining the broad gate which led to the barns, gave a low whistle. A thoroughbred Jersey, busily feeding some distance away, lifted her head, looked and listened. Again he whistled, and, with soft, slow tread, the cow came towards him and rubbed her nose against his arm. He took her head between his hands, her clover-laden breath fanning his cheeks, and looked at the soft, dark muzzle and the large eyes, a most human in their tenderness.

"Well, Primrose, old lady, you're as dainty as your namesake, and as sweet. Ah, Sylph, you beauty," he continued as a calf, like a young fawn, approached the gate. "You can't rest away from your mammy, can you? Primrose, have you any aspirations, or are you content simply to eat and drink? You have a good time of it now, but what if you were kicked and starved? Do you wonder why the cold winter comes, and you have to be shut up in a stall with a different kind of fodder? Do you ever wonder who gave you life, and what you are meant to do with it? How I wish you could talk, old lady!" He vaulted lightly over the gate, and whistling to a fine collie, who came bounding to meet him, walked slowly on toward the stables.

"Hulloa, John!" and a boy about two years his junior threw himself off a horse reeking with foam. "Rub Sultan down a bit like a good fellow. There'll be the worst kind of a row if the Governor sees him in this pickle."

John Randolph looked indignantly at the handsome horse, as he stood with drooping head and wide distended nostrils, while the white foam dripped slowly over his delicate legs.

"Serve you right if there were!" and his voice was full of scorn. "You're as fit to handle horseflesh as an Esquimau."

"HOW DID YOU GET HIM INTO SUCH A MESS?"

"Oh, pish! You're a regular old grandmother, John. There's nothing to make such a row about," and Reginald Hawthorne turned upon his heel.

John led the exhausted horse to the currying ground. Reginald followed slowly, his hands in his pockets. It was better to bear John's reproof than his father's.

"How did you get him into such a mess?" John asked shortly.

"I don't know; I didn't do anything to him," and Reginald kicked the gravel discontentedly. "I believe he is getting lazy."

"Sultan lazy!" and John laughed incredulously. "That is a good joke! Why, he is the freest horse on the place!"

"Well, I don't know how else to explain it. He's been on the go pretty steadily, but what's a horse good for? Thursday afternoon we had our cross-country run, and the ground was horribly stiff. I thought he had sprained his off foreleg, for he limped a good deal on the home-stretch, but he seemed to limber up all right the last few miles. Rest yesterday would have put him in better trim I suppose for to-day's twenty mile pull—but Cartright and Peterson wanted to make up a tandem, and when they asked for Sultan I didn't like to refuse. They are young aristocrats, and you know father wants me to get in with that lot. But that shouldn't have hurt him. They only went as far as Brighton. What's fifteen miles to a horse?"

"Fifteen miles means thirty to a horse when he has to travel back the same road, stiff John, dripping and your heavy swells take the tell out of horses[illegible] quicker than a London cabby."

"Why, John, what has come to you? You're the last fellow in the world to want me to be thrashed."

"That's true, Reg, but I don't want them to cripple you, as they have poor Sultan. What kind of fellows are they?"

"Oh, not a bad sort," said Reginald carelessly. "Lots of the needful, you know, and free with it. Not very fond of the grind, but always up-to-date when there are any good times going. What do you suppose put Sultan in such a lather, John? I was so afraid father would catch me that I came across the fields, and it was just as much as he could do to take the last fence. I made sure he was going to tumble."

"Well for you he didn't," and John smoothed the delicate limbs with his firm gentle touch. "These knees are too pretty for a scar. Go into the Vet room, Reg, and bring me out a roll of bandage."

"Hulloa! That will give me away to the Governor with a vengeance! What are you going to bandage him for?"

"He is badly strained, and if I don't his legs will be puffed by the morning. It will be lucky if it is nothing worse. He looks to me as if he were in for a touch of distemper, but I'll give him a powder and perhaps we can stave it off."

"I guess Sultan misses you, John. Over at the College livery their fingers are all thumbs."

"Poor Sultan!" was all John's answer, as he led the horse into a large paddock thickly strewn with fresh straw.

John had always felt a tenderness and affection for the animals on the farm: but, of late, he had been conscious of an increase in his regard for them, which seemed to come from a need in his own nature of something on which to lavish affection. He was no philosopher, but he knew that there was a change in himself, which brought him nearer in love to the whole world. He realized it as he retired to his humble chamber that night, and it made him restless. Irresistibly he was drawn out of doors into the stillness of the sweet summer night. He went to the stables to see how Sultan was faring, and then wandered out into the open fields under the mystery of the stars.

The night was warm. A breeze heavy with the perfume of flowers lifted the hair from his brow. He heard the low breathing of the cattle as they dozed in the fields on either side, and the soft whirr of downy plumage, as the great owl, which had built its nest among the eaves of the new barn, flew past him. He looked away to where the stars were throbbing with tender light—crimson and green and gold, and the words of the Book, which he had been studying every leisure moment for the past six weeks, swept across his mental vision. "'I am the light of the world.' 'He that believeth on me shall not abide in darkness, but shall have the light of life.' 'The light of life,'" he repeated slowly. "Why, to most people life seems all darkness. What is the light of life?"

Still other words came stealing to his memory. "'I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me.' 'Except ye become as a little child ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven.' 'This is life eternal that ye should know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent.'"

A great light flooded John Randolph's soul. "'I' and 'Me,'" he whispered. "Why, it is a personality. It is Jesus himself! He is the way to the kingdom, the truth of the kingdom and the life of it. The kingdom of heaven, not far away in space, but set up here and now in the hearts of men who live the life hid with Christ in God. I see it all. Jesus Christ is the light of the life which God gives us through his Son."

He stretched his hands up towards the glistening sky. "Jesus Christ," he cried eagerly, "come into my life, and make it light. I take thee for my Master, my Friend. I give myself away to thee. I will follow wherever thou dost lead, Jesus Christ. Help me to grow like thee."

The hush of a great peace fell upon his soul, and his consecration of himself was as real as if through the listening night an angel had stooped and traced upon his brow the kingly motto, "Ich dien."

FOR SONS OF THE FATHERLAND

How Young Immigrants from Germany to the United States are Helped by the German Young Men's Christian Association of New York

AMONG the many institutions established in New York City for the spiritual and temporal benefit of the people, one of the most useful is the German Young Men's Christian Association, located at 140 and 142 Second avenue. The returns of the Immigration Commissioners show how large a number of young men come from Germany every year. A great many of these settle in New York, and of the others who go West, many stay for a few months in the city before going to their destination. It is obvious that if these newcomers can be brought at once under Christian influence, before they are assailed by temptation and before they drift into societies of infidel tendency, they are more likely to become good citizens and add to the moral strength of the country. This fact, realized by eminent German merchants, led, some sixteen years ago, to the organization of the German Y. M. C. A., which has ever since, done a most useful and beneficent work.

The avowed object of the association is to be a friend to the friendless, to obtain work for the unemployed, to teach the foreigner our language and ways, and to furnish all Germans and German-Americans with a place where their leisure time could be spent under good influences. The first meetings were held in the Twenty-third street building of the Association. In 1883, the branch moved to No. 6 Second street, near the Bowery, because the rooms of the Twenty-third street building proved to be too small, and the location too far from the German section of the city. A building fund was then started, and arrangements were made to buy the house, No. 142 Second avenue. On June 1, 1884, the branch took possession of its own home, and has since acquired the adjoining building, 140 Second avenue. These buildings were altered, and are now thoroughly equipped for the work of the different departments.

The aim of the Branch is also to win German-speaking young men to Christ as soon as possible after their arrival in this country, and have them affiliate with some church. This is accomplished by quiet personal work to a large extent, because the average German nature is very slow to appreciate the religious work of our American evangelists, and is more apt to be repelled than attracted by large public evangelistic meetings. He is more apt to resent blunt questions as to his religious beliefs. His former religious environment was so entirely different, his idea of religion begotten in the state churches of Germany, does not appreciate an evangelistic gospel service of America. Careful means adapted to the situation have to be employed. The best results are, therefore, attained only by intelligent personal efforts of the active members and the secretaries. The workers of the Branch believe that in order to make good citizens of the newly-arrived immigrants, the welfare of our country demands that they first become good Christians, and then they will necessarily become good citizens. The motto of the Branch is, "First to Christianize, and then to Americanize."

One of the most successful departments of the work is the educational. Graded classes in English for beginners and for more advanced scholars; classes in bookkeeping, penmanship, arithmetic, stenography, vocal and instrumental music and carpentry are maintained. A series of practical talks on the American Citizen is being given this winter every Monday evening by Mr. Louis Stoiber. It is very gratifying to see from thirty to fifty young men listening earnestly and eagerly to talks about their new fatherland. A committee has it under consideration to hold weekly meetings for young men. These meetings will be of a practical nature—addresses will be made by practical business men who will endeavor to stimulate thought and arouse energy to higher aims and purposes. Social gatherings and entertainments, wholesome and elevating in their nature are arranged from time to time. The music-loving Germans are made to feel at home by having music play a large part at all of these gatherings. Religious meetings are held on Sunday afternoons. There are also Bible training classes, where the young men are taught to study and use intelligently the word of God. For the strengthening of their bodies a large and well-equipped gymnasium is open every day and evening, and instruction given by a trained physical director, who is also a man of sterling Christian character. There are also shower and tub baths connected with the gymnasium which prove a boon to many young men from the tenement-house districts.

THE GERMAN Y. M. C. A. IN NEW YORK

The employment bureau secured last year three hundred and fifty three permanent positions for young Germans. The practical value of this department of the work cannot be overestimated.

The efforts of the Association to get early acquaintance with immigrants are aided by the Associations of Bremen, Hamburg, London, and other seaport towns, who distribute cards to young Germans leaving for America, on which an invitation is printed to visit this German Young Men's Christian Association.

The supervision of the whole work is in the hands of Mr. Hugo Von Hagen, who has had seven years' successful experience in the Association work at St. Louis and Brooklyn, and who for the past four years has given his entire time and attention as General Secretary to the work. Its success in the past, its bright prospects for the future are due to his intelligence, foresight and untiring efforts. He makes an ideal secretary for this work, and being especially gifted with tact and social qualities, is the warm personal friend of every young man who comes to the building.

As only a small fee is received as dues from each member, a large proportion of the expenses must be secured from contributions. The directors have therefore to look for financial assistance to outsiders. People of all religious beliefs aided in buying the property twelve years ago. A large number of sustaining members and contributors give pecuniary assistance to the work each year, or the work would suffer or be curtailed. The officers are now making a special effort at this season to raise three thousand dollars in order to strengthen the work and guarantee its future without curtailment or retrenchment during 1899. Among the sustaining members are ex-Mayor Chas. A. Schieren, Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer, Chas. F. Wiebush, Hon. Chas. F. McLean, E. A. G. Intemann, Jacob H. Miller, E. H. Van Ingen & Co., Oelrichs & Co., Fleitmann & Co., L. F. J. Anger, Greeff & Co., Hancke Hencken, O. F. Zollikoffer, Louis Stoiber, Fred. Willenbrock, H. C. von Post, George H. Beyer, Frederick K. Keller, Mrs. Anna Woerishoffer, Mrs. John W. Miller, E. Eisemann, Thomas N. Bauchle, Louis F. Schwartz, Ernst Benger, Anton Eilers, Conrad F. Nagel, Jacob Schmitt, Charles E. Hauselt, C. J. Schlegel, Mrs. Theo. Dreier, D. Stoevesandt, Rev. G. U. Wenner, D. D., F. Van Axte, Rev. J. J. Young, D. D.

Contributions in any amount, no matter how small, will be gladly received, and the receipt thereof acknowledged, by the Chairman of the Branch, Mr. Robert Goeller, of 59 Wall street, or by the Treasurer, Mr. Henry C. Schnude, of Kountze Brothers, 120 Broadway, or the Secretary, at 140 Second avenue.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Earning Money Easily—Making Labor Pleasant—A Domestic Drudge

A GOOD many young women write asking my advice about easy ways of earning money. I do not find it always easy in my turn to answer such queries, because it is never possible to know all the attendant circumstances in each case. As a rule, people cannot live comfortably at home and engage in business at the same time without a good deal of effort. The trouble with many of my correspondents is that they have no adequate preparation for any line of work. If I could reach all the young women in the land to-day, I would say to them, irrespective of their circumstances, "Fit yourselves for some bread-winning work, then if the need comes, you would have a weapon in your hand with which to face the enemy." This advice is as important for rich as for poor girls; it suits every girl.

THERE is little to complain of in this, in a way, for many women find it more enjoyable to work for themselves and earn their own money than to stay at home engaging in the daily routine; but to return to my questioners: whatever work one undertakes, should be begun with energy, and one's whole mind and heart and strength should be given to it. If, for instance, a woman should carry on an agency, going about for a sewing machine company, or for a subscription book, she must make up her mind in the first place not to be ashamed of her work. She should never apologize for it, nor for herself in it; on the contrary, she should be as winning and as persuasive in all her statements as is consistent with truthfulness. If people rebuff her, she must accept rebuffs pleasantly, yet not be too easily discouraged. A man once said to me "a good saleswoman is one who can sell my wares to people who do not want them." It is no credit to any one to sell goods readily to people who are prepared to buy.

* * *

I CANNOT tell you, friend Joyce, whether you would succeed in the colportage line, but certainly you can at least try. Let me tell you what one girl is doing successfully to my knowledge. Sometime ago she learned how to trim and freshen hats, and as she lives in a country place where there is no milliner's shop, she decided that she would go about among her friends and do any little service in the way of restoring and trimming hats and bonnets for which she could get orders. She has built up a regular line of trade for herself, and though she does not often sell a new hat, yet she does a great deal in the way of trimming old ones. She has established for herself a connection with a store in the nearest city, and to this she sends for her goods as she needs them. It is old-fashioned advice to say to you, "Do the next thing," but sometimes when we are looking for a field for work, it is lying close beside our doors. Let me know how you succeed in your book-selling.

PEARL writes: "I am a poor working-girl, twenty-four years of age, of strong physique, and in excellent health. In my childhood I was obliged to go into service in order to help in the support of a large family. My education was neglected then, and I am not fitted for teaching or any work that requires an education, but I have a longing desire to rise above my present lot. During the past summer a lady visited the family with whom I live. She suggested to me that I might learn the art of massage, and that I would find plenty of opportunity to practice it after I had once acquired it thoroughly." In reply to this I must tell you that scientific massage is something more than mere rubbing. It would be necessary for you to take a course of instruction, shorter of course than that which a trained nurse is necessarily obliged to take, but equally thorough while it lasts. The occupation is a most desirable one for a woman like yourself—young, strong, and with deft hands. Your hands may at present be roughened by labor, but that condition would soon pass away, and the strength you have would come into excellent play in this business. A good masseuse earns a comfortable livelihood. If she has private patients, they pay her a certain sum for each treatment, the amount varying according to the excellence of the massage given and the amount of treatment given. For instance, if a lady requiring this treatment, which is now frequently prescribed by physicians, receives it every day during a winter, she will make special terms with the person who gives it to her.

If she has only an occasional treatment, she will have to pay higher rates. In any event, the profession is a good one, and certainly as honorable as that of nursing, to which it is allied. Still, dear friend, do not regard it as an escape from drudgery; it is rather an exchange of drudgery. I know intimately one or two women whose profession it is to give massage, and I know that they have to work very hard, and that their work makes a great drain upon their vitality. Facial massage could perhaps be learned by finding a position in some manicuring establishment where you could work for a while without payment or at very low wages until you had acquired it. In either case, the life would probably please you better than your present one. You might also try manicuring, which is not at all disagreeable, and is in demand.

INQUIRING FRIEND. One may say with propriety "she feels badly," because she being a person is active in her sense of feeling. One does not, however, say "the flowers smell sweetly" or "the apple tastes sourly," because the flower and the apple are passive in the matter. One may say either "John arrived safely this morning" or "John arrived safe." Both of these forms are used.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

It means that Ivory Soap is as pure as it is possible to make it; it means too, that if Ivory Soap is used, there are no complaints of new, or nearly new, clothing coming from the wash, "worn out."

One adulterant of poor soap is alkali. Pure soap washes out the dirt, alkali burns and eats it out and it does not stop with the dirt.

Have your laundress use only Ivory Soap, and see how much longer the clothes last.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

AN AMERICAN BOY ABROAD *

ONE night I entered a village, and following my usual plan, I accosted the first person I met and used my single word. It happened to be a woman, and she understood me at once. Calling her little boy, she instructed him to take me somewhere. I hadn't the least idea where I was going, but followed him obediently. He led me across the entire village, greatly to the delight of those who happened to see my staff and knapsack, and finally, arriving at a low white building, he pointed at it and made me understand that I was to enter. He then left me, while I went into the building.

I met a neatly-attired woman in the hallway, and because I knew nothing else to say, I said "Schlafen?" She nodded, and I supposed that was all right, and then she went out and called someone. In came a fat German, and he asked me to enter the front room. I did as he told me, and the "front-room" was a revelation to me. It was a long, hall-like place, filled with tables at which a great many men and boys sat eating. Everything seemed immaculately clean and orderly. The men were of all ages and descriptions, but were clean and looked as though they were thoroughly respectable. Some were very old—eighty years perhaps—and others were only boys, little older than myself. There was an air of home-like comfort about the room that was delightful, and everything seemed decidedly cheerful and pleasant. The landlord motioned for me to take off my knapsack and my cap, and I then began to understand things. This was apparently some kind of a hotel, and this large room was the general sitting-room and dining-room, all in one. Things were beginning to get interesting, and I anxiously awaited the next move on the part of the landlord.

In a little while every one began to order things to eat, and they called my attention to a bill of fare tacked up on the wall. I looked at it, and though I couldn't read it all, most of it was decipherable. The following were some of the items upon it:

Potato Salad, -	1 cent	Coffee, - -	1 cent.
Two Eggs, -	2 cents.	Hash, - -	2 cents.
Bread, -	one-half cent.	Potatoes, -	1 cent.
Soup - -	2 cents.	Boiled Meat, -	3 cents.

So I had some potato salad, some bread and some coffee, and it was so very good, and I was hungry, I also ordered some hash, wondering if it would resemble the American variety. It was also good, and I began to think this a wonderful place. I ate my supper—the best I had enjoyed in some time—with great relish, and awaited further developments. I wondered if the room would be as cheap proportionately as the food. I took my journal out of my knapsack and began to write in it, for almost everyone in the room was writing letters or postcards. Then I laid away my work and was surprised to see the fat landlord with a great book in his hand. He stepped out into the middle of the room and opening it, began to read.

When he finished reading the Bible he repeated the Lord's Prayer, and then taking a candle, he led us all up stairs; but before going up we each signed our names and addresses in a large book, and told him how much we wanted to pay for a bed. There were some for four cents, some for six and some for eight. I decided to take one for six cents. We reached the top of the stairs, and five others and myself were shown into one room. There were six beds, every one clean and nice, and the room itself equally wholesome. The landlord stood by with his candle until we were all in bed, and then he shut the door and went away. I went to sleep with a straw tick over me for a covering, and slept soundly till morning, when we were awakened by our host. We all washed in a sort of trough, and then went down stairs again, heard him read the Bible and pray. For breakfast I had bread and coffee at a cent and a half, and felt well fed after it, too.

By this time I began to see that this was some kind of an institution, for on the wall was a list of Herberge zur Heimaths in all parts of Germany, and they were all as cheap as this one, so the sign said. I asked the landlord about it, and he explained, as well as he could, that it was a Christian institution, a sort of German Y. M. C. A., and was for the convenience of men traveling about the country on foot. Ever after this I asked immediately for the Herberge zur Heimath when I entered a town, and I never spent more than fifteen cents a day for my accommodation. It was a godsend to me, and I never appreciated anything so much as I did the quiet little inns.

Illustrations and Incidents in the Life of the World's Greatest Evangelist

ONE night in Chicago, many years ago, when I was on my way home I saw a man leaning against a lamp-post. Stepping up to him and placing my hand on his shoulder, I said:

"Are you a Christian?"

The man flew into a rage, doubled up his fist, and I thought he was going to pitch me into the gutter.

I said: "I'm very sorry if I've offended you, but I thought I was asking a proper question."

"Mind your own business," he roared.

"That is my business," I answered.

About three months later, on a bitter cold morning about daybreak, some one knocked at my door.

"Who's there?" I asked.

A stranger answered, and I said: "What do you want?"

"I want to become a Christian," was the reply.

I opened the door, and to my astonishment there was the man who had cursed me for talking to him as he leaned against the lamp-post.

He said: "I'm very sorry. I haven't had any peace since that night. Your words have haunted and troubled me. I couldn't sleep last night, and I thought I'd come and get you to pray for me."

That man accepted Christ, and the moment he had done so, asked:

"What can I do for Him?"

He taught in the Sabbath School until the war broke out, when he enlisted, and was one of the first to be shot down, but not before he had given a ringing testimony for God.

Living on Crumbs

I once heard Rev. William Arnot say that he was the guest of a friend who had a favorite dog. The animal would come into the room where the family were sitting at the dinner table, and would stand looking at his master. If the master threw him a crumb, the dog would seize it before it got to the floor. But if he put a joint of meat down on the floor the dog would look at it and leave it alone, as if it were too good for him.

"So," said Mr. Arnot, "there are many Christians who are satisfied to live on crumbs, when God wants to give them the whole joint."

Come boldly to the throne of grace, and get the help you need. There is an abundance for all.

"Water! Water!"

After one of the great battles in the war we were coming down the Tennessee River with a company of wounded men. It was in the spring of the year, and the water was not clear. You know that the cry of a wounded man is: "Water! water!" especially in a hot country. I remember taking a glass of the muddy water to one of these men. Although he was very thirsty, he only drank a little of it. He handed the glass back to me, and as he did so, he said:

"Oh, for a draught of water from my father's well!"

Are there any thirsty ones here? Come and drink of the fountain opened in Christ! Your longing will be satisfied, and you will never thirst again.

He Honored the Emperor

It is said that Alexander the Great had a favorite general to whom he had given permission to draw upon the royal treasury for any amount. On one occasion this general had made a draft for such an enormous sum that the treasurer refused to honor it until he consulted the emperor. So he went into his presence and told him what the general had done.

"Did you not honor the draft?" said the emperor.

"No: I refused until I had seen your majesty, because the amount was so great."

The emperor was indignant. His treasurer said that he was afraid of offending him if he had paid the amount.

"Do you not know," replied the emperor, "that he honors me and my kingdom by making a large draft?"

Whether the story be authentic or not, it is true that we honor God when we ask for great things.

Paul's Persuasion

A man was dying during the war. He was asked of what persuasion he was. He replied:

"Paul's."

"What! are you a Methodist? They all claim Paul."

"No."

"Are you a Presbyterian then? They claim Paul, too."

"No."

"Of what persuasion are you then?"

"I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

It Took Two

A Scotchman was once asked how many it took to convert him.

"Two," he replied.

"Two! How was that? didn't God do it all?"

"The Almighty and myself converted me," he said. "I did all I could against it, and the Almighty did all he could for it, and he was victorious."

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthly appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but today I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

—go to some grocer who will give you Pearline." That's the only way to do when they send you an imitation. The popularity of Pearline begets the habit of calling anything that's washing-powder, "Pearline." Those who notice the difference in name, think perhaps "it's about the same thing." It isn't. Nothing else equals Pearline, the original and standard washing compound. 578

THE ANGEL PRESENCE

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for Jan. 1. Ex. 23: 20–25

LIFE is very much like the journey on which the Hebrews were setting out, when this message came to them. It is often through a desert as dreary as that which they trod; it brings us in contact with powers hostile to us: its events are utterly unknown to us, so that we cannot be sure of what will occur on the morrow; we need daily provision for our constantly recurring hunger and thirst; and there is a possibility of our failing, through our own misconduct and lack of faith, to reach the Land of Promise. As we stand for a moment at another milestone on our journey, these facts are forced upon our attention. We enter upon another stage of our way, ignorant of what lies before us, and of what trials and troubles and joys we shall meet. But, happily for us, the resemblance of our lives to the journey of the Israelites, does not end here. They were assured of a divine presence, a representative of God, himself, who would accompany them. Such a presence God promises permanently to his people on their way through life. Christ said that those who loved him, his Father would love, and would make his abode with them. All that the angel was to the wanderers, he will be to us, who need such help quite as much as they. Like them we need to be kept in the way and to be brought to the place which God has prepared. But such a presence involves duties. We cannot expect it, if we harbor in our hearts guests that would be uncongenial to him. Evil thoughts, desires and passions must be expelled, to fit the heart for his abode. And he must be obeyed. He requires implicit surrender, and when that is given, he undertakes for us; becomes our guide, protector and saviour, so that we may go to meet the future without fear. We may not expect immunity from trouble, but we are assured that in every trouble he will be with us; that the trouble will do us no harm, but will strengthen and purify us and at the end of our course we shall enter the haven of eternal peace. But these blessings are all conditional on obedience: "If ye will indeed obey his voice and do all that I speak." The condition is reasonable; and it is because we fail in that, that we miss the joy of our way.

Work of the Crittenton Mission

The car "Good News," with Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, the merchant evangelist, C. S. Mason, Superintendent Pacific Gospel Union, of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Emma Moffatt, the Gospel singer of Los Angeles, is making a tour of Arizona Territory. Great spiritual awakenings have taken place at The Needles, Calif., Kingman, Ariz., and at Williams, and there have been some remarkable conversions. One who was the son of a Christian mother, and studied for the Presbyterian ministry, but who has been a drunkard for six years, came to Christ and publicly testified. Throughout the territory much interest has been aroused in behalf of erring girls. Fifty-two Rescue Homes are now conducted in the principal cities of the Union by the Crittenton Mission.

"I can say that it is a remedy safe and easy of application, a very gospel to the body when properly applied. I welcome and recommend it. Yours truly,
"JOSEPH MAYOU, Rector."

"I have found the Electropoise valuable in these ways: 1. As a tonic and restorative after a severe Sunday's work in the pulpit, it thus overleaping 'blue Monday' entirely. 2 In soothing to sleep after great nervousness produced by a surgical operation without the use of an anæsthetic. 3. In threatened croup. Twice I used it to check this dreaded disease. An hour in each instance sufficed to turn the hard, hoarse cough to a free, loose one, as in ordinary cold. 4. Where no specific ailment was apparent, but a debilitated condition, I have used it with the entire family with gratifying results. Rev. L. CARMON BELL."

Send for illustrated booklet with testimonial letters from two hundred and fifty people cured by the Electropoise of rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, catarrh, nervousness, and insomnia.

Moral Dangers in the Army

The chaplain of a regiment now stationed in the South, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as follows:

I have been in the work since June 25th, and I wish I could adequately describe the great change that gradually came over it with the beginning of peace negotiations; it is to me one of the most striking things in the whole summer's experience. The temper of the men and the character of the work are now very different from what they were in the early summer: there is no longer the charming tenderness and responsiveness on the part of the men; neither are they so sullen and defiant as they were during the period of uncertainty when all were so anxious to be mustered out; the acute stage of discontent and homesickness has passed off, and been succeeded by a spirit of restlessness which is appalling in its consequences; it knows neither self-respect nor respect for the rights of others; it is sweeping boys off their feet who have stood all the summer time to their manhood and true to their home-training. Since the last payday I have talked with a considerable number of boys in this regiment whom I found gambling or drinking, who said they had never done such a thing before. They are disgusted at the prospect of being obliged to go to Cuba: they are thoroughly out of patience with drill and army discipline and restraint, and in their desire to drown their feelings and relieve the tedium of camp life, they turn to the diversion that offers the most excitement; this is usually the saloon, the gaming table, or the brothel. Our work has settled down to a hard, unromantic, hand-to-hand and man-to-man struggle with the forces of evil. As counter-attractions to the blandishments of the devil we propose, in addition to the Bible classes, Gospel meetings, games and other agencies now in use, to organize educational classes, and will be content if we can interest them sufficiently to keep their minds from evil, whether thorough, scholarly work is done or not. In this regiment we have classes in conversational, Spanish, book-keeping, shorthand, typewriting, civics, general history, Latin, Greek, music, light gymnastics, Life of Christ, normal Bible, and the common English branches already arranged for, with prospects of a large attendance.

I can forsee, I think, that in Cuba, conditions will not be improved. With no English-speaking people save the small tradesmen, and no churches in which they can understand the service, with no resources, social or evangelical, such as have been offered by Jacksonville and Savannah, on which to draw for evening services and entertainments, we shall be left to the machinations of him who "finds always something for idle hands to do."

I write these things concerning the situation as it appears to me, in order that you may not relax the earnest and effective efforts you have been making through your excellent paper, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for the support of this work for God and our soldier boys.

Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 409 Fourth Avenue, New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

ARE YOUR LUNGS WEAK?

To Every Sufferer from Catarrh, Lung Weakness or Consumption a Great Specialist Sends His New and Wonderful

TREATMENT FREE.

Nearly everybody you meet will regard it as a kind of insult to be asked if they have weak lungs. All seem to have a solid faith in the soundness of their own breathing machine. In cases of trouble they will admit there is a "heavy cold," "a touch of bronchitis," or even "a spell of Asthma," but as to weak or unsound lungs, never, NEVER. Even the poor consumptive who scarcely speaks without coughing, whose cheeks are wasted, hollow and bear the hectic flush of doom, will assure you with glistening eyes that his cold is on the mend and he will be all right when the weather changes.

This is a sad and pitiable form of delusion. It is not our business here to discuss the reason of it. Its prevalence, however, is beyond all doubt, and we feel that we are right in holding it responsible for a neglect of serious lung troubles in ourselves and others—that it is almost criminal.

How many a poor bread-earner there is who keeps on and on at his daily toil, taking cough medicines by fits and starts, but never quite curing his cough, while this same cough is but a symptom of decay that is eating into his lungs, and will in time cause their destruction. Thus does a wife observe her husband, or parents witness the struggle of a darling child, the youth or the maiden who was to rejoice their later years, while no steps are taken to battle with the evil until consumption has seized on one more victim. It is simply terrible to think how far we may be guilty by our indifference to the lung troubles of those near and dear to us. It is also a sad thought that we may hug a delusion as to our own health that we only get rid of when life itself must pay the forfeit.

Let us quit the distressing subject to come to what is practical. Nobody can afford to think lightly of lung troubles. Nobody can afford to be mistaken about their possible dangers. Nobody can afford to neglect them or "let them wear out," or "get better in the spring," or any other tomfoolery that leads only to wreck and ruin. Lung troubles don't move backward. Weak lungs don't grow strong by themselves—you must heal them and strengthen them and rid them of the very earliest germs of disease or you are simply committing a form of suicide. Either you must cure your lung troubles or THEY WILL KILL YOU.

That's the whole situation in a nutshell.

Never was there a cure for lung troubles equal to the newly discovered Dr. Slocum treatment. This forms a system of three remedies that are used simultaneously, and supplement each other's curative action. The treatment has immortalized Dr. Slocum's name. It cures weak lungs, bronchitis, asthma, coughs, consumption, catarrh and every other ailment of the pulmonary region. It destroys every germ that can affect the respiratory system, and even in advanced stages of lung trouble positively arrests the tubercular growth, while it also builds up the patient so that his system is enabled to throw off scrofula, rheumatism and other wasting diseases. Thousands of cured cases already prove these claims. Thousands of grateful people bless the discovery.

A NEW RHEUMATIC REMEDY.

A prominent physician writes:

SPOTSWOOD, N. J.

DEAR SIRS:—Please send me, by mail, four more bottles of TARTARLITHINE.

I will also here state, in justice, that this is the most welcome remedy that has come into my hands since my beginning of the practice of medicine. It has given me, in every case of rheumatism in which I have used it, the happiest kind of results. I have used discretion, perhaps even more than necessary, in its employment; that it be given to patients whose cases do not yield to ordinary treatment, old chronic cases of gouty diathesis, where there is a tendency to calcareous deposits, etc. These are undoubtedly the most troublesome patients to give what might fairly be termed good results. Now these have been the very kind in which I have been using Tartarlithine with the very happiest results to patients and myself. Many valuable remedies come daily to our aid, but this has been the most welcome one to me thus far.

Yours very truly,

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Mrs. S. B., Lakeland, Fla. What writer or orator was it who compared Liberty to a star, leading our Republic onward?

Daniel W. Voorhees. His words were: "Liberty, thou star of promise, hovering over the cradle where the Republic was born and still burning on the front of the sky, we follow thee, wherever thy orbit may lead."

B. F. M., Erie, Pa. Is there any means of finding out how much intoxicating liquor is consumed annually in the United States, and how much mischief it does?

The Government returns on the revenue received last year from the tax, show that in the year ended June 30, 1897, taxes were paid on 69,979,362 gallons of distilled liquor and on 1,067,115,914 of fermented liquor. Besides this, of course, there is the illicit stuff, on which no tax is paid. In the eleven years, from 1885 to 1896, the consumption of beer in the United States increased from eight gallons a head to twelve gallons, and this includes persons of all ages. During the same period there was proportionate decrease in the quantity of distilled liquor drunk. The quantity consumed in 1896 was larger than that in 1885 by 376,000 gallons, but as the population had enormously increased, it follows that the consumption per head had decreased. The mischief done can never be estimated. The intoxicating liquor drunk causes the larger part of the crime and pauperism with which we have to deal.

M. H. S., Day Lodge. Any funds sent to this journal for the establishment of Sunday Schools and unsectarian missionary work in Porto Rico will be duly applied. We are now making preparations for the establishment of work of this character on the island.

L. S., Dayton, O. What is the oldest recorded discovery of human remains?

There is a great diversity of opinion concerning the antiquity of the human remains found in different parts of the globe, more particularly those discovered in the glacial drift in Northern Europe, in the ossiferous caverns of Denmark, Switzerland, Spain, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Australia, as well as both North and South America. They have been identified by scientists as belonging to ages before the dawn of history; but no reliable calculation can be made as to the length of time they have been embedded in the earth or rock, or as to the period which separates paleolithic man from the present.

I. S. H., Cayuga, N. Y. If, as you say, we shall recognize our friends in heaven, shall we not grieve over some who are not there?

Perhaps it is the tears shed over such trouble that God promises to wipe away (Rev. 7 17). It is probable, however, that the change wrought by death and the conferring of the spiritual body, will diminish the strength of earthly ties, and the soul will be so absorbed in the verities of the eternal world, that the fate of those who have died impenitent will eventually cease to cause distress.

G. P. V., Duxburg Pa. What is the Corban referred to in Mark 7 11, 12, as a dishonor to parents?

Corban means devoted or consecrated to God. Thus if poor persons asked their son to give them help, and he replied that all he had, or some particular part of his property was Corban, or set aside for God's service, the parents had to submit. Even if afterwards the son repented and wished to give the money to his parents, he was not allowed to do so. If he gave it away at all, it must be given to God. Christ's reproach was based on the fact that the practice made the commandment void. The rendering of the passage in the Revised Version confirms this view.

Mrs. B. B., Wilbert, Minn. Will you kindly tell me the names of the seven men who went into Santiago Harbor with Lieutenant Hobson?

They were Osborn Deignan, coxswain of the Merrimac; George F. Phillips, a machinist of the Merrimac; John Kelly, water tender of the same vessel; George Charette, a gunner of the New York; Daniel Montague, a seaman of the Brooklyn; J. C. Murphy, a coxswain of the Iowa, and Randolph Clausen, a coxswain of the New York. For the other information desired write to Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

M. D. A., Junction City, Oreg. Can a murderer be saved if he repents?

The only passage that implies a doubt is 1. John 3:15, which says that "no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." This, however, seems rather to teach that it is safe to assume that if a man commits murder he has not been converted. Christ's statement that "all sins shall be forgiven to the sons of men" (Mark 3:28) certainly implies a hope that even a repentant murderer need not give up hope of forgiveness.

Mrs. J. S. D., Monticello, Ark. Where was Joel Chandler Harris born? What magazines has he written for, and the names of some of his books?

He was born Dec. 9, 1848, in the village of Eatonton, Putnam Co., Ga. He was an editorial writer on the Morning News, in Savannah, and afterward joined the staff of the Constitution, in Atlanta. About that time he wrote Uncle Remus, His Songs and His Sayings. In 1883 he published Nights with Uncle Remus; in 1884, Mingo, and Other Sketches in Black and White; in 1887, Free Joe and Other Georgian Sketches.

M. M. K., Yorkana, Pa. I am trying to lead a Christian life as best I know how, but as I am quite deaf, and can not hear the preaching, singing and praying in church, must I attend church? Or, are family worship and private devotion good enough for me? If not, what must I do?

Your condition is certainly unfortunate, but may not be beyond remedy. The use of the audiphone has helped many who were afflicted as you are. If you could procure one you might realize much benefit. Do not give up attending God's house; even though you may not hear, you can join in spirit with all that is done and said. Write to the Medical Record, New York, about the audiphone.

W. S. S., Shreve, O. 1. What is required of members of the Presbyterian Church to hold membership with that church? 2. Is it right for elders to keep members in church and choir and Sunday School when they know they are not living right? Can we expect a blessing under such circumstances?

1. Candidates for membership are received on confession of faith or on letters from other Protestant churches of which they have been members in good standing. It is required of them that they should assent to the doctrines held by the church, conform to its rules, and live as becomes earnest Christian men and women. 2. Fellow-members should not be too quick to constitute themselves judges of the conduct of others; but one who is openly living in sin should not escape unrebuked. The rule laid down in the Scriptures is a safe one to follow. You will find in I. Cor., fifth chapter, how to deal with those who are living corrupt lives and you will also find in II. Cor., second chapter, how to deal with them when they repent. See also Matt. 18:15-17.

J. A. W., Independence, Oregon, writes:

C. C. W., Hope, Arkansas, asks why President Cleveland dismissed Sackville West. He was dismissed on account of the "Murchison letter," said to have been written by one Osgoodby, formerly from the State of New York, but at the time the letter was sent by him to Sackville West, he was in some place in California. The substance of the letter was that the writer was of foreign birth, living in a community composed largely of foreigners of English birth, who were extremely anxious to know how to vote. West advised them and his answer was immediately sent to Mr. Blaine, who made it public.

C. G. M., Villisca, Ia. You are in error as to the beginning of the twentieth century, as you will see by the following illustration: If a child is born on Jan. 1, 1890, he would be ten years old on Jan. 1, 1900, and begin his second decade with the beginning of the twentieth century.

No, we are quite right. People who lived in the first year of the Christian era, would not have said (supposing the era had been then fixed), that they were living in the year 0, but in the year 1. March of that year would have been March of the year 1. March of the following year would be March of the year 2, though it would be only fifteen months from the era. So March of the year 10 would be only nine years and three months from the end of the century, and not until December 31 of the year 10 would the world have completed its first decade. The child you use as an illustration begins life in the year 1890, but in reckoning the years of the centuries you must begin with the year 1. The French did so when they made a new era during the revolution. They dated the decrees with the year 1 until the end of the first year from the change. They did not call the first year the year 0.

A Reader, West Virginia. A Consul has to do with matters relating to the commerce of his own nation, and is stationed at a seaport or important inland city. He is under the authority of a Consul-General. A Minister is the high diplomatic representative of his country, attending to important matters of State, and guarding the interests of his country in its relations with the nation to which he is accredited. An Envoy is a diplomatic minister ranking below an Ambassador.

Miss N. R., Foosland, Ill. Does dew rise, fall, or form?

It does all three. The atmosphere is capable of holding in suspension a certain amount of vapor. The minimum temperature at which it can remain suspended is called the "dew-point." When the temperature falls below the dew-point, as it generally does about sunset, the vapor can no longer remain suspended, but falls to the ground, and is sometimes visible as a fine mist. Again, the surface of the earth and vegetable matter are constantly parting with their heat by radiation. When the sky is cloudy, the radiation taken back is equivalent to that taken away. When the sky is clear, no equivalent is given, and the earth becomes colder than the atmosphere. If the night be calm, the air that comes in contact with the cold surface is cooled below the dew-point and deposits its moisture in the form of dew. The dew that has formed or fallen rises again in the morning by evaporation.

P. J. H., Minneapolis, Minn. If Cuba is given her freedom, thereby depriving the United States of collecting any taxes or revenue from her, should she not shoulder the expense that the United States has gone to in obtaining that freedom for her, or will she receive it as a free gift?

It is probable that several years will elapse before Cuban self-government is an established fact. During those years, the United States will administer Cuban affairs and control the revenues of the island. Some compensation for the war outlay may be derived from this source, and, besides, our people will reap many advantages from the increase of trade and the valuable enterprises to be begun on the island. But it should not be forgotten that it was not a war for gold or conquest; but for a high principle, which could not take the question of reimbursement into consideration; and the nation would not be disappointed, even though there were no pecuniary returns for all its expenditures.

E. S., Richmond, Vt. 1. Is anything known of the fate of Andree, the Arctic explorer; also of Walter Wellman, who went in search of him? 2. Does it pay to sacrifice so many lives in search of the Pole? 3. What benefit would it be to the world if it were discovered? 4. What is the distance from Hong Kong to Manila?

1. No definite information, but it is not improbable that Andree's plans may have contemplated going into winter quarters at some safe place. 2. Science and exploration say yes; humanity says no. The answer must depend upon the view-point. 3. It would add to the sum of human knowledge, but could hardly be of value, in a commercial sense. 4. About 800 miles.

Mrs. C. M. C., Waterford, Calif. Can you tell me who the man of God was, spoken of in II. Kings 23: 17-18?

He was the same prophet who is mentioned in 1. Kings, 13. His name is nowhere given in the Bible, but it is evident that he came by divine authority, and uttered the prophecy which was so remarkably fulfilled 300 years afterward. Josephus, the Jewish historian (in Antiquities, book 8, chap. 8, par. 5, says the name of the prophet was Jadon, probably identical with Iddo, the seer, who was afterward slain by a lion for his disobedience. Jerome calls him Jaddo.

THE NEW DIAMOND FIELDS AT KIMBERLEY, SOUTH AFRICA.

At the diamond mines, a netting is erected to prevent the negro laborers from throwing gems to confederates outside. This practice was indulged to such an extent, and so many valuable diamonds were stolen in this way, that it was found necessary to employ severe measures. Our photograph shows a strange gathering of different races, the great majority of the workers being negroes.

A PIONEER NEW ENGLAND CHURCH

The "Old Ship" at Hingham and Its Remarkable History, Covering Two and a Half Centuries—A Relic of Puritan Days

THE "OLD SHIP" CHURCH AT HINGHAM

AMONG the historic buildings in this country, around which sacred associations cluster, there are few indeed, if any, that can point to a greater antiquity than the structure shown in the photograph, which is well known to multitudes in New England. It is claimed to be the oldest church building of English handiwork in the United States that is not now wholly a ruin.

Some sixteen miles from Boston is Hingham, where stands this quaint old church. It is known all over New England as the "Old Ship" church, and looks very much as it did when it was erected, more than two hundred years ago. In a brass tablet at one corner of the old church is this brief and comprehensive history:

> This church was gathered in 1635. The frame of this meeting house was raised on the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth days of July, 1681, and the house was completed and opened for worship on the eighth of January 1681-2. It cost the town £430 and the old house.

There was a church in Hingham as early as 1635. A picture of this, the mother of the "Old Ship" church, would be of absorbing interest now, but no such picture exists. Its location is known, however, and it is also known that it had a high and stout palisade to protect the worshipers from sudden attack by the Indians.

One cannot find out definitely just why the old church was given its peculiar name of the "Old Ship." There is nothing in its exterior to suggest it, but it is said that its interior construction gave rise to the odd name. However that may be, the church is and will ever be called the "Old Ship." The points of the compass are painted above the bell on the ceiling, as in a ship's binnacle. A remarkable fact in connection with the church is this:

One minister, the Rev. Ebenezer Gay, preached in this pulpit for sixty-nine years, or from 1718 until 1787. He was said to have been one of the most eloquent pulpit orators of his day, and a man of a warm and true heart. John Adams often went to the "Old Ship" church to hear the Rev. Ebenezer Gay preach. It is an equally remarkable fact that in a period of more than two hundred and fifty years, this Hingham church had but eight pastors.

An addition was built to the church in 1729 and another in 1755. This gave the house its present size of 55 by 73 feet. As was the custom in many New England villages, the church was used for town-meetings.

Mr. Samuel Adams Drake gives the following description of the interior of the "Old Ship" when it was first built. He says:

There was a gallery running around on three sides—nothing else to hide the roughly-hewn timbers of the frame from view. Rough benches were placed on the floor of the house and in the galleries. To these the congregation were assigned according to age, sex, and condition, by a formal vote. For instance, we have the assignment of "the fore seate for the men on the north side." "In the second seate in the gallery at the west end more of ye young men." "The second seate on the gallery at the east end of the house for ye maids." The young of both sexes were kept as far apart as the points of the compass.

Like many another church of ancient origin, the "Old Ship" has a burying-ground behind it. In it may be found the graves of many men once prominent in the town. Here are the graves of Gen. Benjamin Lincoln of Revolutionary fame, and Gov. John A. Andrew, the "war governor" of Massachusetts, whose name is revered as much as that of any other governor the great old State has ever had. J. L. H.

Dangerous Delay

It is related that a lady came to Doctor Chalmers and said: "Doctor, I cannot bring my child to Christ. I've talked, and talked, but it's of no use." The doctor thought she had not much skill, and said, "Now you be quiet, and I will talk to her alone." When he got the girl alone he said to her: "They are bothering you a good deal about this question; now suppose I tell your mother you don't want to be talked to any more upon this subject for a year. How will that do?"

The girl hesitated a little, and then said she, "didn't think it would be safe to wait for a year. Something might turn up. She might die before then."

"That's so," replied the doctor; "but suppose we say six months."

She didn't think even this would be safe, and she said so very frankly.

"Well, let us say three months," was the doctor's reply.

After a little hesitation, the girl finally said, "I don't think it would be safe to put it off for three months—don't think it would be safe to put it off at all," and they went down on their knees and she found Christ.

A SAMARITAN SHELTER

A Practical Aid for Homeless Men in the City of Brotherly Love

THE "Samaritan Shelter," located at 413 North Fourth street, Philadelphia, is one of the best equipped institutions of the kind in the country. The commodious three-and-a-half story building has been rented during the past three years, but recently the Board of Directors purchased the property for $9,000. Five of the members immediately subscribed $800, and on their last donation day quite a large sum of money was received. This work is intended to help temporally, as well as on spiritual lines, and much good seed has been sown, and many conversions have taken place.

The front room on the first floor is fitted up as a meeting room and office. It is here that the men are gathered between eight and nine o'clock, when a short religious service is held, and all who desire shelter for the night are required to register in a large book kept for that purpose. Everything is done with clock-like precision. In the morning, before leaving, the men go to the large dining-room, where, after family worship, coffee and bread are served to all.

Those who go through the institution, and see how cleanly and orderly it is, are favorably impressed with the practical work done there.

While visiting the Home, the writer spoke to the men briefly. After telling the story of the Cross, several held up their hands for prayer, and one backslider declared his repentance and his desire to seek anew the better life. Those most actively interested in the Shelter are German Lutherans, but nationality and religious belief do not prevent any man without a home from receiving shelter for the night. The Superintendent, O. H. Wesner, and his wife are assisted by a young woman, and the three do all in their power to care for the men temporally, and to point them to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." In three years, more than thirty thousand lodgers have been cared for in the Home. WM. K. FISHER.

The President's Southern Tour

Warmly Greeted in Georgia and Elsewhere—His Speech at Atlanta

PRESIDENT McKINLEY and a large representative party, including Cabinet officers, leading men in public and official life in Washington, and a number of ladies, visited Atlanta, Ga., on Dec. 14, to attend the Peace Jubilee. The celebration was the occasion of a great gathering of representative people of the Southern States. The Presidential party were warmly greeted, and when they visited the House of Representatives, in the afternoon, a great reception awaited them. President Dodson made a brief address of welcome, which President McKinley acknowledged in a speech, that will long be remembered by the Southern people. He said:

"PEACE"

Sectional lines no longer mar the map of the United States; sectional feeling no longer holds back the love we bear one another. Fraternity is the national anthem, sung by a chorus of forty-five States and our Territories at home and beyond the seas. The Union is once more the common altar of our love and loyalty, our devotion and sacrifice. The old flag again waves over us in peace with new glories, which your sons and ours have this year added to its sacred folds. What cause we have for rejoicing, saddened only by the fact that so many of our brave men fell on the field or sickened and died from hardship and exposure, and others returned bringing wounds and disease from which they will long suffer! The memory of the dead will be a precious legacy, and the disabled will be the nation's care. A nation which cares for its disabled soldiers as we have always done, will never lack defenders. The national cemeteries for those who fell in battle are proof that the dead are cared for, and the living have our love. What an army of silent sentinels we have; and with what loving care their graves are kept. Every soldier's grave made during our unfortunate Civil War is a tribute to American valor. And while, when those graves were made, we differed widely about the nature of this Government, these differences were long ago settled by the arbitrament of arms, and the time has now come, in the evolution of sentiment and feeling, under the providence of God, when, in the spirit of fraternity, we should share with you in the care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers. The cordial feeling now happily existing between the North and South prompts this gracious act, and if it needed further justification it is found in the gallant loyalty to the Union and the Flag, so conspicuously shown in the year just past by the sons and grandsons of those heroic dead. What a glorious future awaits us if, unitedly, wisely and bravely we face the new problems now pressing upon us, determined to solve them for right and humanity.

His reference to the Southern soldier's graves was received with intense interest and appreciation by the great audience. Addresses were also delivered by Generals Wheeler, Lawton and Young. In the afternoon there was a brilliant floral parade, which the President reviewed. The following day he addressed another great gathering, his theme being our reunited nation. "Our flag," he said, "has been planted in two hemispheres, and there it remains, the symbol of liberty and law, of peace and progress."

On leaving Atlanta, the Presidential party visited Montgomery and Tuskegee, Ala., being enthusiastically welcomed.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE BABE'S ESCAPE

A Christmas Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Matthew 2: 13, ... } Herod will seek the young child to destroy him

THE cradle of the infant Jesus had no rockers, for it was not to be soothed by oscillating motion, as are the cradles of other princes. It had no canopy, for it was not to be hovered over by anything so exquisite. It had no embroidered pillow, for the young head was not to have such luxurious comfort. Though a meteor—ordinarily the most erratic and seemingly ungovernable of all skyey appearances—had been sent to designate the place where that cradle stood, and a choir had been sent from the heavenly temple to serenade its illustrious occupant with an epic, yet that cradle was the target for all earthly and diabolical hostilities. Indeed, I give you as my opinion that it was the narrowest and most wonderful escape of the ages that the child was not slain before he had taken his first step or spoken his first word. Herod could not afford to have him born. The Cæsars could not afford to have him born. The gigantic oppressions and abominations of the world could not afford to have him born. Was there ever planned a more systematized or appalling bombardment in all the world than the bombardment of that cradle?

The Herod who led the attack was Treachery, Vengeance, and Sensuality impersonated. As a sort of pastime he slew Hyrcanus, the grandfather of his wife. Then he slew Mariamne, his wife. Then he butchered her two sons, Alexander and Aristobulus. Then he slew Antipater, his oldest son. Then he ordered burned alive forty people who had pulled down the eagle of his authority. He ordered the nobles who had attended upon his dying bed to be slain, so that there might be universal mourning after his decease. From that same death-bed he ordered the slaughter of all the children in Bethlehem under two years of age, feeling sure that if he massacred the entire infantile population that would include the destruction of the child whose birth-place astronomy had pointed out with its finger of light. What were the slaughtered babes to him, and as many frenzied and bereft mothers. To have such a man, with associates just as cruel, and an army at his command, attempting the life of the infant Jesus, does there seem any chance for his escape? Then that flight southward for so many miles, across deserts and amid bandits and wild beasts (my friend, the late missionary and scientist, Dr. Lansing, who took the same journey, said it was enough to kill both the Madonna and the child), and poor residence in Cairo, Egypt. You know how difficult it is to take an ordinary child successfully through the disorders that are sure to assail it even in comfortable homes and with all delicate ministries, and then think of the exposure of that famous babe in villages and lands where all sanitary laws were put at defiance, his first hours on earth spent in a room without any doors, and oftimes swept by chilled night winds; then afterward riding many days under hot tropical sun, and part of many nights, lest the avenger overtake the fugitive before he could be hidden in another land!

The Sanhedrim also were affronted at the report of this mysterious arrival of a child that might upset all conventionalities and threaten the throne of the nation. "Shut the door, and bolt it, and double bar it against him," cried all political and ecclesiastical power. Christ on a retreat when only a few days of age, with all the privations and hardships and sufferings of retreat! When the glad news came that Herod was dead, and the Madonna was packing up and taking her child home, bad news also came, that Archelaus, the son, had taken the throne—another crowned infamy. What chance for the babe's life? Will not some short grave hold the wondrous infant?"

"Put him to death!" was the order all up and down Palestine, and all up and down the desert between Bethlehem and Cairo. The cry was, "Here comes an iconoclast of all established order! Here comes an aspirant for the crown of Augustus! If found on the streets of Bethlehem, dash him to death on the pavement! If found on a hill, hurl him down the rocks! Away with him!" But the Babe got home in safety, and passed up from infancy to youth, and from youth to manhood, and from carpenter-shop to Messiahship, and from Messiahship to Enthronement, until the mightiest name on earth is Jesus, and there is no mightier name in heaven.

What I want to call your attention to is your narrow escape and mine, and the world's narrow escape. Suppose that attempt on the young Child's life had been successful! Suppose that delegation of wise men, who were to report to Herod immediately after they discovered the hard bed in the Bethlehem caravansary, had obeyed orders and reported! Suppose the beast carrying the Madonna and the Child in the flight had stumbled and flung to death its riders! Suppose Archelaus had got his hands on the Babe that his father had failed to find! Suppose that among the children dashed from the Bethlehem house-tops, or separated by sword of the enraged constabulary, Jesus had perished!

Then: To begin on the outermost rim of my subject, Christmas festivities would never have been observed, Christmas carols never sung, Christmas gifts never bestowed, Christmas games never played, Christmas bells never rung. What an awful subtraction from the world's brightness would have been the making of December twenty-fifth like other days of the year! Glorious day! After brightening England, and Holland, and Germany for centuries, it stepped across the sea and pronounced its benediction on our shores. Why, we never get over our childhood Christmases! Father and mother joined in them. They forgot their rheumatisms and shortness of breath, and for a while threw off the sorrows of a life-time, while they struggled with us as to who should first in the morning shout the "Merry Christmas!" Then, there were all the innocent allurements as to who brought the presents, and the wonderment as to how sleighs drawn by reindeer could come down the perpendicular, and afterward the disappointment as some older brother or sister, with all the pride of discovery, tried to persuade us that the chimney had not been the channel of generous descent. Oh, what times they were, the Christmases of our boyhood and girlhood days! We still feel in our pulses some of the exuberance which we then unwittingly stored up for future times, when the eye might lose some of its lustre, and the foot some of its spring, and the heart some of its rebound. How holly and rosemary and ivy and mistletoe looked, interwoven! The Puritans may not have liked the day, and John Calvin may have pronounced it superstitious and feared it would bring into religious observance the Saturnalia of the heathen, the decorations of ivy inappropriate, because ivy had been dedicated to Bacchus, and mistletoe inappropriate, because mistletoe had been associated with Drudical rites; but we testify that Christmas never did us any harm, and the only objection we ever expressed was that it was so long a time from Christmas to Christmas. Ecclesiastical controversy as to whether it ought to be celebrated on the sixth of January, or twenty-ninth of March, or twenth-ninth of September, or twenty-fifth of December, did not bother us then any more than it bothers us now. It always came at the right time, although a little late, and now we realize that Christmas comes opportunely, just after the shortest day of the year, December twenty-first, and at the time when days are lengthening and the sun is recommencing its upward course, telling us that spring and summer are coming. Oh, what a forest of Christmas trees—trees bearing twelve manner of fruits—now standing throughout the households of Christendom! Oh, what hosannas are ascending on this day, the Christmas of a Saviour's birth, this year blending with the Sabbath of a Saviour's resurrection! Do you not feel the thrill, the glow, the enlargement, the triumph of this day, and will not your charities go forth until you sympathize with the quaint old Christmas carol—so old I do not know who wrote it—its title, "Scatter Your Crumbs":

Midst the freezing sleet and snow,
The timid robin comes;
In pity, drive him not away,
But scatter out your crumbs.

And leave your door upon the latch
For whosoever comes;
The poorer they, more welcome give,
And scatter out your crumbs.

All have to spare, none are too poor,
When want with winter comes,
And life is never all your own;
Then scatter out the crumbs.

Can the angel which St. John saw, with measuring-rod measuring heaven, or hath any seraphic intelligence, faculty enough to calculate the magnificent effect which eighteen hundred and ninety-eight Christmas mornings, and eighteen hundred and ninety-eight Christmas noons, and eighteen hundred and ninety-eight Christmas nights have had on our poor old planet? Let us thank God that we live to see this Christmas, the bells of which ring out so clear, so inspiring, so jubilant—bells of family reunion, bells of church jubilee, bells of national victory! But had either Melchior, or Balthasar, or Caspar, the three wise men of the East, who had put down the sacks of aromatic frankincense or bags of chinking gold by the bare feet of the infant Lord, reported to Herod's palace the place where they found the Child, the swift horses of executioners would have carried death to that Babe cradled in Mary's arm, and the Bethlehem Star would have been a star of tragedy, and instead of a Song of Nativity, which the nations are now chanting, this day would be chiefly memorable for the shriek of bereft motherhood.

Still further remarking upon the narrow escape which you and I had, and all the world had in that Babe's escape, let me say that had that Herodic plot been successful, the one instance of absolutely perfect character would never have been unfolded. The world had enjoyed the lives of many splendid men before Christ came. It had admired its Plato among philosophers, its Mithridates among heroes, its Herodotus among historians, its Phidias among sculptors, its Homer among poets, its Æsop among fabulists, its Æschylus among dramatists, its Demosthenes among orators, its Æsculapius among physicians; yet among the contemporaries of those men there were two opinions, as now there are two opinions, concerning every remarkable man. There were plenty in those days who said of them, "He cannot speak," or "He cannot sing," or "He cannot philosophize," or "His military achievement was a mere accident," or "His chisel, his pen, his medical prescription never deserved the applause given." But concerning this full-grown Christ, whose life was launched that first Christmas, the clouds were resonant with music, and star pointing down whispered to star, "Look, there he is!" That Christ, after the detectives of Herod and Pilate and Sanhedrim had watched him by day and watched him by night, year after year, was reported innocent. It was found out that when he talked to the vagrant woman in the temple, it was to tell her to "Go and sin no more," and that if he spoke with the penitent thief, it was to promise him Paradise within twenty-four hours, and that as he moved about he dropped ease of pain upon the invalid's pillow, or light upon the eye that lacked optic nerve, or put bread into the hands of the hungry, or took from the Oriental hearse the dead young man and vitalized him. The very judge who for other reasons allowed him to be put to death, declared, "I find no fault in him!" Was there ever a life so thoroughly ransacked and hypercriticized that turned out to be so perfect a life? Now, can you imagine what would have been the calamity to earth and heaven; what a bereavement to all history; what swindling, not only of the human race, but of cherubim and seraphim and archangel, if because of infernal incursion upon the bed of that Bethlehem Babe, this life of divine and glorious manhood had never been lived?

Can you imagine what a scarification of the world's literature would be the removal of all Christ ever did and said? It would tear down the most important shelves of yonder Congressional Library, and of the Vatican Library, and of British Museum, and Berlin and Bonn and Vienna and Madrid and St. Petersburg Libraries. And St. Paul's life would have been an impossibility, and his Epistles would never have been written, and St. John, from the basaltic caverns of Patmos, would never have heard the Seven Trumpets or seen the heavenly walls with twelve layers of illumined crystalization. Oh, wise men of the East! I am so glad you did not report to the imperial scoundrel at Jerusalem where the Babe was, for the hounds would have soon torn to pieces the Lamb, and I am so glad that not only did you bring the frankincense and the myrrh to the room in that caravansary, but that you brought the gold which paid his traveling expenses and those of Joseph and Mary in that long and dangerous flight to Cairo, in Egypt, and paid their lodging and board there, and paid their way back again. Well enough to bring to the barn of the Saviour's nativity the flowers, for they aromatized the dreadful atmosphere of the stables, but the gold was just then the most important offering. So now the Lord accepts your prayers, for they are the perfume of heaven; but he asks also for the gold which will pay the expense of taking Christ to all nations.

Still further remarking upon the narrow escape which you and I and the world had in the diversion of the persecutors from the place of nativity, let me say that had that Herodic raid upon the swaddling clothes been successful, the world would never have known the value of a righteous peace. Much has been made of the fact that the world was at peace when Christ came. Yes! But what kind of a peace was it? It was a peace worse than war. It was the peace of a grave-yard. The Roman eagles had plucked out the world's eyesight and plunged their beaks through the heart of dead nations. It was a peace like that spoken of by a dying Indian chieftain when a Christian Home Missionary said to him, "You have been a warrior, and I suppose have been in many feuds; but you must be at peace with all your enemies in order to die aright." The dying chieftain replied, "That's easy enough. I am at peace with all my enemies, for I have killed all of them." That was the style of peace on earth when Christ came, but the spirit of arbitration, which is to garland the tomb of this century and coronet the brow of the coming century, is consequent upon the midnight anthem above Bethlehem, two bars to that music, the first of divine ascription, and the second of earthly pacification. "Glory to God and peace to men." If gigantic acerbities and world-wide tigerisms had, without any Gospel opposition, gone on until now and been augmented by eighteen hundred and ninety-eight years of ferocity, by this time what would this world have been turned into? You need not remind me of the awful wars since the opening of the year one, of our Christian era; for how much worse would it have been if the Christly revelation had not been let down from heaven on five-runged ladder of musical scale, and there had been no preaching of good-will all up and down Christendom for nineteen centuries! The Bethlehem manger has given the most potent suggestion of peace the world has ever received. The cavalry horses cannot eat out of that manger.

I take another step foward in showing the narrow escape you and I had and the world had in the secretion of Christ's birth-place from the Herodic detectives, and the clubs with which they would have dashed the Babe's life out, when I say that without the life that began that night in Bethlehem, the world would have had no illumined death-beds. Before the time of Christ, good people closed their earthly lives in peace, while depending upon the Christ to come, and there were antediluvian saints, and Assyrian saints, and Egyptian saints, and Grecian saints, and Jerusalem saints long before the clouds above Bethlehem became a balcony filled with the best singers of a world where they all sing; but I cannot read that there was anything more than a quieting guess that came to those before-Christ death-beds. Job said something bordering on the confident, but it was mixed up with a story of "skin-worms" that would destroy his body. Abraham and Jacob had a little light on the dying pillow, but compared with the after-Christ death-beds, it was like the dim tallow candle of old, beside the modern cluster of lights electric. The triumphant death-beds, as far as I know, were the after-Christ death-beds. What a procession of hosannas have marched through the dying room of the saints of the last nineteen centuries! What cavalcade of mounted hallelujahs has galloped through the dying visions of the last two thousand years save one hundred! Peaceful death-beds in the years B. C.! Triumphant death-beds, for the most part, reserved for the years A. D.! Behold the death-beds of the Wesleys, of the Doddridges, of the Legh Richmonds, of the Edward Paysons; of dying John Fletcher, who entered his pulpit to preach, though his doctors forbade him, and then descended to the communion table, saying, "I am going to throw myself under the wings of the cherubim before the mercy seat," thousands of people a few days after following him to the grave, singing:

With heavenly weapons he has fought
The battles of the Lord,
Finished his course and kept the faith,
And gained the great reward.

Of pastor Emilie Cook, the great French evangelist, who sat in my church in Brooklyn one Sunday morning, and in a few days shipwrecked and dying, after his wife said to him, "God will help you, my dear; he will give you peace," replying, "But I have it—Peace! I have it!" Of John Brown, of Haddington, who said, "I desire to depart and be with Christ, and though I have lived sixty years very comfortably in this world, I would turn my back upon you all to be with Christ. There is no one like Christ.—no one like Christ. I have been looking at him these many years, and never yet could find any fault in him but was of my own making, though he has seen ten thousand faults in me. Oh, what must he be in himself, when it is he that sweetens heaven, sweetens Scripture, sweetens ordinances, sweetens earth, sweetens trial." Of John Janeway, saying in his last moments, "I have done with prayer and all other ordinances. Before a few hours are over I shall be in eternity, singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. I shall presently stand on Mount Zion with an innumerable company of angels and with spirits of just men made perfect, and with Jesus the Mediator of the new Covenant. Hallelujah!" It is the wonderful story of Christ, now filling the earth, that makes triumphant Christian death-beds. The Bethlehem Star had to give way before the rising Sun which was to become the noonday Sun of Righteousness.

Are you ready now for a thought that overtowers all other thoughts in importance? In remarking, upon the narrow escape which you and I and the world made, let me say that had the Herodic raid on that room of the Bethlehem khan been a successful raid, or had some cold taken the child in that flight toward Cairo been fatal, heaven would have been to us an eternal impossibility. With our fallen nature unchanged, unregenerated, unreconstructed through Jesus Christ, the human race would be no more fit for heaven than a noisome weed is fit for a Queen's garland, no more than a shattered base viol is fit to sound in a Dusseldorf musical jubilee. If at one time Garibaldi seemed to hold in his right hand the freedom of Italy, and Washington seemed at one time to hold in his right hand American independence, and Martin Luther seemed to hold in his right hand the emancipation of the Church of God for all nations, so in grander and better sense the infant born in that Bethlehem stall held in one hand the ransom of earth, and in the other the rapture of heaven. He started that night for three places which he must reach, or we never could reach heaven, Gethsemane, and Calvary, and Olivet, the first for agonizing prayer, the second for excruciating suffering, the third for glorious ascension, as the law of gravitation relaxed for once to let him up out of his exile. Had his life been only one day, or one year of duration, instead of thirty-three years, had he died in Bethlehem, or in Cairo, or in the desert between, not a church would ever have been built, not a hospital ever opened, not a nation ever freed, not a civilization ever inaugurated, not a soul saved. Oh, what a crisis that was in the world's history! What a crisis in the Eternities! I think that the angels who composed the choir for the Christmas cantata above Bethlehem were not the only angels around that night. I think there were some who, instead of holding librettos of celestial music, stood all up and down the steeps of heaven with drawn swords, keen and two-edged. That cradle must be defended. That flight into Egypt must be hovered over by winged cohort. That humble stopping-place in Cairo must be watched by celestial bands descending amid the Egyptian pyramids and the sphinx which had already stood there for ages celebrating kings, none of whom ever had such glory as will be won by that Prince sleeping in his mother's arms under their long shadows. Hear it all ye people, in that babe's survival our heaven was involved. And shall we not add to our usual Christmas congratulation at a Saviour's birth, the joy at the babe's rescue?

Now let the Christmas-table be spread. Let it be an extension table made up of the tables of your households, and added to them the tables of celestial festivity, all together making a table long enough to reach across a hemisphere, yea long enough to reach from earth to heaven. Send out the invitations to all the guests whom we would like to have come and dine. Come all the ransomed of earth and all the crowned of heaven. As at ancient banquets the king who was to preside came in after all the guests had taken their places at the table, so perhaps it may be now. Let the old folks who sat at either end of your Christmas-table ten or twenty or forty years ago be seated, their aches and pains all gone: behold they sit down in the exhilaration of everlasting youth. Come brothers and sisters who used to retire with us early on Christmas-eve so that the mysteries of bestowed gifts might be kept secret, and who rose with us early on Christmas morn to see what was to be revealed. Come all the old neighbors of our boyhood and girlhood days who used to happen in toward the close of this day to wish us a merry time. Come all the ministers of Christ who have in pulpits for many a year been telling the story of the star that pointed to the world's first Christmas gift, and at the same time wakened Herod's apprehensions. Come and sit down ye heralds of "the glad tidings," whether you were sprinkled or plunged, whether your thanks to-day be offered in liturgy of ages or prayers spontaneous, whether you be gowned in canonicals or wearing plain coat of backwoods meeting-house. Come in! Room at this Christmas-table for all those who have bowed at the manger in whatever world you now live:

Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now.

Yea! come, and sit at this Christmas table, all heaven: Archangel at that end of the table, and all the angels under him adjoining. Come down! Come in! And take your places at this Christmas banquet. The table is spread, and the King who will preside is about to enter. He comes! Him of Bethlehem, him of Calvary, him of Olivet, him of the throne! Rise and greet him. Fill all your chalices with the wine pressed from the heavenly Eschol, and drink at this Christmas banquet to the memory of the Babe's rescue from Herodic pursuit, and the memory of those astronomers of the East who defeated the malice, and sarcasm, and irony, and infernal stratagem of the monster's manifesto: "Go and search diligently for the young Child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also." "Given at the palace. Herod the Great."

PREACHING CHRIST AT YALE

A Gospel Mission Established at the Famous University—Many Students Interested, and an Excellent Spiritual Work Well Begun

It is a cheering sign of the times and of the progress of Gospel truth, that side by side with several of our universities, and practically a part of them, there should be found well-organized Christian missions in full operation, and with the students as interested workers. The latest development of this character is the Yale City Mission at New Haven, Conn., one of the most important undertakings thus far voluntarily attempted by the students of the famous university for the purpose of religious organization. Its history is entertainingly sketched in a recent issue of the student's paper, The Alumni Weekly.

For ten years past, this Mission has exerted a potent spiritual influence upon the students, and has been the means of softening much of the rough and disagreeable passages of college life. It had its beginning in April, 1888, when A. Alonzo Stagg (once famous as a pitcher at Yale, and now a professor in the University of Chicago), was one of the students. He was at that time Secretary of the College Young Men's Christian Association, and he succeeded in securing the co-operation of a number of the students prominent in the literary and social life of the college, including Messrs. Gill, Pinchot, Corbin, Parsons and Fisher. Together they rented a room in the building known as Washington Hall, on Grand Avenue. A part of that thoroughfare had long been known as "the Bowery of New Haven," a tribute to the peculiar character of its population, whom it was specially desired to reach by the projected mission work.

THE NEW GOSPEL MISSION AT YALE COLLEGE

As might have been expected, the effort met with both opposition and derision at the outset. There were many who could neither understand nor appreciate the motive which induced the little body of students to meet twice a week in such a place, and to stand at the open door and publicly invite even the poorest and meanest passer-by to come in. It surprised many to hear them declare the Gospel of Jesus Christ, before all men, in the little meeting-hall, as frankly and fearlessly as they did. But the example was not without its effect; soon even the deriders were won over, and those who had been the strongest opponents of the gatherings were silent before the new-born zeal of the young seekers for souls. The hall was crowded by the very class it was most desired to reach.

The further progress of the work, so well begun, is thus sketched by its historian: "During five years on Grand avenue, the meetings increased greatly in size, and the students soon started a boys' club, and not long afterwards this branch of the work was moved to Orange street, and later to Welcome Hall, on Oak street. In all branches of the work, the co-operation of several of the city churches had been secured. The room in Washington Hall was, however, unsatisfactory as a general meeting-place for the mission. On November 19th, 1893, the first service was held in new quarters at 215 East street. A two-story wooden building, with rooms for night lodgers, had been rented in a factory district. The proximity of this new location to the docks and railroad tracks introduced a greater number of transients than before, and necessarily a greater proportion of professional beggars. A student superintendent took charge of the building, running the lodging-house, and sleeping there in special quarters provided for him. Meetings were now held on three days of the week, Sundays, Tuesdays and Fridays. Some fifty different students engaged in this work during the first year at East street. A Bible class was organized, meeting Sunday morning under the charge of a Senior. The reading room, a new feature, was open on Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday afternoons. Meetings for boys only were held on Friday evenings. On the average, twelve lodgers a day were housed and fed." From October, 1897, to June, 1898, 2,200 lodgings were given to homeless applicants, and 150 articles of clothing distributed. Lectures and entertainments were also arranged, especially for Saturday evenings, the object being to keep the workingmen from squandering their week's wages in the saloons.

Last spring the conductors of the mission decided that the time had arrived when the steadily-growing work needed a building of its own. A sum of $5,000 was quickly subscribed, largely by undergraduates, and the new building (shown in our photograph), was begun. It is now finished and practically ready for occupancy. It is situated on Franklin street, south of Grand avenue, and is a two-story brick structure, with well-ventilated auditorium on the first floor to seat 150, lighted with twelve large windows. In the basement is a room for a boys' club, and there are four shower baths. On the second floor are rooms for a library of specially selected works, a reading room lighted by a glass roof, and two smaller rooms for educational classes, besides the superintendent's quarters. The lodging system has been modified by introducing safeguards against imposition, and educational features have been emphasized and accommodated to the work. The whole structure is heated by furnace and lighted by gas. The total cost of the building is about $8,000. Religious meetings are held regularly on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings, and entertainments on Saturdays. The reading room is open to visitors every night and noon.

One excellent result of the mission's work has been the effect on the saloons. There is much less drunkenness in New Haven than before the mission was opened, and it is stated that at one of the Sunday night meetings, not long since, no less than sixteen saloon keepers were present and took part in the exercises.

One of the chief advantages of the Yale Mission is the opportunity it affords the students for coming into contact with the wage-workers. This contact is beneficial to both sides, for it gives the workingman an insight into student character and motives such as he could never have received by other means, and it enables the student to acquire a more comprehensive view of some of life's problems to which otherwise he must have remained a stranger. Above all, it brings the two distinct classes—the educated thinker and the toiler—together in bonds of sympathy and spiritual brotherhood.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

CHRIST'S FIRST DISCIPLES

S. S. Lesson for January 8. John 1: 35-46

Golden Text, John 1: 36

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

JOHN the Baptist was "a man sent from God;" "John bore witness of him" who is the Christ. "And this is the record of John. I am not the Christ." A true forerunner of him who said of himself, "I can of mine own self do nothing" (John 5: 30); "the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works!" John "came for a witness," never asserting himself, but always pointing to Christ. When multitudes came to him in the desert, he bore witness: "One mightier than I cometh; the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Luke 3: 16), or (John 1: 15). "He that cometh after me is preferred before me, for he was before me." It was his joy and privilege to turn off the attention of men from himself to Christ; such a man is a true witness.

It was no trial to the faithful forerunner of our Lord to retire into the shade to make room for his Master. When his disciples came to him later on, complaining that Jesus baptized, and all people came to him, John explained that things were quite in order. "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him." I am but "the friend of the Bridegroom;" I stand and hear him, I rejoice greatly because of his voice. He must increase and I must decrease (John 3: 27-30). It cost John the Baptist nothing to take a second and altogether subordinate place. John was loyal to his place of witness. In following such a man the first disciples of Jesus got their training.

"Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," was his constant message, and more, he is coming, the promised Messiah. But there was a day, the central day of the ministry of Christ's forerunner, the day for which God had brought about his miraculous birth, and filled him with the power of the Holy Ghost. His life in the desert and his ministry all went to prepare this day. A special communication from God had come into his life of witness, saying, "Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining upon him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." And now this supreme day had arrived: John saw the sign, and at once bore witness before the multitudes, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." Henceforth the Master would continue the ministry of the servant, and when, the next day, looking upon Jesus as he walked, John said, "Behold the Lamb of God!" two of his disciples who heard him left the servant for the Master, and followed Jesus.

These were the Lord's first followers. One of them was Andrew, the name of the other is not recorded: was it perhaps the apostle John? The Lord was conscious of their following him. Does he hear our footsteps, so that he also turns and asks us as he asked them, "What seek ye?" They said, "Rabbi (i. e., Teacher), where dwellest thou?" "Come and see," was the answer, "and they abode with him that day." There are no such days as those days when we abide with Jesus, undistracted by any person or anything. Andrew only left him to call his brother, Simon, and tell him the wondrous tidings, "We have found the Messias," and yet Peter did not get this same truth by a revelation from heaven until much later on. What we get second-hand does not change our lives. Now it was flesh and blood that revealed it to him, but later on it was "the Father who is in heaven" (Matt. 16: 17), and then only could the Lord Jesus teach him and the other disciples the unwelcome lesson of the Cross, and his coming sufferings (Matt. 16: 21).

Andrew brought his brother to Jesus, and at once the Lord had personal work for him. "Thou are Simon (a hearing one); thou shalt be called Cephas, or Peter" (a stone). As though to say, I am going to make thee what thou art not yet. I am the Rock. I am going to make thee a part of me, of my very life and character, my flesh and my bones. The naturally impulsive Peter would not long keep to himself the great discovery that the Messiah was already in the world, and in the very neighborhood where the preaching of John the Baptist had attracted such crowds of people. It may be Peter went back to his own city, Bethsaida in Galilee, where Jesus would go forth the next day, and prepared for the coming thither of the Lord. In any case, Jesus findeth Philip, who was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter, and there can be no doubt that these newly-made disciples were concerned in this meeting, "Philip findeth Nathanael," and thus the blessed tidings were carried from one to another, and every new convert brought another.

If Jesus is anything to us, we are guilty of the grossest selfishness if we are not set on winning some other soul or souls to him. It augurs badly of our appreciation of him if he is not precious enough to us to desire that others may know him, too. And when we look back on the emptiness and aimlessness of our lives before Jesus came into them, and brought a new impetus, a new purpose, a new power into our lives, we are heartless indeed if we can willingly allow the thousands around us on every hand to go on in the same empty, aimless life of earth, with an awful eternity of untold misery to follow, without so much as telling them of a life which is life indeed, and of a salvation which can deliver them out of the kingdom of darkness and sin and translate them into the kingdom of the Son of God's love (Col. 1: 13). No soul is living the true life of Christ, who makes no effort to lead others to him.

Every one who was really brought to Jesus became a witness, as John the Baptist became a witness. They differed greatly, but the same constraint was upon them all to bring others to Jesus. Andrew said to Simon, "We have found the Messias," but Philip addressed the scholarly Nathanael in quite another manner, "We have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write—Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph."

LESSON POINTS

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers

VERY simple and natural was the beginning of this mighty movement, which at this day has spread to nearly every country on earth, and is the most potent force known to men. Two young men are pointed by their teacher to Christ, as one who could do more for them than he could do, and they follow Christ to his home and spend the day with him. One of them is so impressed by the interview, that he brings his brother to see Jesus. A little later, in another town, another man is called to follow Christ and he brings his friend with him. Thus the great kingdom began, and so it has been gathering its adherents ever since. Some have been called directly, some led by relatives or friends, and so in every generation the ranks have been filled. Not by legislation, not by compulsion, not in mass, but one by one, in simple familiar ways, the multitude has been drawn to Christ, the one centre. It has been, as he said, like the growth of a tree from a small seed, or like leaven among meal, that the church has spread. It was significant that the first followers to be enrolled should have been directed by John the Baptist. He knew that his own ministry was imperfect. As we see by his replies to the questions of the people (Luke 3: 10–14), he had no Gospel to preach. He could merely declare the same message as the prophets who had gone before him—repentance and reformation of life. But the world wanted more than this; it needed redemption, and, above all things, power. Long enough had men been told what was right, now they were to have the help without which they could not do right. And this help must come by sacrifice. The last prophet of the old dispensation appropriately points his disciples to the Lamb of God, the supreme sacrifice. That was his mission, and with that duty performed his mission was fulfilled.

The Lamb of God. To us the lamb symbolizes gentleness, timidity, innocence; but these would not be the ideas the lamb would suggest to the Jew of John the Baptist's time. To him the lamb would suggest the idea of sacrifice. It was the victim at the great national celebration of the Passover; it was the offering of the leper who was cleansed; and it was chief among sin-offerings. When, therefore, John pointed to Christ, and called him the Lamb of God, Andrew and John would understand that, in some way, he was to be a representative sacrifice for sin. William Dean Howells tells the story of a millionaire, who conceived a bitter enmity to a socialist in New York. He hated him and caused him to lose his employment. But the only son of the millionaire was a loving, Christ-like young man, who spent all his time in doing good. There was a strike in the city, and the police were ordered to fire on men who were rioting. The millionaire's son went into one of the conflicts to persuade the rioters to be peaceable and not to bring destruction upon themselves. He especially tried to save the socialist whom his father hated from being hurt, and in doing so, was himself killed. The father was broken-hearted, and looking around for some way of expressing his grief, lavished his kindness on the socialist, simply because his dear dead son had loved him, and had died protecting him. The illustration is defective, in that God did not hate, but loved the world; but it shows how reconciliation may come through the death of the innocent.

They followed Jesus. John did not tell them to do so; he simply told them what Jesus was; and to men who wanted such help as was implied by the description, that was enough. It was as if two men, suffering from cancer, heard their doctor say, "There is the man who can cure cancer." There are a number of men in India who voluntarily undergo frightful tortures that they may put away sin and have a reputation for holiness. One of these who had sat in a constrained position for years, until his arms had lost their use, was pointed out to a missionary. He went and sat beside the man and told him the story of the Cross. At first the deluded man would not listen, but when the missionary used the words, "who taketh away the sin of the world," he cried out, "That is what I want; that is what I have been seeking all these years. Tell me more about him."

Come and see. The words used by Christ to Andrew and John were used by Philip to Nathanael. That is the only sure way of being convinced. Christianity does not ask any man to come with his eyes shut. At a well-known hall in London, an infidel club held its regular weekly meeting. Mr. Bradlaugh, a noted lecturer, delivered a scathing attack on Christianity and dared any man to answer him. The chairman said, "No one here is likely to try, Mr. Bradlaugh, we are all of your way of thinking." But a gas-fitter rose and asked permission to speak. He said, "I have been a member of this club for five years. You all know me. Some of you have been in my miserable home. Six months ago I lost my work, and I was ill, and, to make things worse, my wife was ill, too. Not one of you came near me, though my illness was known here. But some one came, and that man and his wife nursed us and provided for us, otherwise neither my wife nor I would have been alive to-day. That man was a city missionary, whom I had cursed and driven from my home with threats. When I was well enough to think, I asked myself why he had been so kind to me, and I could not tell. So I asked him, and he told me he had done it for love of Christ. Now, that is my answer to Mr. Bradlaugh. I say that a religion which will bring a man to the bedside of one who has hated and cursed him, and returns good for evil, love for hate, is a good thing for this troubled life, and I take it for myself. I have seen it in operation, and I know it is good. (Laying his hand on his heart) I have got it here, and I feel it is good. You could never convince me it was anything else."

JERUSALEM'S HELPLESS POOR

Charities of the Holy City that are Supported by Contributions from Many Lands—The Lepers, the Blind, the Gypsies, and Destitute Classes

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

BISSE

A LIVING AMULANCE

WE have a beautiful summary of Christian work in Palestine eighteen hundred years ago in the words of our Lord to the messengers of John, which we find in Matt. 11: 5. "The blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up and the poor have the Gospel preached unto them." The work was then carried on under the immediate direction of the Master himself. Now it is committed to other hands, and in his spirit his followers are trying to heal the sick, to give sight to the blind, to alleviate the misery of the leper, to clothe the naked, to educate the children, to elevate women, to carry the blessings of the Gospel to the many thousands of homes and hearts of that dear old land.

The amount of money that comes into Jerusalem every year chiefly for charitable purposes, no one can determine: but judging by what is expended it must be very great. These funds come from many lands. Little Greece, the Islands of the Mediterranean, and the great Empire of Russia pour in their treasures to the coffers of the Greek Church. The Latin Church is supplied from Catholic countries: France and Italy contributing by far the largest share. The Armenian, Coptic, Abyssinian, and Syrian establishments are poor compared with the Latin and Greek; still, a considerable sum is required every year to maintain them, and to carry on the specific work of each. The Jews in all parts of the world, but chiefly in Europe and America, contribute every year large sums for the support of their brethren and institutions in the Holy City. The funds for the support of Protestant institutions come chiefly from England, Germany, and America. The Protestants are not a large body, but they are powerful for good. They have five hospitals under their care and four of these are the largest in the city; and their schools, missions, and medical work take a leading place in these phases of benevolent effort. In no other city of the world, of the same size as Jerusalem, does the cause of charity receive support from so many sources and in such generous amounts as it does there. One would suppose that the poor might be fed and clothed, and the sick cared for in the most comfortable manner, and still there be funds left for other needs. This is not so, and cannot be, so long as two-thirds of Jerusalem's fifty thousand souls receive charitable aid in one form or another.

One whose heart is touched by the suffering of others, will naturally turn first to mothers with their young children. A man, however poor, can struggle against poverty; but if a mother is destitute of everything, her new-born babe must die. A filthy hovel, scant clothing and food, physical weakness—this describes the condition of hundreds of women in Palestine. Such cases appeal to one's sympathies and bring moisture to the eyes. In God's providence there is sometimes in a very hard lot a blunting of the sensibilities so that the misery is not so keenly felt. To save the lives of such young children and to aid their mothers in their distress, the Children's Hospital ("Marienstift") in Jerusalem was founded. It is not a very large institution, but it is deserving of the highest praise. Poor women receive here gratuitous help, clean beds, wholesome food, and skilful medical treatment, while infants are cared for in a cleanly, Christian way.

It is impossible to think of the women of Palestine without contrasting them with the women of America. In Palestine their rank is that of menials. They are the slaves of their husbands. At home they are shut up behind walls, and on the street their faces are closely screened by veils. They are not educated. They have no position of honor, they are not treated with respect; men are ashamed to speak to them in the presence of men; their opinion is never sought on any subject; no voice is ever raised in their behalf. Hard is the lot, sad is the life, dark is the fate of the "daughters of Jerusalem" to-day. There is no influence in the country that can change this condition and elevate woman morally, socially, or in any other way.

The peculiarities of society in the East are such that whatever is done for this helpless class must be done by women. In the hand of God, woman becomes the saviour of woman. As medical missionaries they are meeting with wonderful success. It is a common sight to see two ladies whom we know to be foreigners, plainly dressed, mounted on donkeys, attended by a single servant on foot, making their way over the stony paths to some insignificant native village. The people are poor and are, moreover, unspeakably filthy. The good ladies ignore all this and try to make the women and children who gather about them feel that they are their friends. They treat their diseases, and tell them in a pleasant way some story from the Bible. They are sure everywhere of having interested listeners. They go again and again, and in turn to all the villages they can easily reach. This seed-sowing seems slow and laborious: but we know that some hearts are reached, and after a generation has passed away the world may discover that the harvest is great.

The class of very poor and degraded people called "Nawwars," who are really the gypsies of Palestine, and who are found living in dingy black tents near all the large towns, are certainly very far removed from civilization. They are not savages, but their habits, tastes and instincts seem to be those of wild men. Their morals are bad, and family relations are inextricably mixed. They have no aspirations: the government does not molest them, no one pays them any attention, and they seem to be satisfied with their ignorance, filth and misery. No systematic effort has ever been made to reach these people, nor could there be in the existing state of society. Under a different government and in changed conditions of life in Palestine, hopes of their elevation might be entertained. At present they live and die in mental and moral darkness. Now and then benevolent foreigners have attempted to do something for individual children of this class, but success has been only partial. The children, when young, seem bright, and sometimes happy, in spite of hunger and nakedness; but very soon the evidences of sin and depravity show that their lives are blighted. The girl Bisse, shown in our illustration, was till the age of ten years a half-naked street beggar. She was an interesting child, and a certain family took her and tried to reclaim her from her degradation. She learned something, in spite of her strong instincts for her wild life, from which she was never thoroughly weaned. Civilized life did not agree with her health, and her thin frail form was little more than a shadow. When this picture was taken, Bisse was about fourteen years old. Even under the most favorable conditions, it would require years of continued and persistent effort to bring this class to which this poor girl belongs up to the level of cleanly lives and decent habits, to an appreciation of the common blessings of Christianity.

In connection with our illustration of the Leper Hospital, much could be said of the mission work among the lepers of Jerusalem. They are not only helpless, they are miserable. Most horrible sores leave them to perish in their misery. Christianity tries to alleviate the suffering. This work is in the hands of the Moravians, who are noted for their zeal and their self-denying efforts to carry the blessings of the Gospel to out-of-the-way corners of the earth, and to the most neglected and degraded people in it. It is a test of one's faith in God and of the genuineness of one's desire to help the destitute and the wretched, to labor among the class of which we are now speaking. There is no public sentiment to support them, for no native cares about the fate of a leper. The government likewise is indifferent, and simply refrains from closing the mission. The lepers of Jerusalem and vicinity are not numerous, and an efficient government could in time eradicate the evil, since the form of leprosy now known there is entirely a hereditary disease. There is no compulsion about entering this hospital, and every patient does so of his own choice. The hospital is free, everything is scrupulously clean, and the patients have the best medical attendance and care. Their usual place is the gutter or a dunghill, and the change to this quiet, comfortable home is very great. They have religious instruction, and I know that some of them listen with delight to what is told them of the life that is free from deformity, pain and sin. This hospital, which I like to call the "Leper's Home," is beautifully situated on the north side of the Plain of Rephaim, whose broad acres sweep southward towards Bethlehem, the town where our Lord was born. It is something more than a mile from the city, and is far removed from other buildings: the air is fresh, and the outlook on every side is delightful. Here some of the people remain till death separates the imprisoned spirit from the body, its loathsome prison-house.

AN ORPHAN OF JERUSALEM

OPHTHALMIC HOSPITAL ON THE BETHLEHEM ROAD

THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL

THE NEW LEPER HOSPITAL—ERECTED 1887

The affliction of blindness, sad enough in any country, is in Palestine an awful calamity. No homes are provided for such people, they are a burden to their friends: many of them sit and beg and, perhaps, slowly starve to death. In its special field, the Ophthalmic Hospital, under the care of the English Order of the Knights of St. John, is doing a very important work. Patients in great numbers crowd themselves upon the attention of the physicians in charge, who treat annually from four to six thousand individual cases. The number of indoor patients is limited, for the hospital has only about twenty beds. No distinction is made on account of religion, race, color, or class, and sometimes a high official and a beggar are seen side by side waiting to be served.

To complete my subject, I should have to speak of the school for orphan girls under the care of the Kaiserswerth Deaconesses, and that for orphan boys, under the direction of the venerable Schneller, and of a number of other institutions and phases of good work which are established or carried on in this city of many charities. In a single article the ground cannot all be covered. A very large part of this work I have described as discovered by Christian. The Gospel prompts these efforts, and to relieve and make sanitary for years. SELAH MERRILL.

Does Worry Pay?

ALL thinking people ask themselves this question, "Does worry pay?" All answer in the negative. Yet the spirit of unrest is driven out of possession only for a little while. In a short time old subjects return to the mind, and are considered over and over again. Doubts and fears pass in double column. This is particularly the case with men who have no hope at all beyond the grave; whose ambitions are centred upon this present life; who stake their all on professional or business success; who seek personal comfort and ease, never to find it but for a brief season.

Let me ask any such if they have not an unappeased and unhappy longing for some stronger power which can relieve them of part of the burden of life. Have you wealth? Are you in possession of more money than you had when you started in the race of life? Are you any happier? How often have the risks and losses attending the ownership and control of property frightened you as you considered the chances of prospective loss? Will not a moment's reasoning convince you they were greatly aggravated and enlarged, because you had no hope of any happiness disconnected with the possession of property? Men whose faith holds them like an anchor to the promises and prophecies of an Almighty ruler occasionally doubt, and depression, like the waves of the sea, beat over them, as the anchor is dragged for a time, but they take a fresh hold upon the unseen Hand extended to them from the darkness, and come again into the light. How much harder for those to recover from disaster who see no hand held out to them!

Let us ask you. Have you ever found worry or cultivated anxiety a paying investment? Has it ever helped you to solve a problem or extricate yourself from a difficulty? Has it not robbed you of sleep, of peace, of happiness? Has worry not been an enemy to your health, the foe of domestic quiet and happiness? Has it not dwarfed your character? What return has it brought? You may truthfully say, as you look back over life, "All the time I have spent in worry has been thrown away, misspent, wrongfully used. My worst fears have never been realized." Why, then, continue this use of time and mental powers? Providence only asks you to do your best. Your fellow men can certainly expect no more.

If you are full of doubts, determine to set them aside and try the experiment of saying with David, "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want," or with Christ, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Be a philosopher. Live for the best you can get out of to-day. You are sure of food and clothing to-day. You have some friends. The supplies and friendships of life will surely not all be consumed before sundown. Live for to-day. Sing, whistle, laugh. Only do not let wealth or position give you additional worry and rob you of the light heart you possessed when you had nothing.

Unread Books

BOOKS are sometimes too elegantly bound to be read. The gilt, the tinge, the ivory, the clasps, seem to say, "Hands off!" The thing that most surprised me in Thomas Carlyle's library was the fewness of the books. They had all seen service. None of them had paraded in holiday dress. They were worn and battered. He had flung them at the ages.

More beautiful than any other adornments are the costly books of a princely library; but let not the man of small library stand looking into the garnished alcoves wishing for these unused volumes. The workman who dines on roast beef and new Irish potatoes will be healthier and stronger than he who begins with "mock-turtle," and goes up through the long lane of a luxuriant table till he comes to almond-nuts. I put the man of one hundred books, mastered, against the man of one thousand books of which he has only a smattering.

On preaching tours, I have sometimes been turned into costly private libraries to spend the day; and I reveled in the indexes, and scrutinized the lids, and set them back in as straight a row as when I found them, yet learned little. But on my way home in the cars I took out of my satchel a book that had cost me only one dollar and a half, and afterward found that it had changed the course of my life and helped decide my eternal destiny.

Forgive and Forget

WE often see, especially in political circles, a disposition to overhaul one's long-ago mistakes. This is an infinite wrong. Many whose early life was a debauch and abomination have afterward, by the grace of God, gone to the front in usefulness. Many years of honesty and righteousness ought, in any fair-minded community, to give a man release from all review of early iniquities. But no, says human devilishness. Jean Valjean, of Victor Hugo's immortal romance, was by many supposed to be an impossibility. Jean Valjean, having broken the window-glass of a bakery in order to get bread for seven starving children, afterward rises to all heights of respectability and honor, and is one of the most admirable characters that I have read of, and for many years demonstrates a very nobility of behavior. But after nearly a lifetime that early wrong gets on his track and chases him to ruin. Behold the Jean Valjean of romance translated into real life again and again in this last quarter of a century, supposed to be a Christian, and see in what heights and depths and infinities of spite and hate and bitterness and malice and revenge and diabolism the human heart can range and revel.

* * *

When a man becomes a Christian he is not put on the limits, but turned out into a larger sphere. What does the Bible mean when it says "all are yours?" Why it means all—all innocent hilarities, all innocent amusements. The grace of God comes in with powerful floods of mercy and new impetus to action, and now instead of fifty faculties, there are a thousand all in play and in full motion. Vastly more of a man since he became a Christian than before he became a Christian.

EVIL PROPHECIES

EVER and anon we have weather prophets who tell us we shall have a very hot summer, or a very late spring, or a very severe winter. I have cut out these prophecies and kept them, and generally found that they were proved untrue. Because some men have made good guesses we elect them apostles of guessdom. It is always safe to prophecy a storm in September, or a drought in summer, or a wet spell in April. The old almanacs issued on the first day of January announcing that it would be clear, or cloudy, or wet on certain days in the following August or December were just as trustworthy as the prophecy coming from Canada, or the United States, telling us of cyclones, or droughts, or deluges, or earthquakes six weeks ahead. Our weather bureau at Washington is providentially allowed to foretell atmospheric changes for two or three days, so that the storm signals may be hoisted, but there are no inspired Isaiahs of the weather to foretell the coming sunshine of many weeks, or inspired Jeremiahs of the weather to foretell the stormy lamentations of a whole season.

God will keep a realm of knowledge that no human guessing can ever invade. For the altar of these evil prophets we have no sacrifices. Thirteen are better at a table than twelve, because there is one more to be happy; and the only damage that comes from the upsetting of a salt-cellar is the trouble of sweeping up the salt; and after you have started on a journey it is better to go back and get what you have forgotten; and, excepting Sunday, Friday is the most fortunate day of the week. My friend was in a railroad accident, and amidst the excitement he heard a lady chiding her husband in this wise: "I told you if we started on Friday something would happen." "Why," said my friend, "many fortunate things have happened on Friday, madam. America was discovered on Friday." "Well," she replied, "it is a great pity it ever was discovered." The learned Dr. Johnson said he did not believe in ghosts; he had seen too many of them. And among all classes, learned and unlearned, there are superstitions lingering.

We hear much talk about luck. Now there is no such thing as bad luck and no such thing as good luck, but a Divine Providence that controls all. We could not tell how many times we have met with what people call good luck. If we were about to start on a journey and wanted fair weather, though we heard it storming in the night, we have almost always found the sun shining brightly in the morning. If we had a bad cold and feared we could not preach next Sabbath, by the time the day came we were hale and hearty. If some one stole our umbrella, we generally found that an unknown person had left his in our hallway. We left our cane in the cars, but a friend presented us with another. Our carriage broke down, but we got the benefit of the exercise in walking. We missed the train, but by that means escaped a terrible accident. A steamboat on the Hudson River took fire, and we had chosen that same night to go on the other one that came through undamaged. We never knew an unkind thing said about us but it some way turned out to our advantage. Those which at the time we thought our worst distresses have really been our best blessings. While living in Philadelphia, we had an unexpected call one morning for a charitable donation of twenty dollars, and that afternoon, from the gutter of Chestnut Street, I picked up a pocketbook containing just twenty dollars, and tried in vain by advertising to find out its owner. Almost everything that we expected to turn out wrong has turned out right. We were fortunate in selecting our grocers, our tailors, our doctors, our friends. We had what people call good luck in the morning, good luck at noon and good luck in the evening.

We have trod on many sharp thorns, and drunk many a bitter cup, and looked into very dark skies, but still we can say "goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life." Do you call that luck? I call it Providence. With these men who prophecy evil things I have no sympathy. If you must take up the prophetic role, prophecy something good. Things are bad enough, but they will be corrected. I always try to end my sermons on great public evils with a hallelujah over the final victory. The most of the evil prophecies come to failure.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

BRIEF NOTES

The Presbyterian Church, at Bound Brook, N. J., the birthplace of the editor of this journal, recently celebrated its 210th anniversary.

St. John's Guild, in New York, has received a gift of $32,000 to establish a second floating hospital for poor children. The donor is Mrs. Henry C. Juilliard.

The taxes paid last year on beer in Great Britain and Ireland amounted to the equivalent of sixty million dollars. The production was thirty-five million barrels.

Rev. W. D. Reynolds reports that he expects before the end of the year that the entire New Testament in Korean will be issued to the people of the Hermit Nation.

Natives of the West Indies who suffered by the recent hurricane are to receive help from the British Government. Half a million dollars have been appropriated for their use.

Christian institutions in Nazareth, our Lord's boyhood home, include, besides churches, three hospitals and twelve schools, all founded and supported by the contributions of Christian people.

Jacob Rüs, in a recent address on tenement-house reform, said he believed that the recent improvements in the lower districts of New York had resulted in saving the lives of at least twelve thousand children.

The largest circulation a tract has ever attained is that of Come to Jesus, by Dr. Newman Hall. It has been translated into forty languages, and, though never advertised, over four million copies have been sold.

Rev. T. Spurgeon Page, a nephew of the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, has offered himself for foreign mission work. He has been accepted for service in connection with the Nyassa Industrial Mission, British Central Africa.

The First Baptist Church of Philadelphia has just celebrated its two hundredth anniversary. Among the interesting relics exhibited was the original deed, dated 1694, conveying the land on which the first church was built.

Austrian Protestants are aggrieved because the imperial authorities, at the instance of the Roman Catholic bishops, have withdrawn from the British and Foreign Bible Society the privilege of selling Bibles within the empire.

The American Bible Society has heard from its agent in Chili that he has succeeded in getting Bibles into the hands of people in sections of the country where it had not previously penetrated. He is now trying to follow them with mission work.

The Dowager Empress of China, the most powerful person in the Empire, began life as a poor girl. Her father, mother and brother were so near starvation that she offered to be sold as a slave that they might have food. She was sold to the wife of a government officer.

Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago, of which Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage is pastor, received 127 new members at its latest communion service. These bring the total membership above six hundred. Since Mr. Talmage became pastor 450 new members have been received.

A special effort to evangelize Hungarians resident in this country is being made by the Reformed German Church. Eight missions have already been established. Christian people knowing of Hungarian families should communicate with the Reformed German Church, and an effort will be made to reach them.

Preparations are being made for the Ninth International Sunday School Convention, which will be held at Atlanta, Ga., in April next. Twenty-one years ago the second of these conventions was held in that city. Delegates have already been appointed by many State Associations. Over one hundred countries, States, and Provinces will be represented.

The Endeavorers of Ridgefield Park, N. J., have proved their personal devotion by raising a sum of money to put new pews in their church. In all they raised $130, of which $50 was earned by the members. At a social each member told how the money had been earned. Some had cleaned bicycles, some had polished silver plate, one had laid oilcloth on a floor, and others had performed other services by which they had earned money to contribute.

The Evil of Polygamy and its Danger to American Civilization was the subject of an address delivered in the Presbyterian Building, New York, on Dec. 20, by Mr. Eugene Young, a grandson of Brigham Young. The testimony of a man who has been so near to the evil, and is himself closely related to its modern apostle, must surely convince any doubters of the necessity of dealing firmly with this crime, which is evidently again becoming prevalent.

Referring to the play of The Christian, based on Hall Caine's novel of that title, Dr. MacArthur declared that in no way could it be of service to the church. Entering on the more general subject of theatre-going he said that he had never known an habitual theatre-goer who was an efficient church worker. He had known men who said they could not afford to rent a pew in a church pay as much money for theatre tickets in one night as would pay the rent of a pew for half a year.

The Chicago Bible Institute had a wonderful record last year. Of the students who completed their studies at the Institute, thirty-four are pastors, pastors' assistants or church missionaries; thirteen are in rescue and city mission work; thirty-one are evangelistic preachers and singers; six are Sunday School missionaries; three are Young Men's Christian Association secretaries; four are Young Women's Christian Association secretaries; sixteen are in educational work; eighteen are foreign missionaries.

Commissioner Booth-Tucker, of the Salvation Army, desires it to be made known as widely as possible that the Salvation Army stands ready to receive any fallen woman, who wishes to reform. Two homes are open in New York, and others in other cities, to which they may go. Christian people who may come in contact with such women will be glad to learn that sympathy and help are assured to the repentant, and may confidently direct them there. In Brooklyn, N. Y., they may be sent to the Bethesda Home, 79 Fort Greene Place, where they will be welcomed and helped to lead a new life. The Bethesda Home is supported by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

MARCHAND'S RETREAT

DISCRETION, which is proverbially the better part of valor, has not wholly deserted the French Government. In directing Major Marchand to retire from Fashoda, it has taken the only measure which could avert a disastrous war. The expedition, which took up its position at that junction of the two sources of the Nile and hoisted the French flag, is now on its way out of the Soudan, in obedience to the demand of the English Government. The French press does not conceal its sense of humiliation, but it admits the wisdom of retreat. Even the most ardent patriots acknowledge that France was in no condition for conflict, and therefore, when it became clear that there was no other alternative but to withdraw or to fight, the former course is seen to have been necessary. It is astonishing that this issue of the trouble was not foreseen. Frenchmen could not have supposed that England would consent to the presence of the French flag in the Soudan, after so large an expenditure of labor, money and life in wresting the region from the Khalifa. Captain Baratier is said to have shed tears when he communicated to Marchand the order of the French Government to retreat, and "Marchand clinched his hands until the finger-nails dug into the flesh and blood flowed." It is easy to understand the disappointment he felt, but he and the statesmen who sent him on his expedition might have spared themselves the humiliation, if they had heeded the warning of the wise king to just such people:

Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof when thy neighbor hath put thee to shame (Prov. 25:8).

MAJOR MARCHAND, CAPTAIN BARATIER AND MEMBERS OF THE FASHODA EXPEDITION

Imprisoned for His Brother's Sake

The vindication of a prisoner, who has served ten years in Sing Sing Prison, N. Y., was made public last week. His name is Michael O'Donnell. In 1888, a burglary was committed, in which the man who was robbed was compelled at the point of a pistol to give up all the money in his house. Two men were arrested, tried for the crime, convicted and sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment. One of them was Michael O'Donnell. He produced witnesses at the trial who swore that he was in bed at home when the burglary was committed; but, as the man who was robbed positively identified him, they were not believed. His fellow prisoner, whose guilt was undoubted, also swore that Michael was not concerned in the robbery. The guilty man died in prison two years ago, and to a friend, while near death, he stated that it was Michael's brother, James, who resembled him, who was his partner in the crime. Then it was proposed to make an effort for Michael's release, but the prisoner would not allow it. He had known of his brother's guilt all along, but had kept silence, because his brother was ill with consumption and would never be able to bear prison hardships. But a few days ago the brother learned that his hours were numbered. He sent for a priest and a notary, and made a full confession of his guilt, thus vindicating the brave man who, for ten years, has suffered in his stead. We admire a man who would so love his brother, as to stay ten years in prison, in order that he might have life and liberty; yet we often listen unmoved to the story of Him who actually died, in order that we might have eternal life.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends (John 15:13).

The Judge as Interpreter

Among the prisoners brought into Centre St. Police Court, in New York, one day last week, was a man who was charged with being drunk and disorderly. The policeman who brought him complained that he was sullen, and would not answer any of the questions put to him. In court the prisoner maintained his silence, and as his face wore a blank look the judge thought that he was probably a foreigner who did not understand the questions. The police had tried him in German, but the man had made no answer. The court interpreter was sent for and questioned him in Italian, French, Magyar, Russian, and Yiddish, but the prisoner shrugged his shoulders and made no reply. "I can do nothing with him," he said, and he evidently thought the man contumacious, and deserving extra punishment on that ground. The prisoner looked apprehensively at the judge, but in a moment his face brightened. The judge was twisting his fingers about in a peculiar manner, and the prisoner was nodding and making similar gestures. "The man is deaf and dumb," the judge said. "He pleads guilty, but I am going to discharge him with a caution, as he has not been here before, and promises to avoid drink in future." It was fortunate for the prisoner that the judge happened to know the deaf-mute language, otherwise the assumption that he was sullen might have brought upon him a heavy punishment. So it often happens in the affairs of life. The good man has to appeal to God against the harsh judgment of those who cannot understand his conduct or his motives.

Oh, that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat! I would order my cause before him and fill my mouth with arguments. I would know the words which he would answer me and understand what he would say unto me (Job 23:3).

Usurers Called to Account

A novel suit for the repayment of $50,000, alleged to have been collected as illegal interest, has been brought in a Newark, N. J., court, by a resident of that city, against parties from whom he has been borrowing money for a number of years past. Being interested in the perfection of several inventions, the plaintiff had need of considerable money, and borrowed from the defendants at different times during a period of ten years, loans ranging from $250 to $5,000, until the total aggregated some $250,000. On these loans, it was alleged, interest was collected at an average rate of about thirty per cent., and the suit is now brought to compel the refunding of all interest in excess of the legal rate of six per cent. What the actual merits of the case may be will doubtless appear on the trial. It is interesting, however, to note the line of argument followed in the complaint, which makes a broad distinction between legal interest, for the use of borrowed money, and usurious interest. In olden times, the word "usury" was applied to all interest or increment, irrespective of any fixed rate, and this was the liberal interpretation attached to the word in the seventeenth century, when the Authorized Version of the Bible appeared. That interpretation, however, would, in present conditions, be a hardship both to the man who needs capital and the man who has capital to lend; for few would be willing to lend without interest. The present system is a mutual advantage to borrower and lender, but Christian principle demands that no man shall take advantage of another's necessities to enforce a cruel and usurious bargain. To do this, is to disregard that attitude of brotherly love which God requires of all:

Thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbors by extortion and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God (Ezekiel 22:12).

Largest Gas Tank in the World Bursts

A singular accident occurred in New York, on Dec. 13, by which at least seven persons lost their lives. It was the bursting of a huge gasometer having a capacity of 3,600,000 cubic feet, which is said to be the largest in the world. Like the smaller tanks, with the appearance of which every one is familiar, this enormous receptacle was made like an inverted cup, the upper end closed and the lower floating in water. A great circular vat, 178 feet in diameter rose twenty-five feet above the side-walk. It was made of steel plates an inch and a half thick and strengthened on the outside with square steel buttresses. This vat was partially filled with water, and inverted in it was the gigantic cup, which was intended to hold the gas. Great steel columns surrounded the structure at intervals, which were bolted together at the top by a lattice work. At the top of each column was a pulley wheel, over which passed a chain attached at one end to the gasometer and having a weight at the other, so that the gasometer might arise and fall easily according as it was full or empty of gas. The contractors began work on it last spring and had completed it, with the exception of painting. It was decided to test it before putting the finishing touches. Accordingly the vat was filled with water, and air was pumped into the gasometer. Precisely what occurred then, no one knows. Some think that the vat gave way, and that surmise is confirmed by a huge rent in its side. The suspended gasometer turned on its side, letting the air escape with a force that destroyed an adjoining factory. At the same time the water in the vat, said to be five million gallons, rushed out and submerged the streets. The gasometer, the vat and the columns are an utter wreck. The cause of the disaster is a mystery, for every precaution against failure seems to have been taken. There were no forces to control but those of air and water, yet these were strong enough to burst asunder the thick steel plates and overthrow substantial buildings. So it is with many of the most ambitious of human projects, yet in spite of failure and disaster the effort still goes on to exclude God from his universe and exalt human power as supreme.

Thy wisdom and thy knowledge it hath perverted thee; and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else besides me (Isa. 47:10).

Vandalism in a Cemetery

Three young men are held for trial in a court in New Jersey, charged with an unusual crime. A short time ago, the superintendent of a cemetery, making his usual morning tour of inspection, found that some wanton vandals had been in the grounds during the night, and had been employed in mischief. They had overturned many of the headstones and had injured others. Where the stones were solid and too heavy for them to displace, they had chipped out the names and inscriptions with chisels. Some of the stones thus defaced were over a century old, but the majority were of later date. The mischievous persons seemed to have had a special spite against the more costly monuments, some of which they completely spoiled. The detection of the criminals was difficult, and even after suspicion was directed to certain persons, no legal proof could be obtained, until one of them in a drunken debauch boasted of his share in the outrage and named his companions. It is difficult to understand what motive they had in such mischief. All that they could hope to accomplish by it was to cause expense and annoyance to people whose relatives and friends were buried in the cemetery. To the dead it mattered nothing whether the resting places of their bodies continued to be identified or not. Their concern is only as to their souls and as to them they have all the assurance that is needed.

The Lord knoweth them that are his (II. Tim. 2:19).

Too Late for Cure

The Superintendent of the Pasteur Institute in New York recently treated five persons who had been severely bitten by a rabid dog in Long Island City. Two of the patients were adults and three were children. They were on the street when the dog ran through and were bitten one after the other and badly mangled before the policeman who was chasing the animal could overtake and shoot it. They were taken immediately to the institute and the usual fifteen-day treatment was administered, after which they were pronounced out of danger and allowed to return to their homes. One day last week a man and his wife went to the institute with their five-year-old son whom they asked the superintendent to treat. He had been bitten on the same day and by the same dog as the five patients previously cured. But a month had elapsed since that time. The parents said that as the child's wounds were not deep, and soon healed, they had not thought it necessary to bring him to the institute, but during the last few days he became morose, had strange spasms and made queer noises in his throat. It was evidently a case of hydrophobia, and the doctor said it was too late for the Pasteur treatment to do him any good. He was therefore taken to the Long Island hospital, where all was done that was possible to alleviate his suffering, but his life could not be saved. His paroxysms continued at intervals until his death, which occurred forty-eight hours after his admission to the hospital. If the parents had only sought help at once, as did the others whom the dog bit, their child might have lived. They doubtless grieve bitterly, as will those who, at the last, discover that they postponed going to the Great Physician until it was too late:

When once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not (Luke 13:25).

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

RUSSIAN HOLIDAYS

Winter, the Gala Season of Sleighing, Skating Contests and Ice Carnivals

RUSSIA, the land of snow and ice, of poverty and black bread, is a land of many holidays. What with Pussy-Willow Fairs preceding Palm Sunday, Easter, "Bride Shows" at Whitsuntide, harvest festivals, Christmas, New Year, the "Blessing of the Waters," St. George's Day, and saint's days too numerous to mention, a fair proportion of the Russian's time is given to merry-making. All the national holidays are invested with some religious significance by the Greek Church, and the Imperial family and the Court join with ecclesiastical dignitaries in making the ceremonials elaborate and imposing. In some parts of the vast Empire, it is customary for peasants at certain seasons and upon certain gala days to array themselves in strange and fantastic disguises, very much as Roman merry-makers do; and their costumes and peculiar observances savor of times when Russia was purely pagan.

A MUJIK

Winter is the city's gala season. The great Russian pastimes are sleighing and skating. Everybody skates, and everybody sleighs. The milkman brings the milk around in a sleigh; the postman comes in a sleigh bringing the letters; farmers go around in sleighs. They do not feel it a hardship to go heavily wrapped; the rich are accustomed to the weight of furs, and the poorest peasant and the street beggar must wear his sheepskin or freeze. In agricultural districts, the mujik (farmer), and his wife and children for a long period can do no labor in the fields, and the women ply such indoor occupations as spinning, knitting, and embroidery. The mujik's holiday shirt of red cotton or wool, according to the season, is usually gay with elaborate needle-work. In winter country people flock to St Petersburg to supply the market with provisions, which, being frozen hard, can be preserved for months. The Hay Market is a curious spectacle at Christmas and New Year. Poultry, hares, swine, geese, ducks, mountain game, fish of many kinds, are set up in great stack like heaps. Meat is cut with a saw or axe, and slivers of frozen viands fly like chips, and are gathered up by the little street Arabs. In the square great bonfires are started at night for the benefit of the drunken drivers and the farmers who have come to town with parties of pleasure seekers.

There are three great classes in Russia—the nobility, the huge official class, and the common people. All these are abundantly represented on the streets during the winter holidays. The air is merry with sound of sleigh-bells. Almost all the sleighs have three horses driven abreast, troika fashion, and the gay-colored duja on the middle horse, from which the bell hangs, dot the scene with moving bits of crimson, blue, yellow, and various startling hues. A street in St. Petersburg is always an interesting study with its mingling of Occident and Orient, of ancient and modern in architecture, costume and manners. Many of the buildings are like ours; and now and then an American will find himself in thoroughfares which, in many particulars, will remind him of home. But he will know that he left no such ice behind him as the Neva's—ice often six feet thick, covered with dazzling snow. People pass, their garments and beards coated with "rime and icicles." Some one will say, "Little father, your nose! your cheek!" Experienced eyes have detected symptoms of impending frost-bite, a misfortune of which the victim is usually unconscious, so that it is Russian etiquette to warn him, and perhaps to assist in rubbing the afflicted member with a handful of snow. Skating contests are features of the mid-winter holidays: the Ice Carnival of the Imperial City of Moscow, and of other Russian towns are famous; descriptions of the ice palaces in which former rulers have made merry, read like stories of an impossible wonderland. Her present monarch takes his duties too seriously for revelry. He has an excellent tenor voice, and loves music, but cares nothing for out-door sports.

SCENES IN RUSSIA—A TYPICAL BUSINESS THOROUGHFARE—A RUSSIAN SLEIGH

India's "Wolf Children"

Hindoo's are very averse to taking animal life. In consequence, wolves are bold and numerous, and in raiding villages have carried off many children, most of whom are devoured, and some of whom have met a worse fate—adopted by wolf-mothers. Colonel Sleeman, a British officer, gave in 1852, an authoritative account of a number of "wolf children." One "wolf boy" was carried off when three years old, while his parents were working in a field. Six years later a hunter captured him. His mother, hearing of the strange creature that had been taken, went to see him, and identified him by several marks upon his body as her child. But he did not know her. He walked on all fours, ate raw flesh, birds and hares, snapped at people, affiliated with dogs and jackals. She tried to bring him back to human ways, but could not, and had to give him up. In America, we are averse to restricting bar-room privileges; saloon-keepers are numerous and bold. Our children are carried off by temptations that overtake them on every street corner. They are transformed by evil habits and associates, almost past a mother's recognition, and into absolute forgetfulness, on their own parts, of home ties and obligations. Yet we let the wolves go free; bar-rooms have right of way in civilized Christian cities.

And in some homes e'en children weep
For woes they should not bear,
And mothers clasping new-born babes
Are racked with bitter care.

Enriching the Gift

There had been some differences and a little unpleasantness in the family. "John's wife" and Maria, the married daughter, had incurred in some way the displeasure of the unmarried members of the household. New Year is a time for "making up," so Sue and Helen, George and Dick, decided among themselves that the heartiest welcome should be for the delinquents. And so when "John's wife," in her widow's weeds, and Maria and her husband gathered with the rest at the family New Year's dinner, everybody except those who had arranged the matter was astonished to see how very happily and pleasantly the affair went off. As they were saying good night, they whispered to each other, with dewy eyes, "We are glad to have their loving thoughts." "Let us tell them so," said one. So they went around from room to room, seeking that which they valued more than gifts bought with silver and gold. Let us consecrate this New Year with loving thoughts for each other and let the feuds and quarrels and envyings die with the old year

THE NEW-YEAR ANGEL

GOD'S angel comes at midnight,
As the bells ring out the old,
And in his arms he tenderly
The young year doth enfold.

A very ancient legend
This pretty story tells,
Of how God's angel brings the year
At the tolling of the bells:

Its rosy and unsandaled feet
The earth have never trod;
The little New Year, clean and sweet,
Comes straight to men from God.

And then the great white angel,
Who brings the New Year in,
Beseecheth all the people
To keep him free from sin.

And he lays the little New Year
Upon the great world's knees,
And telleth all the people
They can make him as they please.

They can raise him into honor,
To virtue and to praise,
Or with sorrow and with sinning
Waste the measure of his days.

Heavenward flies the angel, singing:
"Oh good people, never fear!
Use him well and he will bless you;
God's fair gift, your young New Year."

—GOODLOE HARPER.

New Year Resolutions

BECAUSE we failed to keep the good resolutions we made last year, is no reason why we should not make them anew this year, and strive all the harder to keep them.

Good resolutions are very hard things to keep. If you have not hit your mark yet, aim at it again and again, until you have accomplished your purpose. This is the spirit that wins in every field.

Because you fail in keeping a good resolution to-day, do not fail to make it over to-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, until you learn how with divine help, to make it aright and to keep it. You will certainly never do anything except you resolve to do it.

Suppose, if you fear to engage in controversy with your great faults, you take the lesser ones in hand, and resolve to do very easy and simple things till next New Year, and see what comes of it.

If you are a husband, a son, or a daughter, and have dropped into the habit of speaking ill-naturedly, of being late at meals, selfish, impatient or domineering, try to overcome it. Observe how much you can do towards sweetening the spirit of the home. Some young ladies, who would "die for mamma" are not down to breakfast on time—and that without regard to whether there is a cook in the house or not. A wife puts all her art and heart into spreading a dainty feast; husband or sons loiter thoughtlessly; the dinner gets cold and tasteless—a small matter, but perhaps a women's heart is somewhat heavier for it, and she loses proper pride in preparing that "dinner of herbs" which is to be eaten with love as its sauce. If you are not in your own home and it is not with your kindred you are dealing, but with a boarding-house keeper, try to be prompt all the same: your morals and hers will be better, and the steak will be more to your taste. Your digestion will be better, and your druggist and doctor's bills will be less.

Resolve to say or do some kind, considerate thing at every meal you take during the year. Any one can accomplish so much. Such a trifle it seems! There are 365 days in the year, three times that and 1,095 kind things have been said or done by you during the year. Most of us are doubtless doing that much now. Then, let us take up some other trifle. What a pleasant world it will be when it is full to the brim of kind thoughts, words and deeds—the fruits of good resolutions that undertook not some high affair, but dear common-place, every-day home matters.

. . . WATCHING THE OLD YEAR DIE . . .

MANY choose to pass the closing hours of the dying year in prayer and contemplation—a fitting way for the Christian, to whom the changes of time and season are constant reminders of God's goodness. Our artist has selected a pleasant subject for his illustration: a family group who, having decided to "see the old year out," are now watching with breathless interest the ticking away of the last moments of its existence.

Slowly, yet inevitably, the old clock
Points and beckons with its hands
From its case of massive oak, as it records the last echoes of the expiring year. The old clock does its duty well:

Through days of sorrow, and of mirth
Through days of death and days of birth,
Through every swift vicissitude
Of changeful time, unchanged it stood.

Now the whole household hangs upon the first stroke of midnight, which ushers in the new-born year, and the old year forever becomes a memory. What joys and sorrows go with it! What hopes and fears come to us with its successor! It is a moment in which the grateful heart rises to the Father above and thrills with thankfulness for past mercies. What will the year bring? Who knows what its weeks may have in store for him, of joy or sorrow, of happiness or misery? Happy is he who can greet the new year in calm confidence founded on faith in his all-wise, loving Father. Strong in that confidence, he can look forward without apprehension, knowing that nothing can come to him but by the will of his Almighty Friend, and that be it pleasant or painful, all things will work together for good to them that love God.

The opening year Thy mercy shows:
That mercy crowns it till its close.
By day, by night, at home, abroad,
Still we are guarded by our God.
Oh, God! Our Helper, ever near,
Crown with thy smile this glad New Year.

STAY yet, my friends, a moment stay—
Stay till the good old year,
So long companion of our way,
Shakes hands and leaves us here.
Oh, stay! Oh, stay!
One little hour, and then away.

. . . .

The year whose hopes were high and strong,
Has now no hopes to wake;
Yet one hour more of mirth and song
For his familiar sake.
Oh, stay! Oh, stay!
One mirthful hour and then away.

. . . .

The kindly year! his liberal hands
Have lavished all his store,
And shall we turn from where he stands
Because he gives no more?
Oh, stay! Oh, stay!
One grateful hour and then away.

Days brightly came and calmly went,
While yet he was our guest.
How cheerfully the week was spent!
How sweet the seventh day's rest!
Oh, stay! Oh, stay!
One golden hour and then away.

. . . .

Dear friends were with us, some who sleep
Beneath the coming snow:
What pleasant memories we keep
Of all they said and did!
Oh, stay! Oh, stay!
One tender hour and then away.

. . . .

Let while we sing [illegible]
And leaves our spirits free
To grant [illegible]
Oh, stay! Oh, stay!
One parting strain and then away.

OUR OPPORTUNITY IN CUBA

A Great Movement for Evangelical Work Urgently Needed on the Island

THE Cuba of 1898 differs from the Cuba of 1492, not more in population, in cities built, bastions mounted and harbors constructed, than in the character of its people, and the possibilities within their reach. Then a God-fearing and man-loving people welcomed Columbus to its shores. He thought it the most beautiful island in the world. Enter Havana now, and there is much to admire. The harbor, land-locked, is a safe shelter for ship and sailor. The hills round about will furnish magnificent places on which to build palatial residences for those who would get above the sea-mist and live where health might be enjoyed. There are no reasons why the capital of the "Pearl of the Antilles" should not become our winter Saratoga. Cuba must come under American control or remain what it is, a plague spot in the tropics.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers need not be told of the struggle through which Cuba has passed, and is passing. It was because I was in some little measure identified and connected with the bread distribution under CHRISTIAN HERALD management, when New York was threatened with famine several years ago, that on the 8th of October I, with my good wife, shipped on the Orizaba of the Ward line for Havana, to see if there were opportunities to establish medical missions in the different cities of Cuba, where we might hope to distribute food, and scatter the seed of the kingdom upon the hearts of that famishing multitude.

Lee's Orphanage, where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund has kept great numbers of little children from death and starvation, was visited. It is run on the Cuban plan. It ought to have an American teacher, and every child should be taught English, as all will be needed in the near future, and will become aids in making Havana and Cuba inhabitable to those who are to carry there the thrift and push essential to the new life.

The Gethsemane Baptist Church, on Zulueta, corner Dragones street, is a large and commodious place of worship, where a great work is being carried on in Spanish and English by Alberto J. Diaz, so well known in America, and by W. N. Hammond, a brother in Christ from Liverpool, who has preached in all parts of the world, and who has opened an office on Obispo street, where Americans are always welcome, and where Christ is first in all thoughts and plans. This brother preaches in English at 3 P. M. every Lord's day, at the same place where Diaz preaches with wonderful power to the multitude at 7.30 P. M., and where, at 12 M. on the Sabbath he has introduced the children to the English language. It does an American good to hear the child recusing our Christian songs in English, and to see the magnificent welcome extended to every one from our land.

It was my privilege to invite the starving to be at Diaz's church at 8 A. M. The crowd was welcomed with music, and I never heard better music than can be made by a people eager for salvation. It is not a new work for Diaz. In the past, when small-pox ravaged Havana, his members were ready to nurse the sick. So with yellow fever and the other plagues that have infested the town. That fact has given Diaz and his people a large place in the regard of the populace of the city. When in the past people buried in unconsecrated ground were left to be eaten by dogs and treated in the most shameful manner, Diaz and his good wife carried the matter to God in a night of prayer. The next morning, Mr. J. S. Paine, of Boston came to his house and left $200 with him for his work. Diaz at once bought a little land, just back of the Catholic cemetery. He began burying all who sought that retreat for their dead. There are now 33 acres enclosed in the place and over 17,000 burials have been made. The movement struck consternation into the mind of the Archbishop, who had hitherto enjoyed the monopoly of caring for the dead. A large sum was offered Diaz to close his cemetery, but his reply deserves to be remembered. He said: "There is not money enough in Havana to make me consent to the barbarous treatment of Protestants who have died and sought burial in Havana."

To return to the programme: Doors were open at 8 A. M. Then singing, prayers, reading of the Scripture and exposition; more singing and addresses, brief and instructive, then the distribution of food, looking after the sick and making the occasion one where the face of the Master, through his disciples, might shine out upon the needy ones in love and fellowship. It seemed to me that if this work could be made general in the island, the people would know that the nation, which, like the good Samaritan, had come to their aid, was at the door with offers of help for the soul, and that a wave of kindly influence would go over the island that would be the harbinger of a new Christian civilization. Diaz offers to begin the work in his church, and believes that if it shall be a success, he can establish a similar work in every city in Cuba.

The condition of affairs in Cuba is pitiable and alarming. The Cubans need the protection of American arms. They are fortunate in having in our Administration officials who measure up to the requirements of the situation, and who are ready to open wide the doors to all Christian endeavor, that aims to feed the hungry in Cuba, and to make the hopeless realize that a new light has come with great blessings. My visit to Cuba, supplemented by the cordial welcome accorded to my plan by Administration officials in Washington, fill me with the assurance that we cannot press the work of preparation too rapidly. We may even now claim with the Master: 'Say not there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest; see, the fields are white and ready for the harvest." Who will enter in as reapers while the harvest cry sounds forth? This is the Divine programme for the needy in Cuba. Who will enlist and make it a success?

NOTABLE PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN PORTO RICO

There are many really fine structures in the Porto Rican towns. A few of the better class, in the city of San Juan (the capital), are shown in the photograph. No. 1 is the Finance Building at the wharf. 2. City Hall. 3. Spanish Captain-General's quarters. 4. Building of the Provincial Delegation.

A FORECAST OF THE CENTURY

The Probable Changes, Religious, Political, and Social, that the New Century will Bring

WRITING in Great Thoughts, an English periodical, Dr. Joseph Parker, of London, ventures to make a forecast of the characteristics of the coming century. He does not assume the power of prophecy, but he draws inferences from the trend of present movements. He says:

Although it is generally safer to prophesy after an event than before it, life would become very insipid and disagreeable if we could not sometimes take a canter in the dark. But, truth to tell, I do not see much darkness upon the main outlines of the twentieth century, a century of silent but profound and historic revolutions and developments.

Preaching

Preachers there will always be, and possibly great preachers, but, taken broadly, there will be no pulpit in the twentieth century. Preaching is the supreme impertinence as between man and man, unless the preacher be divinely inspired and qualified. Given an inspired message and an inspired messenger the pulpit is safe. Is it possible that we can require all the preaching, and the kind of preaching, that is done in it every week? Or, if all the preaching is required, is it required in the same place? The Master said, "Go into all the world." Do not many of us say, "Come into our nice little meeting-house and take a sitting in front of the gallery?" Let every man answer for himself. I distinguish broadly between preachers and teachers. The latter we shall always need. Of well-equipped teachers we can hardly have too many. The coming century will be impatient with incompetent teachers, but the very degree of its impatience, on the one hand, will be the degree of its appreciation on the other. Men do willing homage to the teachers who can bring them within clear sight of all the kingdoms of God—righteousness, purity, music, beauty, and eternal love.

Churches

As to churches, a wonderful change will take place. Small tests of faith, sectarian standards of orthodoxy, pedantries, whims, and theological crazes will all disappear, and men will gather in adoring love around the Christ of God. There will be a grand church then! In that holy day, opinion will be nothing accounted of, compared with sincere love and passionate devotion to the service of the poor, the weak, and the weary who need a word in season. The church of the triumphant Saviour will in very deed be established, for she shall have granite for her foundations and salvation for her walls.

Politics

Politically, what changes will take place ere the close of the twentieth century? Leaseholds will have become freeholds. The land will be no longer a monopoly of men who never paid for it. Men will not be great by title, but by character. He who does most good will be crowned as the king of men. The tax gatherer will no longer be a shadow on the doorstep, but the welcome presence of an honest messenger sent by honest neighbors.

The Saloon

And the public house, where will that be? It will be burned with fire and brimstone. It was built by the devil, and to the devil it will go. The public house is the gate of hell. Who can write the story of the ruin it has wrought? Oh, the misery, the heartbreak, the desolation, the orphanhood, the murder, the suicide, the madness, for which that accursed house is responsible! But the twentieth century will see the passing away of the chief tragedy of perdition. In fancy's quick, glad hearing I catch the sound of all the distilleries, breweries, drunkeries, falling in one terrific crash; whilst there goes up to heaven the thrilling shout, "The house of Bacchus—that street corner god of the cities—has fallen into hell!"

Science

Science will be no longer hostile to religion, nor religion hostile to science. There never should have been any controversy between them. The God of the Bible is the God of nature. He planted the forests, and breathed the life and molded the stars, and made the whole house we live in. He that built all things is God. Religion may have to change her forms and her way of putting things, but not her reverence of God or her glad obedience to his will. So long as the sky is above the earth man will need religious expressions of word and service, for his highest nature and his noblest impulses. Little Dogma must have given way to immeasurable Truth; stunted Creed must make room for majesty and increasing Faith; and shrunken Self must yield to the diviner claims of man.

Woman

The position of woman in the twentieth century will be in happy contrast to that which she now occupies. Recent university successes have shown that women can go to the top without losing one atom of grace or gentleness, or simplicity or childlikeness, of sympathy or affection. All that has been taken away from the region of fancy, and squarely set down in the region of indisputable fact. It must be very humbling to men of a certain caste of mind to know that girls take the B. A. degrees in dozens and scores, and never stoop to wear the elementary and now humiliating decoration; but what are men to think of girls who know mathematics and natural philosophy and yet can take a hand in the kitchen?

I congratulate the men who will live far into the new century. I would I were just now beginning my ministry, if I could begin it with my present experience. Shall we see things on earth from our sphere beyond the death line? Shall we be permitted to see how silver comes instead of iron, and gold instead of silver. We shall soon know. The sunset of this century is the sunrise of the next. Let us more and more confidently hope in the Living God.

HOLIDAY GIFTS

By Pastor Thomas Spurgeon

"THE greatest gifts on earth" was the legend I read over a toy-shop door. I did not make my Christmas purchases at that establishment, fearing lest the greatest gifts might be of the greatest price, and tax my resources too heavily. Moreover, I had a faint suspicion that the fancy goods that required such startling advertisement might not be of sterling quality. "Greatest" is not always best. But the announcement set me thinking. What are the greatest gifts on earth? The love tokens of our friends are not to be thought lightly of. It is surely quite in accord with our Master's mind that we should thus remember one another. Provided there is no extravagance, provided also that the poor, and those who cannot make recompense are not forgotten, there can be no harm, but much benefit, in bestowing upon our loved ones little assurances of our continued affection on birthdays, and on Christmas or the New Year. There is about such gifts a "greatness" that comes of love, a value far beyond intrinsic worth, for "Love is of God." Yet these are not the greatest gifts on earth. Our best presents are those which fellow-friends, however dear, cannot give, and which foes, however fierce, cannot remove. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Look upward for thy true treasures, O my soul! The greatest gifts on earth are not of earth.

Fain would I spread out before my readers, in bright array, the store of good and perfect gifts that God bestows, and say, "Come, see the presents heaven has made." But these treasures are not for public exhibition. They are to be seen only as we look within. Not one of us but may both see and handle them by faith. Our hearts are their blest abode.

The first and best of these is God Himself. Mark well this wondrous truth! The Lord has not withheld himself from us. Hath he not declared, "I will be their God, and they shall be my people"? He does not ask from us aught that he has not rendered first. He begs your love, but "The Father himself loveth you." He asks our service, but he has wrought all things for us, and in us. He claims us as his own, as it is written, "The Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance," but he bids us possess him, and allows each believer to exclaim, "The Lord is my portion, saith my soul." All that he is and has, our gracious Lord has set at our service—nay, he himself is ours. "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." Oh the joy of it! God is mine! "All this, and God, too!" cried the poor saint over her crust and water. What shall we say, who have enough and to spare of creature comforts,—and God, too?

The next of our treasures is Jesus Himself. "Thanks be unto God for this unspeakable gift." Heaven had no brighter gem than God's dear Son—"the Son of his love"; yet he spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. He was his only begotten Son, yet he willingly parted with him for our own salvation. This Jesus may be yours, dear reader. He may be accepted by faith. I pray you receive him as your Saviour. Trust his precious blood. Cling to his saving cross.

We have also the Holy Ghost. He is the gift of our Father God, and of our risen Lord. He proceedeth from the Father and from the Son. He is available to all who have believed. He has but to be asked for. "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children"—you who have been purchasing presents for them lately—"how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." How very partially do we appreciate this wondrous gift. The Holy Ghost stands ready to aid us, but we try to dispense with his services. Poor fools—we blunder on alone rather than submit to be God-guided.

Nor can we forget the Word of God. Of it John Newton wisely said that whereas he had many books, some of which were comparable to silver and some to gold, the Bible was to him a book of bank notes. Every page is worth far more than its weight in gold. It is the Book of books. Luther would not take all the world for one-half of the Bible. He said that he could not live in Paradise without it, but that he could live in hell itself with it. Ah, hell would not be hell if the Word of God were there. Oh that the Book were loved and honored more. While some criticise it, let us feed upon it by meditation. God helping us, we will love it more than ever, and uphold its honor as our fathers have done before us. May the Word of the Lord be precious in these days!

Of other spiritual gifts there is no mean store. What shall we say of the ordinances of his house, the ministry of his truth, the opportunities for work and worship which he grants us, and the graces he bestows upon us? The assembling of ourselves together in his name is a glorious privilege. Let us praise him for it, for it is one of the best gifts we shall have this Christmas, and God is always granting it to us, the whole year through. How grateful we should be to be allowed to serve him. Thank him for the task he has assigned you. Is it humble? Do it faithfully and you will be promoted. Is it arduous and unpleasing to the flesh? Still praise him—you will like it better then. Who are we, that we should pick and choose. If it pleases him, it pleases us. Let the Father's name be adored for the Mercy-Seat and the privilege of prayer.

Bless him also for the graces that grow in your heart as flowers in a garden. Faith, love, hope, zeal, he has planted in your soul, and he has made you to be as a watered garden. These gifts have come to you by way of Jesus. "How shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Praise him, not for Jesus only, but for every gift, however small, that bears the image and the superscription of the King. Praise him for all the good things that are in Christ, for Christ's people. How rich we are who love the Lord! We may well pity, however poor we are, the poorer rich people who do not value "the greatest gifts on earth."

Material mercies are not to be compared with spiritual ones, but they should not be overlooked. Our bread should be prayed for daily, and praised for just as frequently. Thank God for the honesty and industry which have kept you from want. Some of us have been provided for with special bounty; our thanksgiving, therefore, should be the longest and loudest.

We cannot be sufficiently grateful for health and strength. "Life is not to live, but to be well." "A hale cobbler is better than a sick king." Bless God, I pray you, for the measure of vigor you possess. If he gives you more, use it for his glory. If he takes from you what little you have, yield it willingly. To be well in the soul is the most important matter.

Furthermore, let us magnify the name of the Lord for loving friends, for godly parents, for darling children, for happy associations, for faithful ministers. But there—the list is far too long for a brief article. We must omit some from our paper, but God forbid that we should fail to praise the good Giver for any. Come, let memory do her blessed work, and call to mind the loving kindnesses of the Lord. Let us pile the tender mercies together, heaps upon heaps—the mercies of all the past year, the mercies that are ours just [illegible] us.

We will bless him also for joys to come—for New Year mercies. There is no Giver like God, and there are no gifts like his. They are "the greatest gifts on earth." "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Answering a Widow's Prayer

ONE winter evening lately, Dr. T. J. Barnardo, the friend of destitute children, saw at the corner of a street, a lad of about nine years of age, barefooted and hatless, trying to sell boxes of matches. The weather was cold, and the child moved uneasily from one foot to the other as if the stones of the pavement felt very cold. From the boy he learned that his profits on his day's sales so far were the equivalent of three cents, and he was anxious to make it twelve before he went home. "No use of going home with less," he said, shaking his head sententiously. He further imparted the information that he had a little sister and that his mother was sick. Dr. Barnardo told him he was a doctor and might perhaps do his mother some good, so the little boy took him to the room he called home. In the room was neither chair nor table, but on a heap of rags lay a woman with an ulcerated leg.

"There she lay," writes Dr. Barnardo, "helpless to move hand or foot on her own behalf. By her side stood a little girl about six years of age—'our Bess,' she called her—a bright-eyed, winsome little lassie, who soon made friends with me.

"But Billy was the bread-winner! It was he who kept the wolf from the door. It was he who had boldly gone into trade and endeavored to supply mother, sister and himself with bread. I cannot say how affected I was as I listened to the simple story. But why did she not go into a hospital? They would take her in. The question was hardly asked when I felt rebuked. 'What would become of the children?' said the poor woman. 'Billy might do a bit for himself—he was a brave lad! But our Bess—' And then as she thought of her little daughter's peril, the poor soul fairly broke down.

"'Why not,' said I, 'try to get the children into some home or refuge, where they would be looked after, while you are taken to the hospital and get properly treated?' To my surprise she said: 'I have been praying to the Lord all the time I have been here to take care of the children, and to take our Bess from the streets.' Here in this wretched room, deprived of everything, depending absolutely upon a child of nine years of age for food and fuel—here lay a real child of God, in whose prayerful breast there still burned the flame of faith and hope!

"'Sir,' said the woman as we talked, putting her hand under the pillow, and pulling out a copy of a well-known Christian weekly journal, 'Look here, sir: read that!' And under my eyes she placed a short narrative of one of my own rescues, which had been reprinted without my knowledge in this journal. How the page had drifted to her I know not; but the last lines of the story contained that statement of mine which has been so often repeated: 'Never during all these years have I refused a single destitute child who has made application at my doors.'

"'There sir,' said the poor creature, not knowing in the least to whom she spoke, 'I have been hoping and praying that God would let Billy and our Bess get in there. Then I know they'd be safe, and they'd both be together, and I'd go in cheerful to the hospital.'

"I thought for a few moments before I answered. At length I said slowly 'I did not tell you who I am; but now I must let you know. My name is Barnardo, and I have a great many poor boys and girls, and that is why I asked your little lad to bring me here to-day. Now, if I can help you by keeping the children for awhile, I will.'

"It is impossible to describe the emotions of wonder and amazement which passed over the suffering mother's face? The tears began to pour down her cheeks. 'Billy!' she called, and the boy ran quickly to his mother's side. 'Bess, dear,' she added. And then, holding the two children in her trembling hands, she said: 'This is the gentleman that has all the little boys and girls. I told yer God would hear me, and now he's just sent him here to take and keep you both until I am well again.'

"There and then the arrangement was made. I was to admit the children for a time while the mother entered the hospital. Ere long one of my good women helpers was in the room supplying the wants of the patient, bringing food and fuel and a few needed garments for the children, while I meanwhile obtained the needful order which gave admission to the hospital to this poor member of the household of faith."

GOD, MY SALVATION

IN the heaven of heavens abiding,
Doth the Almighty care for me?
May I, in his love confiding,
Be from fear and doubt set free?
Hath he any place of hiding
Where I may in safety be?

Yes, O heart dismayed, despairing,
God Almighty loveth thee;
For thee, day by day, is caring,
Crieth, "Cast thy care on me!"
All thy burdens would be sharing,
Give thee rest and liberty.

When the dreaded tempest rages;
In the day of rude alarm;
When the foe with thee engages
And the conflict waxes warm;
Lo, the mighty Rock of Ages
Shall preserve thee from all harm.

God, the God of thy salvation,
Will not leave thee, soul, to shame;
After cross comes coronation,
Strife shall end in joy's acclaim;
Thou with songs of jubilation
Evermore shalt praise his name!

Justice in the Philippines

A THRILLING story of an effort to introduce the Bible into the Philippine Islands, while they were under Spanish rule, is told in the current number of The Missionary Review of the World, by F. de P. Castells, who went there in 1889 as an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Soon after his arrival his attention was called to an article in the penal code which read: 'Whosoever shall perform publicly any acts of propaganda, preaching or other ceremonies, contrary to those of the official religion, will incur the penalty of correctional imprisonment, etc." Mr. Castells applied for permission to hold public meetings, but an answer to his request was postponed from time to time. Suddenly he fell ill with a mysterious sickness and was given up for dead, but through the kind attention of an English physician he recovered. Then his companion and helper fell ill with the same symptoms and died. A clue to the cause of these illnesses was found in the fact that the man who waited on the two missionaries at table was a Roman Catholic officer in disguise.

Having escaped death in that form, the power of the law was set in motion against Mr. Castells. "I was charged," he says, "with being the head of a conspiracy, and in consequence I was arrested and imprisoned. The charge was easily disproved, but on the third day of being in prison, the judge informed me that I was accused of a new crime, that of 'propagating doctrines contrary to the official religion,' and that he would let me out on $5co bail. I being still under police surveillance. The prosecution dragged its weary course for three full months, during which time I lived at the hotel, honored with a police guard at my door; ultimately I was acquitted, the evidence being declared insufficient. But simultaneously with this, and without my knowledge, I had also been prosecuted 'administratively' for being a 'pernicious person,' which meant that, guilty or innocent, they intended to expel me from the country. And, having known this, I called on the civil governor, who happened to be a Cuban, and effected a compromise. I leaving the islands by the first steamer, and he shelving the prosecution. On the 23d of December, therefore, pained by my failure I was saying good bye to Manila from on board a vessel, but yet believing that I would, as I still pray I may, see the Philippines brought under the influence of the Gospel of Christ. Some weeks after my departure I learned that the supreme court had refused to indorse my acquittal, and had ordered a new trial, with what results I cannot say."

Anecdotes by Moody

Illustrations and Incidents in the Life of the World's Greatest Evangelist

A MAN was converted in Europe several years ago, and he liked the Gospel so well he thought he should go and preach it. He started out, and great crowds came to hear him just out of curiosity. The next night there were not so many there, and the third night the man had scarcely a hearer. But he was anxious to preach the Gospel, and so he prepared some great placards and posted them all over the town, declaring that if any man in that town that was in debt would come to his office before twelve o'clock on a certain day with the proof of indebtedness, he would pay the debt. This news spread all over the town, but the people did not believe him.

One man said to his neighbor, "John, do you believe this man will pay our debts?"

"No, of course not, it's only a hoax."

The day came, and instead of there being a rush, nobody came. Now it is a wonder there is not a great rush of men into the Kingdom of God to have their debts paid, when a man can be saved for nothing.

About ten o'clock a man was walking in front of the office. He looked this way and that, to see if anybody was looking, and by and by, satisfied that there was no one, he slipped in, and said:

"I saw a notice about town that if any one would call here at a certain hour you would pay their debts; is there any truth in it?"

"Yes," said the man; "it's quite true. Did you bring the necessary papers with you?"

"Yes."

After the man had paid the debt, he said, "Sit down, I want to talk with you," and he kept him there until twelve o'clock. Before twelve o'clock had passed two more came in and had their debts paid. At twelve o'clock he let them all out. Some other men were standing around the door.

"Well, did he pay your debts?"

"Yes," they said; "it was quite true; our debts were all paid."

"Oh! then we'll go in and get ours paid."

They went, but it was too late. Twelve o'clock had passed. To every one of you who is a bankrupt sinner—and you never saw a sinner in the world that was not a bankrupt sinner—Christ comes and he says: 'I will pay your debts.'"

The Jealous Eagle

There is a fable of an eagle which could outfly another, and the other didn't like it. The latter saw a sportsman one day, and said to him:

"I wish you would bring down that eagle."

The sportsman replied that he would if he only had some feathers to put into the arrow. So the eagle pulled one out of its wing. The arrow was shot, but didn't quite reach the rival eagle; it was flying too high. The envious eagle pulled out more feathers, and kept pulling them out until he lost so many that he couldn't fly, and then the sportsman turned around and killed him.

My friend, if you are jealous, the only man you can hurt is yourself.

Reuben Johnson's Pardon

When I was in Ohio a few years ago, I was invited to preach in the State prison. Eleven hundred convicts were brought into the chapel, and all sat in front of me. After I had got through the preaching, the chaplain said to me:

"Mr. Moody, I want to tell you of a scene which occurred in this room. A few years ago, our commissioners went to the Governor of the State, and got him to promise that he would pardon five men for good behavior. The Governor consented, with this understanding—that the record was to be kept secret, and that at the end of six months the five men highest on the roll should receive a pardon, regardless of who or what they were. At the end of six months the prisoners were all brought into the chapel. The commissioners came; the president stood on the platform, and putting his hand in his pocket brought out some papers and said:

"'I hold in my hand pardons for five men.'"

The chaplain told me he never witnessed anything on earth like it. Every man was as still as death. Many were deadly pale. The suspense was awful; it seemed as if every heart had ceased to beat. The commissioner went on to tell them how they had got the pardon; but the chaplain interrupted him.

"Before you make your speech, read out the names. This suspense is awful."

So he read out the first name, "Reuben Johnson will come and get his pardon"; and he held it out, but none came forward.

He said to the warden: "Are all the prisoners here?"

The warden told him they were all there.

Then he said again, "Reuben Johnson will come and get his pardon. It is signed and sealed by the Governor. He is a free man."

Not one moved. The chaplain looked right down where Reuben was. He was well known; he had been nineteen years there, and many were looking around to see him spring to his feet. But he himself was looking around to see the fortunate man who had got his pardon. Finally the chaplain had caught his eye, and said:

"Reuben, you are the man."

Reuben turned around and looked behind him to see where Reuben was. The chaplain said the second time, "Reuben, you are the man"; and the second time he looked around, thinking it must be some other Reuben. He had to say three times, "Reuben, come and get your pardon."

At last the truth began to steal over the old man. He got up, came along down the hall, trembling from head to foot, and when he got the pardon he looked at it, and went back to his seat, buried his face in his hands, and wept. When the prisoners got into the ranks to go back to the cells, Reuben got into the ranks, too, and the chaplain had to call him:

"Reuben, get out of the ranks; you are a free man, you are no longer a prisoner."

And Reuben stepped out of the ranks. He was free!

That is the way men make out pardons; they make them out for good character or good behavior; but God makes out pardons for men who have not got any character. He offers a pardon to every sinner on earth if he will take it. I do not care who he is or what he is like. He may be the greatest libertine that ever walked the streets, or the greatest blackguard who ever lived, or the greatest drunkard, or thief, or vagabond. Christ commissioned his disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Faith

When I was a boy, in the spring of the year, when the snow had melted away on the New England hills where I lived, I used to take a certain kind of glass and hold it up to the warm rays of the sun. These would strike on it, and I would set the woods on fire.

Faith is the glass that brings the fire of God out of heaven. It was faith that drew the fire down on Carmel and burned up Elijah's offering. We have the same God to-day, and the same faith. Some people seem to think that faith is getting old, and that the Bible is wearing out. But the Lord will revive his work now; and we shall be able to set the world on fire if each believer has a strong and simple faith.

Both Afraid

I remember a man in New York who used to come and pray with me. He had his cross. He was afraid to confess Christ. It seemed that down at the bottom of his trunk he had a Bible. He wanted to get it out and read it to a companion with whom he lived, but he was ashamed to do it. For a whole week that was his cross; and after he had carried the burden that long, and after a terrible struggle, he made up his mind. He said, "I will take my Bible out to-night and read it." He took it out, and soon he heard the footsteps of his mate coming upstairs.

His first impulse was to put it away again, but then he thought he would not—he would face his companion with it. His mate came in, and seeing him at his Bible, said:

"John, are you interested in these things?"

"Yes," he replied.

"How long has this been, then?" asked his companion.

"Exactly a week," he answered; "for a whole week I have tried to get out my Bible to read to you, but I have never done so till now."

"Well," said his friend, "it is a strange thing. I was converted on the same night, and I, too, was ashamed to take my Bible out."

Your Walk Tells

"That man must have been in the army, or in a military school," I said to a friend once.

"Yes," he said; "how did you know?"

"By the way he walks."

You can tell that some people have been with Jesus by their walk.

When a Christian Grows

Doctor Bonar once remarked that he could tell when a Christian was growing. In proportion to his growth in grace he would elevate his Master, talk less of what he was doing, and become smaller and smaller in his own esteem, until, like the morning star, he faded away before the rising sun. Jonathan was willing to decrease that David might increase; and John the Baptist showed the same spirit of humility.

A Most Extraordinary Well!

I heard of a well that was said to be very good, except that it had two faults; it would freeze up in the winter, and it would dry up in the summer. A most extraordinary well, but I am afraid there are many wells like it! There are many people who are good at certain times; as some one has expressed it, they séem to be good "in spots." What we want is to be red hot all the time. People talk about striking while the iron is hot. Cromwell said that he would rather strike the iron and make it hot.

SLEEP

HE sees when their footsteps falter, when their hearts grow weak and faint;
He marks when their strength is failing, and listens to each complaint;
He bids them rest for a season, for the pathway has grown too steep;
And folded in fair green pastures he giveth his loved ones sleep.

Like weary and worn out children, that sigh for the daylight's close,
He knows that they oft are longing for home and its sweet repose;
So he calls them in from their labors, ere the shadows around them creep,
And silently watching o'er them, he giveth his loved ones sleep.

He giveth it, oh! so gently, as a mother will hush to rest
The babe that she softly pillows so tenderly on her breast.
Forgotten are now the trials and sorrows that made them weep,
For with many a soothing promise he giveth his loved ones sleep.

He giveth it! Friends the dearest can never this boon bestow;
But he touches the drooping eyelids, and placid the features grow.
Their foes may gather around them, and storms may round them sweep,
But guarding them safe from danger, he giveth his loved ones sleep.

All dread of the distant future, all fears that oppressed to-day,
Like mists, that clear in the sunlight, have noiselessly passed away;
Nor call nor clamor can rouse them from slumbers so pure and deep,
For only his voice can reach them who giveth his loved ones sleep.

Weep not that their toils are over, weep not that their race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly when our work, like theirs, is done!
Yet then we would yield with gladness our treasures to him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance, he giveth his loved ones sleep.

A PRECIOUS INVITATION

Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League and Baptist Young People's Union for Jan. 8. Matt. 11: 25–30

A LARGER class than those to whom this invitation was issued could not have been addressed. In every generation, and in every part of the world, those who labor and are heavy laden constitute the large majority. The burdens are of many kinds, and poverty, which is the most common, is by no means the heaviest. There are many hearts that are breaking, and many footsteps that falter under heavy loads, in the mansions of the rich. "Every heart knoweth its own bitterness." Some of the burdens, it is true, are of our own making, but these are often the most galling. Past negligence, or past wrongdoing, is apt to come back to the delinquent in some retributive shape, and settle itself firmly on his shoulders. Or it may be that the burden comes from some relationship, or association, that was lightly assumed, but proves irrevocable. In some shape or another, every man has to bear a burden. If in any assembly every one were to describe his own peculiar trial, all would be astonished at the disclosures, and the aggregate would be appalling. Sorrow and regret, and harass and disappointment, dog our steps through life, and none can escape them altogether. When, therefore, we are told that there is a way of getting relief, or help in bearing the burden, the information is of interest to every one. And this is what Christ offers. As a millionaire might say to some poor struggling tradesman, so Christ says: "Come unto me."

It is no vague, indefinite invitation that Christ gives to the burden-bearer. The boon he offers is precisely the one that is most needed: "I will give you rest." What sweeter word can fall on the ears of the heavy-laden? It is a large promise. It is not limited to any special kind of burden, but takes in miseries of every sort. The burden of sin, of remorse, of poverty, of loneliness, of bereavement, of sickness—burdens of any and every kind may be taken to him. He knows what they are, and he undertakes them. As a physician, whose business it is to cure, he invites the sufferers and makes no exception. But he will give rest only to those who will take his yoke upon them. This is no paradox. It is by entering a new service that we become free. Our shoulders are used to the yoke, our backs to the burden. But this yoke is easy, and this burden is light. That is more than can be said of our own. But howsoever heavy may be our load, he assumes it, and, in its stead, imposes a burden which it is easy to bear, and gives strength which never fails.

A Strange Harvest

It is related that a Bible colporteur in Spain one day entered the little village of Montalborejo in Toledo province, and offered his Bibles for sale. Among others he sold a large Bible intended for family use. The village priest heard of his presence, and ran to the colporteur. He tore the book out of the buyer's hand, and angrily exclaimed, "These books of the devil shall never enter my parish." He roused the people, and especially the pious women, to anger, and they took up stones and cast them at the inoffensive man.

Six weeks later the colporteur was again on the road leading to the selfsame village. Gladly would he have avoided it had he been able to find a roundabout way. Approaching the village at dusk, he hoped the inhabitants would fail to recognize him. To his astonishment the very first man he met at the city gate detained him with the question:

"Are you not the man who sold the Bible?"

"Yes, I am the man."

"Then welcome to our village; every one of us desires to purchase your book," was the amazing reply. In his utmost astonishment, the man inquired:

"Are you not the selfsame people who only a few weeks ago cast stones at me?"

"Most certainly," answered the man, "but a great change has come over us, so that each and every one desires one of your books."

A merchant of the village had picked up the book in the market place, concluding that the paper might be used. Accordingly leaf after leaf was torn out to serve as wrappers for salt, sugar, rice or other groceries, thus entering every hut in the village. Through this means, the people became acquainted with the Gospel, and were burning to learn more of the wondrous Message which had been conveyed to them by the leaves of that Bible, which the priest thought he had destroyed beyond recall. The village ultimately became a centre of Christian activity.

A THREE MONTHS' TOUR IN JAPAN

Aroused by an Earthquake—The Terrible Typhoon—The Devastating Floods—Prevalence of Idolatry—Religious Meetings—Social Spectacles

A YOUNG NURSE

THERE are some things, like some people, which one does not care to know too intimately. Earthquakes belong to this class. They are so numerous in this land that we cannot easily avoid them. Japan has about five hundred shakes a year, and some of them are of a violent nature. Two out of the many experienced by ourselves since we have been in Japan were rather disturbing to our repose. To feel a house swaying around and over one; to hear timbers creaking, walls cracking and foundations trembling, is not soothing to one's nerves. An earthquake gives no notice of approach, nor does it outline its plan of action. So, when rocked by the great convulsion, we put up a prayer for protection, as there was no terra firma whereunto we might flee.

It was our lot, also, to experience the terrors of an eastern typhoon. From evening till early morning it swept over land and sea, but from midnight for four hours it roared with awful power, and rocked with terrible violence the large school-building where we lodged that night. It was a strange, weird attack upon the earth, as if maddened demons flung themselves among the life of the world in order to extinguish it forever. Next morning, were it not for the debris of torn shrubbery, broken trees and dismantled houses, it would seem to have been a frightful dream. Nature appeared in her calmest mood, and peace brooded over all. The sky wore its garb of oriental blue, and the sun shone with resplendent power. While in the midst of danger during the fiercest hour of the hurricane, we were kept from fear by the fact that our Father holdeth the wind in his fists. We may, also, note the visitation of floods, which delayed trains, ruined rice-fields, swept through villages and caused great disaster and loss of life. It was saddening to look upon the ripening fields robbed of the hoped-for harvest. Such is the flowery kingdom in her angry moods! The forces of nature play havoc upon her surface. Her smiling countenance is often seamed and grimed by the onslaught of earthquake and flood, of typhoon and tidal wave.

After three months of travel in this interesting country, conducting over one hundred and twenty meetings in ninety days, and closely investigating the spiritual condition of the land and people, I am convinced that idolatry is by no means in its decadence. Observant missionaries, whose fields lie beyond the port cities, give proof that heathenism, in its degrading influence, holds sway over millions of her people. I have been an eye-witness of idolatrous scenes, where civilized and educated people bowed the knee to their Baal. As for the common folk, their attendance at temple and shrine is by no means lessened. Education has failed to lift the Japanese out of the horrible pit. The morals of Japan are on a par with those of other heathen nations. Public decency is better observed, but in this respect the Christian standard is by no means reached. Until the nation builds on a Christian foundation, Christian morality will be unknown. A righteous character is not developed by legal enactments.

The philosophy of comparative religions has too much occupied the minds, and permeated the teaching of Japanese preachers. They preach the ethics of Christianity; its attractiveness and its ennobling influence, and thus they win some to accept it as a religion. But the deplorable lack is in not preaching Christ as Saviour and Lord—Christ as Light and Life. There are grand exceptions, indeed, on the part of those who have come under the training of missionaries—men who have known the power of the Spirit of Life in themselves. But too many show by their actions that the religion of Christ has no hold on their lives. The conduct of the trustees of the Doshisha University is a case in point. American Christians contributed the money with which the university was founded, on the distinct understanding that it was to be a Christian institution; but the Japanese trustees have dropped the distinctively Christian teaching, yet continue to hold the property. There are abundant proofs of the existence of a recessional wave having carried preachers back to agnosticism and materialistic unfaith. This is invariably the trend of intellectual Christianity, when Christ himself, its light and power and glory, is relegated to the background. There are missionaries who have wept bitter tears as they have seen the preachers for whom they have hoped and prayed, and from whose work they looked for a great harvest, sowing tares instead of wheat. But these sad-hearted missionaries are still praying, and their tearful pleadings will yet win, and we shall yet see Japan turning to Christ, who is able to save them from error and sin.

PRIEST AND ASSISTANT

CANDY-MAKING IN JAPAN

JAPANESE COUNTRY GIRLS

In the schools we have met with bright specimens of heart-work resulting from the labors of Christian women. Girls and boys won to Jesus. Our hearts have been deeply touched to hear them sing our songs of redemption. Nor is the evangelism of the Bible women to be forgotten. Trained native workers go from house to house preaching the things of the Kingdom. Frequently also from open shops hired for the occasion, they voice out the message of God's love to attentive audiences who stand on the street. A very hopeful aspect of missionary work is the readiness of all classes to receive tracts and Scripture portions. At railway stations, in the cars, and on the highways none refused them.

The religious condition of Japan so absorbs one's attention that I have left myself little space to speak of the strange scenes which meet the traveler at every turn. Everything in the life of this wonderful people is novel and unfamiliar to the American visitor. One of the most singular customs that impresses a newcomer is the way the Japanese confide the infants to the care of the older children. As soon as she can walk, the Japanese girl has her doll tied to her back and she gets the habit of carrying it steadily and carefully, so that when she grows bigger the doll is displaced for the baby brother who seems quite happy and contented on his sister's back. The dress, too, of both men and women is so strange to us. Yet it is graceful, and the Japanese girls certainly make picturesque figures as they trip lightly to and fro. The common habit of eating candy, in which every one seems to indulge, makes the industry of candy-making an important one. The accompanying photograph will show you how it is carried on here. I also send you a photograph of a priest and his assistant, specimens of a very numerous class who seem to be well supported by the offerings of the people though one would think that their incomes must have suffered by the prevalent infidelity and by such progress as Christianity has made among the people.

GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

The Bible Confirmed

How much recent discoveries have done to confirm the historical statements of the Bible is shown by Prof. Sayce in a recently-published work. He points out that the cuneiform tablets, now being deciphered, furnish important confirmation in various ways of Biblical narratives which have been disputed. As these tablets were contemporaneous records, unearthed in recent years, after being hidden for many centuries, their coming to light at the present time when the assaults on the Bible are more fierce than ever, is very significant.

One important fact proved by the tablets is that under the Fourteenth dynasty of Egyptian kings, the land was in the possession of private owners, many of whom held large estates. But when the Hyskos dynasty, which succeeded, was driven out, all these private land owners had disappeared, and the soil at that time belonged to the Pharaohs exclusively. The tablets, it is true, do not explain how this great change of ownership was brought about, but when we turn to the Bible we read (Genesis 47: 20): "And Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field; because the famine prevailed over them; so the land became Pharaoh's."

Again, we are told in the Books of the Chronicles that Manasseh of Judah rebelled against his Assyrian master, and was in consequence carried in chains to Babylon, where he was pardoned and restored to his ancestral throne. This story seemed at first sight of doubtful authenticity. It is not even alluded to in the Books of the Kings; besides, Nineveh and not Babylon was the capital of the Assyrian empire, and the Assyrian monarchs were not in the habit of forgiving their revolted vassals, much less of sending them back to their own kingdoms. And yet the cuneiform inscriptions have smoothed away all these objections. Esar-haddon mentions Manasseh among the subject princes of the West. Although nothing is said of the pardon of Manasseh, other instances are given of a rebellious prince being reinstated in his former power. Thus Assur-bani-pal forgave the Egyptian prince Sais, when, like Manasseh, he had been sent in chains to Assyria after an unsuccessful rebellion, and restored him to his old principality. What was done by Assur-bani-pal might well have been done by the more merciful Esar-haddon, who showed himself throughout his reign anxious to conciliate the conquered populations.

HAILING THE NEW YEAR

A Religious and Social Celebration from the Most Ancient Times

FROM the very dawn of history, the beginning of the new year has been the occasion of both solemn and festive celebration. In ancient Rome—from the time of Julian, at least—the opening day of the new calendar was observed as a public holiday. All disputes and litigations were postponed, sacrifices were offered to the gods, and the streets were crowded with white-robed processions, while the populace devoted the day to the exchange of visits of friendly greeting, and the sending of gifts, and the night to the feast and the masquerade. In the early Christian days, the disciples of the faith held aloof from such celebrations as far as they were of a heathen character or tended to social indulgence, and in this attitude they were strengthened by repeated admonitions from such distinguished leaders as Tertullian, Chrysostom, Augustine, and others, who publicly denounced the orgies of "the so-called Calends, the Vota and Brumalia," and advised that the day be passed in quiet meditation, the reading of the Scriptures, and acts of charity and beneficence. Ultimately the observance of the day acquired a sacred character, and this was continued for many centuries.

In Palestine, the New Year "Feast of Trumpets" was one of the principal holy days among the Jews, and as such it is still celebrated by the orthodox sons and daughters of Israel. The blowing of the trumpet is a call to the faithful to enter upon the work of sanctification and of reconciliation with God. On this day all labor was suspended and a three-fold sacrifice was offered. After the religious ceremonies, the people feasted in their homes, returning to the Temple later to witness the offering of the evening sacrifice, and to see the lighting of the candle-stick, when the greetings of the day were exchanged in such cordial phrases, as: "May you be written down for a happy new year," or, "May the Creator decree for you a happy new year," the response being: "And you likewise."

Among the Egyptians, Arabians, Persians, Hindus, Mexicans, Chinese, and Mohammedans, the celebration of the day, either by religious observance or social rejoicing, is of the most ancient origin. The Hindus call the first day of the year Prajapatya ("the day of the lord of creation"), and make sacrifice to Ganesa, the god of wisdom. The social observance seems to have been universal almost since time began. In some of the countries of Northern Europe, as in our own land, the year is ushered in with the ringing of bells and demonstrations of joyful welcome. In others, an old custom of paying "New Year's visits" has held sway for many generations. The visitors make haste to be the "first-foot" across the threshold, and usually carry some food or fruit in their hands to present, with their wishes for happiness and prosperity. In the United States, the paying of formal "New Year's calls," which has prevailed from colonial days, is gradually dying out. It was a custom which led to much dissipation, and, fortunately for the welfare of society, the social observance is now very generally restricted to an exchange of cards and good wishes.

"A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY"

A New and Charming Serial Story, Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald"

BY EDITH FERGUSON BLACK

SUMMARY OF THE STORY

in Barbadoes, Lenox Hildreth, a New England gentleman of learning, culture and wealth, was living with his only daughter, Evadne, a beautiful girl, who, at the opening of the story is sixteen years of age. Mr. Hildreth, though charitable and kind, was an infidel, but in his later years turned in faith and love to Christ. He intended telling his daughter of the change, but a sudden seizure of illness found him with the disclosure not made. With his dying breath he enjoined her to make it the business of her life to seek Christ. The girl, whom he had reared a pagan, could not understand his injunction. After his death, she removes to the home of her uncle, Judge Hildreth, at Marlborough, in New England, to whom, as his only brother, Lenox Hildreth confided her and her large fortune. On her way, intent on obeying her father, she asks a fellow-passenger, a bishop's wife, how she can find Christ; but the lady thinks her irreverent, and does not satisfy her. Arriving at Marlborough, she receives a formal welcome from her uncle's wife and daughters. On a farm in the neighborhood of Marlborough, John Randolph, a young man, is trying to shape his life on the principles of Christ's teaching.

CHAPTER V

In Christ's Service

"DON, Don me's tum'in," and a little child with sunny curls and laughing eyes ran past the great barns of Hollywood.

John Randolph was swinging along the green road with a bridle over his arm, whistling softly. He turned as the childish voice was borne to him on the breeze.

"All right, Nansie. Wait for me at the gate." Then he sprang over the fence and crossed the field to where a group of horses were feeding.

The child climbed up on the gate beside a saddle, which John had placed there, and waited patiently.

He soon came back leading a fine bay horse, and began to adjust the saddle.

"Now, Nan, I'll give you a ride to the house. Can't go any further to-day, for I have to cross the river."

The child shook her head confidently. "Me'll go, too, Don."

"I'm afraid not, Nan. The river is so deep, we'll have to swim for it. That is why I chose Neptune, you see."

"Me's not 'fraid with you, Don."

"Better wait, Baby, till the river is low. Well, come along, then," as the wily schemer drew down her pretty lips into the aggrieved curve, which always conquered his big, soft heart. She clapped her hands with glee, as he lifted her in front of him and started Neptune into a brisk trot, and made a bridle for herself out of the horse's silky mane.

"Gee-gee Nepshun. Nan loves you dear."

When they reached the fording place John's face grew grave. The river had risen during the night, and was rushing along with turbulent strength. There was no house within five miles. His business was imperative. He dared not leave the child until he came back. Crouching upon the saddle, he clasped one arm about her, while he twisted his other hand firmly in and out of the horse's mane.

"Are you afraid, Nansie?"

She twined her arms more tightly about his neck until the sunny curls brushed his cheek.

"Me'll go any where with you, Don."

Just as the gallant horse reached the opposite bank, Reginald galloped down to the ford on his way home for Sunday.

As he recognized John and his little sister, he called out: "Upon my word, John, you're a perfect slave to that youngster! What mad thing will you be doing next, I wonder?"

"The next thing will be to go back again," said John with a smile, while Nan clung fast to his neck and peeped shyly through her curls at her brother.

"Where are you off to?"

"Hendersons."

Reginald turned his horse's head.

"I might as well go along. A man's a fool to ride alone when he can have company."

John gave him a swift, comprehensive glance.

"How are things going, Rege? You're not looking very fit."

Reginald yawned and drew his hand across his heavy eyes.

"Oh, all right. Oyster suppers and that sort of thing are apt to make a fellow drowsy."

"Don't go too fast, Rege."

"Why not?" said Reginald carelessly. "It suits the Governor, and that book you're so fond of says children should obey their parents."

* * *

"I declare, John, you're a regular algebraic puzzle," he exclaimed later in the day, as he stood beside John in the carpenter's shop watching the curling strips of wood which his plane was tossing off with sweeping strokes. "You put all there is of you into everything you do. You take as much pains over a plough handle as you would over a buggy."

"Why not? God takes as much pains with a humming bird as an elephant. Mere size doesn't count."

"Nan loves you Reggie" and a tiny hand was slipped shyly into her brother's.

"All right Magpie," he said carelessly, "but you had better run home now to mother. Your chatter makes my head ache."

The laughing lips quivered and the child turned away from him to John, and hid her face against his knee. He lifted her up on the work-bench beside him and gave her a handful of shavings to play with.

"I don't see how you accomplish anything with that child everlastingly under your feet" Reginald continued, "yet you do two men's work and seem to love it in the bargain. I'm sure if I had to cooper up all the things on the farm as you do, I should loathe the very sight of tools."

"I do love it, Rege." Jesus Christ was a carpenter you know. I get very near to him out here."

"Jesus Christ!" echoed Reginald with a puzzled stare. "What is coming to you John?"

"It has come, Rege," John said with a great light in his face. "I have found my Master."

"Upon my word, John, you are the queerest fellow! What next, I wonder?"

"The next thing, Rege," and John laid his hand affectionately upon his friend's shoulder, "is for you to find him, too."

"So, you're going to turn preacher, John? You'll find me a hard subject. A short life and a merry one is what I am going in for. I've no turn for Christianity."

"It pays, Rege."

"Don't believe it. How can life be worth living when you're drivelling psalm tunes all day long?"

John laughed, and there was a new note of gladness in his voice which Reginald was quick to notice.

"I haven't begun to drivel yet, Rege, and life counts for a good deal more when a man has an object than when he is living just to please himself."

"And who should a man please but himself I should like to know?"

"Jesus Christ."

* * *

"Upon my word," said Reginald, some weeks later, as he came upon John sitting astride a cobbler's bench, busily mending a pair of shoes, while Nan looked on admiringly. "Do you learn a new trade every month?"

John laughed quietly.

"I took up this one because there are so many repairs needed on the harness, and your father thinks all talent should be utilized."

There was a quizzical look about his mouth as he spoke. Reginald caught the look and answered hotly:

"The Governor ought to be ashamed of himself. Why don't you strike, John?"

"Why should I? Knowledge is power, Rege."

"Knowledge of shoemaking!" said Reginald, contemptuously. "It won't add to your strength much, John."

"Never can tell," said John, sententiously. "You remember that lame fellow saved a battle for us by knowing how to shoe the General's horse."

"Next thing you'll be going in for a blacksmith's diploma!"

"I'm thinking of it," said John, coolly. "That fellow at the Forks has no more sense than a hen. He pared so much off Neptune's hoof that he has been going lame ever since. I had to take him this morning and have the shoes removed."

"I wish you'd do some shirking, John, like the rest of us."

"Jesus Christ never shirked, Rege."

"Pshaw! You're so ridiculous!" and Reginald walked discontentedly away.

Much as John Randolph liked his employer's son, there were some traits in him which were hard to bear, and that were developing rapidly. One of them was an arrogance that rankled sorely in the self-respecting young man's mind.

"Here John, John, I say," Reginald called, as he came out of the house one morning and saw John at his work. "Go catch and saddle Sultan for me. You're so fond of work you might as well have two masters. Be quick now, for I'm in the mischief of a hurry."

John's face flushed. This boy was younger than himself, and their fathers had been equals and friends.

"Do you hear what I say, John?" demanded Reginald. "You're only here as a servant any way, and as I'll be master some day, you might as well learn to obey me now."

John's brow cleared, while the words echoed in his heart with a glad refrain, "A servant of Jesus Christ," and "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle, patient with all men." After all, life was a matter between himself and the Lord Jesus. Why need Reginald's taunts affect him now?

"All right," he said quietly, and started for the field.

"I declare," muttered Reginald, as he watched the tall, lithe form vault over the gate and cross the field with springing step, "You might as well try of late to make that fellow mad as to storm Gibraltar. What has come to him?"

"Here you are, Sir Reginald," said John good humoredly, as he led the freshly groomed horse to the riding-block.

Reginald's voice choked.

"Shake hands, John," he said huskily. "I am a brute! There must be something in this new fad of yours after all. If you had spoken to me as I did to you just now, I should have knocked you down!"

He rode on for a mile or two in moody silence, then he gave his shoulders an impatient shrug.

"I'd like to know what it is about John Randolph that makes me feel so small! I have good times, and he is always on the grind; I have all the money I want to spend, and he has nothing but the pittance the Governor gives him; and yet he is three times the better fellow of the two.

A BEAUTIFUL POSSIBILITY

I envy him his manliness and go. He comes to everything as fresh as a two-year-old, and he works every thing for all there is in it. To see him climbing that hill yesterday with the youngster on his shoulder actually made me feel as if climbing hills was the jolliest thing in life. And it's so with everything he does. Confound it! I don't see why I can't get the same comfort out of things. I don't see where the fellow gets his vim. If I worked as hard as he does, I'd be ready to tumble into bed instead of pegging away at Latin and mathematics. I'll have to put on a spurt in self-defence or he'll be tripping me up with his questions. He's got the longest head of anyone I know. The idea of the Governor daring to set such a fellow as that to cobble shoes!"

"It's queer about the Governor!" he continued after a pause. "He's always ready to shell out when I ask him for money, but he keeps poor John with his nose to the grindstone all the year round. I suppose he expects me to pay him in glory. He's set his heart on my being a judge. Judge Hawthorne of Hollywood. Sounds euphonious, and I verily believe the old gentleman has begun to roll it like a sweet morsel under his tongue. Can't say I have a special aptitude for the profession, and certainly the brains are not in evidence, but I suppose the Governor thinks money will take their place. He has found it take the place of most things. Sultan, old boy, we seem down on our luck this morning. We had better take a speeder to raise our spirits. It is hardly the thing for Judge Hawthorne of Hollywood to envy John Randolph his humdrum life of mending rakes and shoes," and he urged his horse into a mad gallop.

"I believe I'd like to be poor and work, John!" he exclaimed one day. "It gets tiresome having everything laid ready to your hand with nothing to do but take it. Life must be full of snap when you have to dash your will up against Dame Fortune and wrest what you want out of her miserly clutches."

"Yes," said John simply, "Jesus Christ was poor."

"Look here, John, if you don't stop that nonsense, people will be dubbing you a crank."

"I am ready!" he cried, and there was a strange exulting ring in his voice. "They called Him mad, you know."

A Tibetan Holiday

Miss Annie R. Taylor, the missionary and explorer, whose travels in the almost unknown lands of Tibet have attracted the attention of the scientific and religious world, in her little book, Pioneering in Tibet, gives this entertaining account of a holiday celebration there:

"We had over two hundred Tibetans and Chinese to tea, cake, bread and jam. No sooner were our guests seated on the floor of a shed lent us for the occasion, and I was standing up to give thanks, when the floor gave way, and we went down about three feet. Praise the Lord no one was hurt, and only a few frightened. Then part of our guests had tea in another shed, and part in the open air—which we did not find too cold, as we are used to the frost. After tea the tree was lighted, and owing to the kindness of friends in England we were able to give gifts to all who came. Some warm woollen cuffs were much appreciated, but the dolls were the most sought after. All wanted them, the chiefs and men and boys as well as the women and girls. We gave one each to the chiefs present, and it was most amusing to see them nursing their coveted gift as they took possession of it. Having only a few dolls, it was difficult to decide who were to get them. After the tree we had the lantern. One of the lamas present who stood just behind me as I showed it, was much interested in the picture of 'Christ on the Cross,' and asked me if he was not a great sinner, and listened with wonder as I told them that Jesus, God's son, who had no sin, took the sinner's place and bore the punishment due to our sins.

"In conclusion we sang 'Jesus loves me' in Tibetan, which we have printed on a slide. We rejoiced that some of the Tibetans should have a gift on the anniversary of the birth of our Lord; but oh, how we long for them to know Jesus as their Saviour, and thus receive the gift of eternal life! Some of our guests came from the villages lower down the valley, Rinchingong, Galling, Chumbi Gallingka, and Pepetang. A few came from the black tents on the mountain side. The lamas were from the monasteries near by. Many of the women belong to Lhassa, their husbands being Chinese, and the Tibetan soldiers here now are from Shigatze. I think the tree and lantern were new to all except those present last year, and one the year before at Gnatong."

THE LIFE VOYAGE

AS DOWN the stream of time we sail
Together, young and old;
We share alike, the summer's heat.
Alike, the winter's cold.

Trusting our lives with him who holds
The waters in his hand;
We need not fear, though tempests rage,
We'll reach the "Promised Land."

We know full well our Captain's worth,
His skill our bark to guide;
Each day his care perfects our trust,
As down the stream we glide.

No storm so rough, no wind so fierce,
That he cannot control;
The Lord our Captain, Heaven our port,
What though the surges roll?

We're sure to reach the "Shining Shore,"
The heights of Heaven to climb;
Before us—blest Eternity.
Behind—the stream of time.

New Haven, Ct. MRS. N. W. HINE.

An Unfinished Sentence

In a biography of the late Dr. R. W. Dale, recently published, a significant fact is reported. Dr. Dale, as his many admirers in this country know, was one of the foremost theologians that our generation has seen, but his preaching was never confined to doctrine. He insisted over and over that although salvation was of grace through faith, the supreme test was conduct. He always carefully prepared his sermons, writing them out to the last word and laboriously amending them before taking them into the pulpit. When stricken down with his last illness he was at work on a sermon. After his death, his son found the manuscript on his desk. The last words traced by the hand then still in death were: "The settled purpose to do the will of God always in all things, at all costs, and by the power of the great hope—the full assurance that after our mortal years are spent, there is a larger, fuller, richer life in." We can guess what the next word would have been. The great preacher did not live to write it, but experienced it.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for it.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use after each meal a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthly appetite and thorongh digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but today I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I cannot find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

THE CLEANSING OF SIMON.*

HE scanned the approaching figures with imploring eyes. He was looking for the Messiah—some one in kingly garments, whose jewelled sceptre's lightest touch would lay upon him the royal accolade of health.

These were evidently not the ones he was waiting for. They were only simple wayfarers: most of them like Galileans.

He was about to rise up with his old warning cry of unclean, when he caught sight of Joel. But where was the princely Redeemer of prophecy?

Nearer and nearer they came, till he could look full in their faces. No need now to ask on which one he should call for help; indeed, he seemed to see but one face, it was so full of loving pity.

"O thou Messiah of Israel!" he prayed. "Thou didst call my friend Lazarus from the dead. O pass me not by! Call me from this living death! Make me clean!"

The eyes that looked down into his seemed to search his soul. "Believest thou that I can do this?"

The pleading faith in Simon's eyes could not be refused. "Yea, Lord," he cried. "Thou hast but to speak the word!"

He waited, trembling, for the answer that meant life or death to him.

"I will. Be thou clean!" He put out his hand to raise the kneeling man to his feet. "Go and show thyself to the priests," he added.

The party passed on, and Simon stood looking at them. Was it the Christ who had passed by? Where were his dyed garments from Bozrah? The prophet foretold him as glorious in apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength. No sceptre of divine power had touched him; it was only the clasp of a warm human hand he had felt. He looked down at himself. Still a leper! His faith wavered; but he remembered he had not obeyed the command to show himself to the priests. Immediately he started across the fields on a run, towards the road leading into Jerusalem.

Far down the highway Joel heard a mighty shout; he turned and looked back. There on the brow of a hill, sharply outlined against the sky, stood Simon. His arms were lifted high up towards heaven; for as he ran, in obedience to the command, the leprosy had gone from him. He was pouring out a flood of praise and thanksgiving.

Esther shaded her eyes with her hand, and looked again. But while her gaze searched the distant road, some one was passing just below, under the avenue of leafy trees, with quick, impatient tread; some one paused at the vine-covered door; some one was leaping up the stairs three steps at a time; some one was coming towards her with outstretched arms, crying, "Esther, little Esther, O my wife! My God-given one!"

For the first time in seven years, she turned to find herself in her husband's arms. Strong and well, with the old light in his eyes, the old thrill in his voice, the glow of perfect health tingling through all his veins, he could only whisper tremulously, as he held her close, "Praise God! Praise God!"

No wonder he seemed like a stranger to Joseph. But the clasp of the strong arms, and the deep voice saying "my son," so tenderly, were inexpressibly dear to the little fellow kept so long from his birthright of a father's love.

He was the first to break the happy silence that fell upon them. "What a good man Rabbi Jesus must be, to go about making people glad like this all the time!"

"It is he who shall redeem Israel!" exclaimed Simon. "To God be the glory!"

A HEROIC DEED.†

SO little had the Tripolitans understood the American character up to this time, that they were wholly unprepared for any such desperate attempt as the present. The Americans, on the other hand, perfectly cool, and knowing exactly what to do, gave a mighty final pull on the hawser, that carried them alongside just as it was cut. Then the ketch was instantly secured, and Decatur, sword in hand, calling his men to follow, sprang into the frigate's main chains. The quarter-deck was quickly cleared, and from it the Americans charged forward in a compact body, while the terrified Tripolitans leaped by scores and hundreds into the sea, or fled to the deepest parts of the ship. The struggle was so quickly ended that in less than ten minutes after the first alarm the great ship was in undisputed possession of the Americans.

The prepared combustibles were rapidly passed up from the ketch, and the firing parties under their assigned leaders hastened to their appointed stations. Soon tongues of flame were leaping from ports and hatches in every direction, and Decatur ordered his men back to the ketch; remaining until he had seen every other safely from the frigate, he was forced to make a flying leap into the Mastico's main rigging. Now it only remained to make good their escape from the harbor. By this time the alarm had spread to all parts of the harbor and throughout the city. The frigate was a solid mass of flames that lighted miles of her surroundings, and in the very brightest of the glow lay the intrepid little ketch that had created all the turmoil. Her crew were pulling at their sweeps with desperate energy. The gunboats saw her and opened fire. Then the batteries began to thunder, and their screaming shot raised gleaming columns of water on all sides of the brave little craft. The excited gunners fired without aim, and the Mastico, sweeping steadily forward, at length passed out of range without injury. By this time the flames had climbed by shrouds and riggings to the very mast heads. Blazing tar and grease dropped into the water and spread over its surface until the flaming ship rode a sea of flame. From her open ports boomed the guns as one after another of her cannon became heated. The Tripolitan gunboats hastily withdrew beyond range of this weird bombardment.

Suddenly the climax of awful spendor was reached in a terrific explosion, that shook the startled city to its foundations. The burning frigate was rent into fragments, and lost to mortal sight forever in the appalling darkness that instantly succeeded the great blinding glare of light. The news of success had been proclaimed to the anxious watchers, by the fluttering flags of the approaching ships; and as they sailed proudly through the American fleet to where the stately Constitution awaited them, Commodore Preble ordered out his twelve-oared barge, and was pulled alongside the ketch, even before her anchor was dropped. Then on the very deck that had witnessed the glorious deed, and surrounded by the men who had performed it, he heard the marvelous tales. When it was finished, grasping Decatur's hand, he exclaimed:

"It is the most daring act of the age, and I thank God for giving to my country the men who could carry it to completion. By it, the name of Decatur has gained renown that will last as long as the English tongue is spoken. As for this brave little ship, she must also be remembered, but not under her present name; for hereafter she shall be called Intrepid."

Before returning to the flagship, the commodore shook hands with every officer on the Intrepid; and, with uncovered head, publicly thanked her crew for their gallantry and devoted patriotism.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

The Serving of Meals—Fastidious Mothers—A Secret Sin—About Long Engagements

SWEET and loving thoughts come flying to me in these days from a good many friends who are reading The Art of Home-Making. It is very gracious and kind in these appreciative, unseen friends to express their kind liking, and an author, dependent as she is on the responsiveness of the "gentle reader," is very much indebted to every one who takes this trouble in her behalf. I have been fancying how the homes look into which my book is going, and I am not surprised that in some of them there are problems which puzzle the home-maker, particularly when she is young and inexperienced. Catering for the tastes of a family for one thing is not easy. Take, for instance, a home where the heads of the household are situated as were the famous pair in Mother Goose:

Jacky Sprat could eat no fat,
His wife could eat no lean, and where the children care for neither lean nor fat, but have a distaste for meat, the task of the person who provides the meals, bristles with difficulties. For as a general thing, meals should be appetizing, well planned, nicely served, nicely set, and composed of attractive viands. A very simple dinner, beautifully garnished and daintily arranged, will tempt the palate, while one which is more elaborate may prove a failure because of inattention to details. To save trouble and ensure variety, many housekeepers make out a bill of fare for each week, so that from day to day the meals are different, yet the housekeeper need not spend too much time in their contrivance, after the first arrangement has been affected. To care well for the left-overs is another mark of good domestic management, for many nice dishes are compounded of odds and ends by women who have the rare gift of faculty.

* * *

DO NOT be too fastidious, dear housekeeper, about the litter and confusion made by the children. If Sallie and Ned like to scatter their toys about, or have a good many play-things out at once, why let them have their way, insisting in the interest of good order that they shall pick up every block and doll and picture-book and put it away when the day is done and bed-time coming. Children may be gently trained into habits of neatness and order, and busy mothers may be relieved of much care if they will simply insist that small people shall wait on themselves. A place for everything and everything in its place, should be inscribed in every nursery and school-room.

* * *

IF A BOY loves tools, the home-loving mother who wants her lad to be home loving, too, will provide him with a kit, and suffer him to hammer and saw to his heart's content. She will let him collect beetles and butterflies, if he wishes. She will make home the most interesting place on earth for her growing boy.

* * *

J. C. S. Nothing can excuse your friend's course. She is apparently far from realizing the enormity of her sin, not only against her own people, but against society. Our Christian civilization takes for granted the purity of women, and the fidelity of wives. No Christian persisting in wilful sin, has a right to think that God pardons it, when on the next opportunity the sin is repeated. True repentance before God means the absolute renouncing of the sin. Confession to man, in a case like that of your friend, may not be a duty. She should ask herself whether a part of her merited punishment, her necessary discipline in this world, may not be to carry about with her, unshared and unsoftened the knowledge of her wretched past lapse into an evil course, whether she has a right to impose on an honest and innocent heart, which has trusted her, so deep a weight of sorrow and so natural a burden of doubt as would follow from her revelation. Let her lips be sealed, if there are kindred or children who would be concerned in any retribution which in this world might follow on her admission of past guilt.

Your idea that one may go on sinning wilfully against the plain laws of God and man, and be all right for this life and the next, if only upon each commission of sin, be it theft, or immorality, or any other thing, he or she kneels down and asks God's pardon, without any thought of giving up the sin, is wholly mistaken and indefensible. You and your friend, too, I fancy, need a good, strong, old-fashioned experience of conviction of sin, of self-loathing, and of turning to the Divine love for pity and pardon.

A. G. You are another instance of the injudiciousness of a long engagement. Had you married your fiance after a reasonably brief period of betrothal, you would have had many interests in common, and have grown by degrees more alike. Now, in the strain of an engagement, stretched over several years, you have drifted widely apart. Perhaps you have outgrown your lover. As he still cares for you, and is anticipating the day when you will be wholly his, the position is embarrassing. But as you are sure that you do not love him, and cannot love him, whatever parents and friends may desire, whatever pressure be brought to bear upon you, be firm, and sever the ties which bind you. Either write the whole truth to him plainly and decisively, or have a plain talk over the matter and regain your freedom, and give him his. Probably no other way of escape will present itself to you.

I think of nothing more dishonorable and more perilous than to marry a man you do not love. Esteem is not enough. Only true, full, tender, all-giving, all-self-denying love can build a foundation strong enough to uphold the fabric of matrimony. To change the figure, a man and a woman going to the altar without love in their hearts, are like that unfortunate captain of the Portland who put to sea, against warnings, when a wild north-east wind, accompanied by a blinding snow-storm was coming on. Spars, drift-wood and bits of floating wreckage to-day tell the tale of the going down of that fated ship.

ROSA W. R. A trained nurse must usually take a two years' course, but there is a shorter course, which is sometimes taken by those who simply wish to learn how to become helpful in the home and who do not go into the entire course required to obtain a diploma. The discipline in all training schools is severe, and you must be prepared to encounter a good deal of criticism from those above you. In order to be admitted to any training school, you must present a certificate from your pastor and your family physician. This is necessary to show that you are fitted spiritually, mentally and physically for the work you wish to undertake. Write for further information to the nearest hospital which has a training school.

Real merit is characteristic of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and is manifested every day in the remarkable cures this medicine accomplishes. It banishes rheumatism and cures catarrh.

ARE YOUR LUNGS WEAK?

To Every Sufferer from Catarrh, Lung Weakness or Consumption a Great Specialist Sends His New and Wonderful

TREATMENT FREE.

Nearly everybody you meet will regard it as a kind of insult to be asked if they have weak lungs. All seem to have a solid faith in the soundness of their own breathing machine. In cases of trouble they will admit there is a "heavy cold," "a touch of bronchitis," or even "a spell of Asthma," but as to weak or unsound lungs, never, NEVER. Even the poor consumptive who scarcely speaks without coughing, whose cheeks are wasted, hollow and bear the hectic flush of doom, will assure you with glistening eyes that his cold is on the mend and he will be all right when the weather changes.

This is a sad and pitiable form of delusion. It is not our business here to discuss the reason of it. Its prevalence, however, is beyond all doubt, and we feel that we are right in holding it responsible for a neglect of serious lung troubles in ourselves and others—that it is almost criminal.

How many a poor bread-earner there is who keeps on and on at his daily toil, taking cough medicines by fits and starts, but never quite curing his cough, while this same cough is but a symptom of decay that is eating into his lungs, and will in time cause their destruction. Thus does a wife observe her husband, or parents witness the struggle of a darling child, the youth or the maiden who was to rejoice their later years, while no steps are taken to battle with the evil until consumption has seized on one more victim. It is simply terrible to think how far we may be guilty by our indifference to the lung troubles of those near and dear to us. It is also a sad thought that we may hug a delusion as to our own health that we only get rid of when life itself must pay the forfeit.

Let us quit the distressing subject to come to what is practical. Nobody can afford to think lightly of lung troubles. Nobody can afford to be mistaken about their possible dangers. Nobody can afford to neglect them or "let them wear out," or "get better in the spring," or any other tomfoolery that leads only to wreck and ruin. Lung troubles don't move backward. Weak lungs don't grow strong by themselves—you must heal them and strengthen them and rid them of the very earliest germs of disease or you are simply committing a form of suicide. Either you must cure your lung troubles or THEY WILL KILL YOU.

That's the whole situation in a nutshell.

Never was there a cure for lung troubles equal to the newly discovered Dr. Slocum treatment. This forms a system of three remedies that are used simultaneously, and supplement each other's curative action. The treatment has immortalized Dr. Slocum's name. It cures weak lungs, bronchitis, asthma, coughs, consumption, catarrh and every other ailment of the pulmonary region. It destroys every germ that can affect the respiratory system, and even in advanced stages of lung trouble positively arrests the tubercular growth, while it also builds up the patient so that his system is enabled to throw off scrofula, rheumatism and other wasting diseases. Thousands of cured cases already prove these claims. Thousands of grateful people bless the discovery.

Free to... Christian Herald Readers.

The Dr. Slocum Treatment is Medicine Reduced to an Exact Science by the World's Most Famous Physician.

Dr. Slocum wants everybody to know the surprising merits of his system. He has arranged to give a free treatment (three bottles of the cure) to all sufferers who will apply to him by letter, mentioning The Christian Herald. Full instructions for use accompany each treatment. Your correspondence on the subject is strictly confidential. The three free bottles come to you in a plain package. Say if you have weak lungs you will gladly get a free treatment that is offered in such a generous spirit.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

DR. M. L. SMAIL, a physician practicing in Olcott, Vt., writes:

"Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful remedy for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months and I have never seen anything like it. I had one case who has had rheumatism all his life, and has taken everything, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, one bottle of which completely relieved him.

I had another patient, an old man who travels much on the road peddling, who has been lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness, and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."
